THE PIONEER.

Happy he whose inward ear
Angel comfortings can hear,
O'er the rabble's laughter;
And while hatred's fagots burn,
Glimpses through the smoke discern
Of the good hereafter.

Knowing this, that never yet
Share of truth was vainly set
In the world's wide fallow;
After hands shall sow the seed,
After hands, from hill and mead,
Reap the harvests yellow.

Thus, with somewhat of the seer
Must the moral pioneer
From the future borrow:
Clothe the waste with dreams of grain,
And on midnight's sky of rain
Paint the golden morrow.

—JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

It is our understanding that what the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST want is a first-class, up-to-date religious journal. Are we right in this? Let your answer be accompanied by subscriptions.

The Subscription Department is busy working, early and late, to keep up with the business that is pouring in. Our acknowledgments of favors shown and services rendered are therefore brief; not from lack of appreciation, but on account of lack of time. Keep it up, please.

That "no book is like the Bible" is impressed upon us again by the manner in which our offer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Genuine Oxford Self-pronouncing Worker's Bible for $2.50 is received. Despite the fact that we sent out a vast quantity of these Bibles last year, the demand continues unabated and our entire stock was exhausted by the Christmas rush. We are just in receipt of a fresh shipment and can fill orders as promptly as usual. Remember this is the Genuine Oxford, guaranteed to please. Please don't confound this offer with those where cheap Bibles are used. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one year and this superb Bible for only $2.50; good for new subscriptions and renewals alike. Your name will be put in gilt on the cover for twenty-five cents extra.

The Christian Publishing Company hereby announces a change in the subscription price of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Beginning immediately, the subscription price in clubs of twenty-five or more will be One Dollar a year, to new and old subscribers.

The twenty-five (or more) copies of the paper need not all be mailed to one address; they will be sent separately.

This offer takes the place of the one recently made, which was for clubs of fifty, sent in one bundle to one address.

This is a more liberal offer than the former, and is a much more liberal offer than any other ever made by one of our religious papers.

The subscription price to single subscribers will remain as at present, $1.50 a year.

VALUABLE BOOKS AT HALF PRICE.

In order that we may quickly dispose of a part of the contents of our store-rooms, and so make room for new stock, we are offering a number of books at phenomenally low prices—in some cases even less than half the original retail price. This sale will not continue long. If you desire any of the books thus offered, send your order at once. We prepay postage or express charges. The following are a few of the bargains we are offering:

PRISON LIFE IN DIXIE.

By REV. J. B. VAWTER. This is a wonderful book, which has had a large sale, running though several editions. The author tells, in graphic style, of his experience as a Union soldier and of his experiences in Andersonville, the Confederate military prison. This is what the Iowa State Register had to say of "Prison Life in Dixie:"

> No work has been issued from the press for years that surpasses this wonderful and truthful history in thrilling and romantic interest. The author was captured while under Sherman, consigned to Andersonville, suffered the untold horrors of the prison-pen, which he describes with a vivid and startling reality, and with a pathos and mingled humor that provokes tears and laughter at the same time.

ORIGINAL PRICE, $1.00. REDUCED PRICE, $. 50.

EDNA CARLISLE

By L. DOYLE. This is a story which we can recommend for the family library or the Sunday-school. It is pure in purpose, morally invigorating and elevating. It is a handsome, cloth-bound volume of 390 pages.

ORIGINAL PRICE, $1.50. REDUCED PRICE, $ .75.

BIOGRAPHIES OF PIONEER PREACHERS.

So long as they are kept in loving remembrance will our great plea be preserved in its purity. No Disciple of Christ should be ignorant of the lives of these men. No preacher's library should be without the volumes which tell of these pioneers and their work. We make a special offer of the following:

CURRENT EVENTS.

The situation in the Transvaal is unchanged, save for its gradually increasing seriousness for the British. White's position at Ladysmith is becoming daily more desperate, but it is claimed in the heliograph dispatches from that town that it can hold out for a month yet. It is reported that the Boers are building a branch railway around Ladysmith to give them a direct road from the Transvaal to Colenso. Col. Baden-Powell at Mafeking has offered to pardon the Boers who are besieging and bombarding him if they will stop and go home at once. Though without a large natural sense of humor, the Boers have no difficulty in seeing the joke in this. Gen. Buller has received orders to make no aggressive movement until the arrival of Gen. Roberts. Naturally, he is anxious to do something to retrieve his reputation, just as White was after his defeat before Ladysmith. Gen. Roberts cannot arrive at Cape Town before January 8, and it will be some days later before he can put an effective force in the field. The plan of campaign which it is understood that he will follow involves first a movement against the Orange Free State before attempting the relief of any of the beleaguered towns. If this means the fall of Mafeking and Kimberley, as it probably does, or even of Ladysmith, which is not improbable, it is believed that even this will be compensated for by a positive victory in an offensive campaign.

The real center of interest in South Africa has shifted temporarily to Delagoa Bay. This harbor, with its port, Lourenzo Marquez, affords by far the easiest approach to the heart of the Transvaal. Delagoa Bay is owned by Portugal. It has long been desired by Great Britain. Last week there came a report that Great Britain and Germany had reached an understanding by which they agree to take all of Portugal's colonial possessions off her hands for a consideration not specified. The division between the two powers gives to Great Britain Delagoa Bay and a strip three miles wide through the Portuguese territories north of the Zambesi for the Cairo-to-Cape railway. Germany is to get the territory in Central Africa and certain Asiatic possessions. But this is all mere rumor. Meanwhile, Delagoa Bay is a port of a neutral power, and, as such, has been a port of entry for provisions and munitions of war for the Boers. To stop this, Great Britain has begun to exercise the right of search. A quantity of American provisions bound for a neutral South African port in neutral vessels has been seized on the ground that it was contraband of war and intended for the Boers. Still more recently a British man-of-war has seized in Delagoa Bay a German vessel containing, as it is claimed, re-enforcements for the Boers. In both cases the facts are in dispute as to whether or not the seized vessels actually contained anything intended for the Boers. But the serious question involved is the principle of the right of search. May a neutral vessel in neutral water, bound from a neutral port to a neutral port, be searched by one of the combatants for contraband of war presumably intended for the other? The right to search neutral vessels bound for a hostile port has been well established for nearly a century, but the present case is somewhat different, and it is probable that the question thus raised by the seizure of the German vessel will not be settled without protracted argument.

When the Secretary of State demanded from the powers which have an interest in China that we be allowed freedom of trade in their several "spheres of influence," the United States Government formally placed itself on record as an active sympathizer with Great Britain in her contention for the commercial "open door" in China. It is recently reported that satisfactory replies and assurances have been received from representatives of the powers. But the question naturally arises, What return is the United States to make for this concession? All the other great commercial nations have spheres of influence in China, so that if Beresford's "open-door" plan were adopted, each would secure the general privilege of trading in that empire by the surrender of the special privilege of exclusive control in one section. But the United States, having no such special privilege to surrender, would have the most to gain and nothing to lose by the adoption of this policy. It is natural that the other nations should expect some commercial concession from us, and inevitably one thinks of the Philippines as the natural place for that concession. It is stated unofficially, though on eminent authority, that the President has it in mind to offer free trade in the Philippines to all nations which grant us a similar privilege in their spheres of influence in China. This report may be erroneous, for the President has been wisely reticent in laying down the principles of colonial government, but there is a suggestion here which some one is sure to make, whether the President makes it or not. But there are objections to the scheme, plausible and equitable as it seems. In the first place, we have in the Philippines, not a sphere of influence, but a possession. The treaty of peace made the islands an integral part of the territory of the United States, and so long as they remain so the constitution requires that duties and imposts there shall be uniform with those in other portions of the country. There are only three possible methods, so far as we can see, by which we can grant free trade in the Philippines: First, by transferring the sovereignty to some one else and retaining only a limited suzerainty, an arrangement which has never failed to be fruitful of disputes and more or less bloody quarrels; or, second, by an amendment to the constitution permitting unequal duties in different parts of our possessions; or, third, and still more improbable, by the adoption of free trade for the whole country.

Prominent among the present-day rumors of wars is the expected conflict between Russia and Japan. The bone of contention is Korea. Japan's millions must soon have more territory and Korea is her natural outlet. At the same time Russia covets the same country for commercial and military purposes. So far, Russia has gained the advantage in diplomacy, but Japan is strengthening herself for the conflict. The hope of Japan is her navy; that of Russia, her army and the great Siberian Railway, which is being pushed to completion as rapidly as possible. Their forces by land and sea at this time are remarkably well matched, for while Russia is stronger on land, Japan is superior on the sea. But it is the result of such a conflict which is particularly interesting. Arnold White, writing in Harper's Weekly, says: "If Japan were to win, the Anglo-Saxon race on both sides of the Atlantic would be face to face with a victorious Mongolian power, with boundless ambition, unchecked by religious or sentimental considerations. A victorious Japan, in addition to occupying Korea and Port Arthur, would covet the Philippines, Sumatra, Borneo, and even Australia. A victorious Japan would consummate an alliance with China, which in twenty years would have drilled an army of four millions of temperate men, careless of death, armed with modern weapons. The commercial supremacy of such a race would be assured in the Eastern seas." On the other hand, if Russia succeeds in the conflict it means, first, the control of the China Sea and therewith of the major part of the Chinese Empire. Peking would be in striking distance and the key of the great Oriental problem would pass from England to Russia, and Europe would be almost at the mercy of the Muscovite. The only prevention of the dominance of the seas in the Old World, Mr. White thinks, depends on an understanding between England and the United States, and this he thinks important, as there is but little choice between Muscovite or Mongolian rule. But these are questions of such far-reaching consequences and so involved that prediction as to results seems the merest speculation.

Most of the sensible people of earth have settled down to the conviction that the 19th century does not end until the end of the nineteen hundredth year, and that consequently we shall have to wait patiently until Jan. 1, 1901 for the dawn of the twentieth century. But Kaiser Wilhelm has declared by imperial authority that the new century began on this New Year's day and accordingly he gave it a midnight reception in a style of mediæval magnificence. Of course, no one can make any valid objection to William's welcoming any year he pleases with any sort of a blare of trumpets which his fertile invention and versatile genius can devise. But even the great Elizabeth on her death-bed could not gain "an inch of time," and the Kaiser ought not to expect to be able to turn the clock forward twelve whole months. But he does. The fact is, he probably first thought what a beautiful pageant he could plan for the celebration of the opening of a new century and as the thought grew upon him he was so captivated by the idea that he really couldn't wait. It may occur to William next year that the five hundredth anniversary of the battle of Waterloo would be a good thing to celebrate; if so he will as likely as not issue an edict that the battle of Waterloo was fought in 1401. The centennial of the battle of Sedan will offer another great opportunity which he can scarcely resist much longer. Likely enough it will be necessary to declare that the battle of the Sedan happened about 1804. We have a Julian calendar and a Gregorian calendar. It ought to be, and perhaps is, lese majesty to deny that the Kaiser has not as good a right to juggle the months and years as any Roman general or Roman pope. We'll not complain if he will only leave the law of gravitation and a few of the more important landmarks of history unchanged for a while yet.

A new political party has been organized by an assembly at Chicago. It calls itself the Christian Political Union. The following paragraph from its statement of principles indicates the spirit and purpose of the new party: "We believe the fullness of time to have arrived when the eternal principles of justice, mercy and love, as exemplified in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, should be embodied in the political economy of our nation and applied in concrete form to every function of our government, national, state, municipal and local. We believe that the most direct means of accomplishing this end is the formation of a political body of united Christian men and women, who shall use their elective franchise for the selection of able, worthy and conscientious public officials who will seek in their respective positions to perform the functions of government in the spirit of the man of Galilee." The spirit from which this new movement arises is worthy of all praise. Politics can be and ought to be conducted according to religious principles. But that is not saying that a national political party can be effectively constructed with that as its sole basis. The "eternal principles of justice, mercy and love" ought to be the presupposition of all political platforms, but they do not themselves constitute a platform. The members of the new party may be united on the eternal principles, but there is no guarantee that they will be capable of effective and united action in support of any single detail of national policy. There are good men on both sides of most questions, and to get all the good men into one party (even if that were possible) would not assist the settlement of the questions. But, whether effective or not, the spirit of the movement is right and we cannot but admire the faith and energy of the men who have gone into it. The first national assembly of the party will meet in Rock Island, Ill., May 1.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has just given a large sum to the Cooper Union. There are a great many men who do not approve of Mr. Carnegie. Some criticize the methods by which he has acquired the wealth which he so generously gives away, and some object to him as an anti-imperialist of the Hoar and Atkinson variety. These are both grave charges, into which we cannot enter now. But whatever his faults may be, Mr. Carnegie has some right ideas about the use of wealth. The following letter which he sent to the officials of the Cooper Union is a pretty good model to be followed by people who wish to donate large amounts to educational or charitable institutions:

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I have just learned that $300,000 would enable the trustees of Cooper Union to establish the last department of the great founder's scheme, namely, a day school, similar to your highly successful night school, which gives practical instruction calculated to become first-class workmen. Perhaps you will permit me to supply the sum needed. As a humble follower of Peter Cooper, among the first of our disciples of the true gospel of wealth, it would be a rare satisfaction indeed, for me to be allowed to feel that I had contributed the last stone, as it were, to the cairn of his great benefaction. If I am thought worthy of being granted this privilege I shall send you $300,000 of good railroad 5 per cent. mortgage bonds, and I thank you for the opportunity.

On January 2nd of the new year the earth dam of the canal connecting the Chicago and the Illinois Rivers was removed and the waters of Lake Michigan began to flow toward the Gulf of Mexico at the rate of 50,000 cubic feet per minute; but this flow is ultimately expected to reach 300,000 cubic feet per minute, and what is now a sanitary measure for Chicago, it is expected, will one day become a ship canal for commerce. The canal has cost Chicago $33,000,000, and the end is not yet. And as the cities below, especially St. Louis, are interested, from a sanitary point, the legality of this great achievement will have to be settled in the higher courts.

A FORWARD LOOK.

It is not given to mortals to lift the veil that conceals the future from their view. The events which are to make up the history of the coming years are hidden within a seven-sealed book, which only time can open. Nevertheless, we may judge of the future by the past. The conditions and causes which are operating in the present will continue to operate for some time, at least, in the future. Cataclysms in history are no more to be expected than cataclysms in nature. Astronomers calculate eclipses and transits on the unvarying continuity of natural law. We can only base our plans for future work on the perpetuity of those moral forces which have been shaping the course of human history from the dawn of civilization to the present time.

At the threshold of the new year, as we face its duties and responsibilities, we feel profoundly impressed with the inadequacy of any merely human wisdom to shape the policy of a religious journal like the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, so as to make it serve, most effectively, the highest interests of the kingdom of God. Increasing years brings an ever-increasing sense of unworthiness for so high and responsible a task. Were it not for the fact that we have the promise of divine guidance, and did not our past experience teach us that such guidance can be confidently relied upon, when it is earnestly sought, we should feel impelled to lay down the pen and unburden ourself of the weighty responsibility. But with the assurance that there is a hand at the helm stronger than ours, and "a divinity that shapes our ends, roughhew them as we will," we take up courage to begin the labors of another year. While it is not ours to know what particular events are to transpire, during the year upon which we have entered, we may with all confidence appeal to certain great regulative principles and guiding purposes, which will shape our policy and determine our course in whatever emergency may arise.

First and foremost, we shall seek to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a Christian paper. We believe in Christ, profoundly. We believe his spirit should pervade and dominate his church and all its agencies. We believe his mind is the supreme test of truth and duty. We accept Him and no other man as Master. We are ready to follow his leadership at whatever cost it may involve. We believe a religious paper should reflect his spirit, his teaching, his life, his breadth of sympathy, his hatred of sin, his tender compassion for the sinner, his supreme trust in and loyalty to the Father, his spiritual conception of worship, his sublime optimism in regard to the world and his purpose to bring it under his spiritual reign. Any teaching that undermines his authority or divinity shall have our uncompromising opposition. This we know is a high standard, but it shall be our effort to to hold this journal up to this ideal, as far as in us lies.

Believing in Christ, we believe in the Scriptures which reveal him. It follows, therefore, that in seeking to make this a Christian paper we shall seek to make it loyal to the Scriptures, as Christ was. While Christ's authority was above that of any of the Old Testament writers, he nevertheless appealed to the Scriptures as authoritative, and ever treated them with the greatest reverence. Every man and every religious journal that is truly Christian must do the same thing. But if the Scriptures possess this importance, it is the duty of the church to concentrate upon them the profoundest scholarship and the most consecrated learning, in order to the best possible understanding of their divine contents, and Christian scholars must be allowed freedom to carry on their investigations in the sole interests of truth. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will seek to encourage a more earnest and systematic study of the Word of God as the best possible preparation for the duties and perils of our time.

This paper, from the beginning of its history, has been identified with a religious movement pleading for a return to the Christianity of Christ. For a third of a century its editor has, with voice and pen, advocated the fundamental principles underlying this restoration movement. He never believed in them more sincerely than at the present time. Time has only served to vindicate the far-seeing wisdom, which was more than human, that guided the men who inaugurated the movement. Never was the conviction so general in the religious world as to-day that our divisions, our party spirit, our party shibboleths, have been a source of weakness to the church, a serious hindrance to the triumph of the kingdom of God. Never was the belief so prevalent that human creeds afford no remedy for these evils, and that the only hope for a reunion of Christendom is in the return to Christ and to personal allegiance to Him as the test of Christian character and fellowship. Never was the old-time confession of faith, made by Simon Peter and rescued by our fathers from the debris of theological speculation, and lifted up to its true place in the church, so honored and respected throughout Christendom as it is to-day. Never did the simple New Testament process of evangelization commend itself so universally to the thoughtful minds as at the present time. If any people on earth have reason to be grateful for the position which they have been permitted to occupy in the religious world, we certainly have.

We love this cause, which has hitherto enlisted all the energies of our mind and heart. We are not unmindful that certain extreme tendencies, on certain points, and certain superficialisms, have been developed which need correction. It would be very strange if this were not the case. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will show its love for and its devotion to the interests of this reformatory movement, not only by the advocacy of its principles, but by pointing out from time to time, in the spirit of the Master, those errors which have been engrafted upon it. This, in the future, as in the past, is sure to develop opposition in certain quarters; but all the more shall we feel it to be our duty to emphasize that spiritual conception of Christianity which has always been an offense to certain minds, but which alone has any hope of future triumph.

One of the supreme needs of the present time, as it seems to us, is a better illustration of Christianity in the lives of those who profess it. It is the life of Christ that is the light of men, and his disciples can only let their light shine as they possess Christ's life and live in harmony with Christ's teaching. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has a mission in this direction and will continue to emphasize the duty and privilege of Christians to seek and enjoy a deeper spiritual life—a life hid with Christ in God. This alone will prove an adequate remedy for many of the evils that afflict the church. This, too, is the logical result of our plea for a return to the purity and power of Christianity as taught by the Master Himself.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands for that larger view of the kingdom of God which regards it as having to do with all the manifold interests of human life. It regards nothing as "secular," in the old-time sense of the word, but everything as sacred that affects human welfare—business, politics or statecraft, social life and every phase of human activity that answers to a legitimate human need. It shall be our purpose to interpret the meaning and character of passing events and measures in the light of Christianity. A pioneer in this department of wider religious journalism, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will still aim to lead its competitors in its world-wide view of important events in current history.

These are only a few guiding principles which will determine the main policy of the paper in the future as in the past. But what it means to try to hold a religious journal up to such an ideal, few may realize, and none except those who have had the task imposed upon them. We shall need the patience and forbearance of our readers for many shortcomings, no doubt, and above all, we shall need their prayers that God's wisdom may direct and his blessings crown our efforts to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST what it aspires to be—a Christian paper, whose influence, wherever it goes, will stimulate and promote Christian growth, Christian thought, Christian activity, and the advancement of Christ's kingdom among men.

We are not the helpless children of fate. Some things, 'tis true, are as inevitable as the tides of the ocean, but after they have come and gone the freedom of the universe remains unbroken, unmarred. Neither is this a world of chance. If chance it would not be a world. Some things seem spontaneous, but the orderly methods of the universe are too prominent to admit of such a faith. Things "happen" because of human limitations.

HOUR OF PRAYER.

WALKING WITH GOD.

(Gen. 5:22, 24; Deut. 5:33; Rom. 6:1-4.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeti g Topic, Jan. 10.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Man is the child of God, made in His image, and his highest happiness and usefulness are realized by walking with Him.

To walk with God implies oneness or reconciliation with God. "For how can two walk together unless they are agreed?" It implies communion and fellowship with God. Walking with God means that one knows something of the will of God, and that to the extent of his knowledge of that will, he strives honestly to do it.

Two things at least, then, are necessary to walking with God: Faith, which recognizes the unseen and living God and receives the revelation of His will, and the spirit of obedience which leads to a compliance with that will. Away back in the days preceding the flood, "when darkness covered the land and gross darkness the people," there lived such a man in the person of Enoch. He believed in God and obeyed His will so far as he understood it. For three hundred years he walked with God, and "was not, for God took him." This was a long time to be faithful in the midst of the unfaithful, but his fidelity had its ample reward in the fact that God took him to Himself and into a closer and more intimate relation with Him, and caused his name to be recorded among earth's noblest heroes. What scoffing, what contradiction of sinners, what opposition in carrying forward his righteous plans, we can well imagine. But he endured all this "as seeing Him who is invisible."

Man's physical as well as spiritual well-being is conserved and promoted by his walking with God. This is the import of the passage cited above: "Ye shall walk in all the way which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with thee, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess" (Deut. 5:33). There is this harmony between man's material and spiritual nature, that when man is living in harmony with the higher law of his being, his material organism is receiving its best care. It is the evil lusts and unlawful desires of the flesh that are to be "crucified," and not the body, which is simply to be kept under.

Sin is the great disturbing element in human life. It is this that prevents men from walking with God. "What concord hath Christ with Belial?" What fellowship can there be between purity and impurity, between sin and righteousness? It is sin that has worked alienation between God and man and filled the earth with strife and death. Hence the question raised in the passage from Romans is a very important one: "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?" Note well the answer: "God forbid! We who died to sin, how shall we any longer live therein? Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death?"

It is impossible, therefore, to walk with God and continue in sin. We must either give up God or sin. To the extent that we "continue in sin" are we debarred from fellowship with God. But if we have really died to sin, if we have come to see sin in its true light and to look upon it, as God looks upon it, and to realize that it contains the seeds of death, then we shall hate sin as God hates it, and shall not desire to continue therein. This is the meaning of regeneration and spiritual renewal.

What a beautiful thought this is—walking with God! How sweet the communion of two congenial friends, as they walk and talk together! Think of the exalted honor of being on such terms with God as to walk and talk with Him, and hold sweet communion with Him! This is the sweetest and purest joy that earth can know. O that we might each of us so live during the present year that we could appropriate the sentiment of the hymn sung by the persecuted Huguenots in the dens and caves of France, in the sixteenth century, entitled "My Lord and I:"

I have a Friend so precious,
  So very dear to me!
He loves me with such tender love,
  He loves so faithfully.
I could not live apart from him,
  I love to feel him nigh,
And so we dwell together,
  My Lord and I.

Sometimes I'm faint and weary,
  He knows that I am weak,
And as he bids me lean on him,
  His help I'll gladly seek;
He leads me in the paths of light
  Beneath a sunny sky,
And so we dwell together,
  My Lord and I.

He knows how much I love him,
  He knows I love him well;
But with what love he loveth me,
  My tongue can never tell;
It is an everlasting love,
  In ever rich supply,
And so we love each other,
  My Lord and I.

I tell him all my sorrows,
  I tell him all my joys,
I tell him all that pleases me,
  I tell him what annoys;
He tells me what I ought to do,
  He tells me what to try,
And so we talk together,
  My Lord and I.

He knows how I am longing
  Some weary soul to win,
And so he bids me go and speak
  A loving word for him.
He bids me tell his wondrous love,
  And why he came to die,
And so we work together,
  My Lord and I.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast so made us that we cannot be satisfied without Thee. We rejoice in the privilege of walking with Thee, and holding communion with Thee. We mourn the sins that have separated us from Thee, and bless Thy name, that through Christ, Thou hast granted us forgiveness, and hast restored us unto fellowship with Thyself. Help us to avoid every appearance of evil, and to walk in all Thy way here that we may see Thy face in peace and dwell with Thee forever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

To increase your growth in grace and in the knowledge of the truth would be a good resolve for the year 1900.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

There is something attractive about a new book, a new suit of clothes, a new year. We can all remember, distinctly, when we were school children, how tired we would get of the old book, thumb-worn and soiled, torn and dilapidated, and how glad we were when we finished it and laid it aside and received a new book, with new lessons and new, clean pages. It is with feeling akin to this that we pass from the old year into the new. As we look back over the old year we discover many blots and stains, and we somehow feel that if we had a new, clean year, and could try it over again, we could do better. And so God gives us the new year that we may make a new effort to live in newness of life. We all especially remember the old copybook of our school days in which we made awkward and abortive efforts to follow the master's copy. O the miserable scrawls and blots! How tired of them we became, and how glad we were to get a new copybook and have another chance to try our hand in imitating the copy! Who of us does not feel, after a little retrospect, that we could improve on the year that is past? If there be one who does not so feel, he of all men deserves our pity most. When one loses heart and hope, or ceases to have any aspiration after a higher life than he has been living, life ceases to have much value. We are sure that our readers very generally if not universally feel that they can make the new year, 1900, an improvement over its predecessors. Shall we not try to do it?

This brings up the old question about resolutions. Is it right to make them; and if so, is it worth while to make them? But how can we help making them if we realize our mistakes and sins of the past and are truly penitent for them? What is repentance but a high resolve? No one ever makes an improvement in his life without the consent and co-operation of his will. It is the will that resolves and determines. The will is the strategic point in character. If this citadel be captured and held by the forces of righteousness the life is safe from the attacks of the enemy. But a resolution that does not link itself with omnipotence, through the medium of prayer, is not apt to be permanently effective. It is the human will reinforced by the divine will that makes a castle in which character is safe from all the fiery darts of the wicked one. It is the glory of human volition that it can thus ally itself with the almightiness of God and declare, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." We would say, therefore, Make your resolves for the new year, but let the first one be a resolution to trust in God for strength to carry out all your worthy desires. This will add new potency to your life, and new efficacy to your resolutions. All God's resources of grace and truth in Christ Jesus are accessible to him who would use them in the building of character in himself and others.

As we set our faces toward higher ideals at the beginning of another year, it will be wise for us to divide the year into at least three hundred and sixty-five parts, and seek for grace and strength each morning to live right one day. This makes it much easier than taking the whole year at one survey and seeking to fortify ourselves at one time for all its temptations, disappointments and trials. Many a man has freed himself from the dominion of evil by seeking the needed strength from God for one day at a time until his soul became confident in its own strength, and in the power of God to keep it. The Savior taught this lesson when He said "Sufficient for the day is its own evil," for the principle applies to our spiritual, as well as our material needs. It is a well-known fact that every temptation resisted makes us stronger to overcome the next, and every burden patiently borne makes us stronger to bear other burdens. Let us resolve to look after the days of this new year, and at its close we shall have occasion to rejoice over the progress we have made.

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun Sees at its close no worthy action done."

At this time of the year there are always more or less changes in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. There are some readers who, for one cause or another, drop from our list, and there are new ones coming in to take their places. We are always glad to greet the new; we are always sorry to part company with our old readers. We feel, concerning the latter, that we have something to say to them which they ought to hear, and if they have misunderstood us, they would learn to understand us better if they would stay with us longer. Some of those who have parted company with us of late have expressed their regrets at doing so, and their affection for the old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in a way that has quite touched our heart. These, we are sure, will come back again. They will miss the familiar face of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and its familiar departments, and sooner or later will come back to their first love. Let them know that they go from us with our blessimg, and with no ill-feeling whatever. To the new readers that are coming—greatly outnumbering, of course, those who are going out—we extend a hearty welcome. We hope you will like us as you come to know us better. To the great company of readers who belong to neither of the two classes above mentioned, but who have stood by us in sunshine and in storm so many years, until the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has become a part of the family and an indispensable aid in their religious life, we offer our hearfelt thanks for their steadfastness and fidelity. To all we extend hearty greetings and best wishes, and the hand of fraternal co-operation in the work of the Master. A happy and prosperous year to all!

We may not know what the present year shall bring forth, but on this we can depend, that God will not suffer a catastrophe that cannot in some way be turned to our good and to his glory. There is no peace like that which comes of a living trust in a loving Father.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS.

In the issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Dec. 21st, which is just to hand, under the heading, "The Advent," you have these words: "All rationalistic methods of dealing with Old Testament history, outside the limits of legitimate critical investigation, have their origin, as it seems to us, in the failure to accept, fully and unreservedly, the New Testament doctrine of the incarnation." I am puzzled somewhat to understand your meaning. Your words seem to imply that there are rationalistic methods of dealing with Old Testament history outside the limits of legitimate critical investigation;" and they as clearly imply that there are "rationalistic methods of dealing with Old Testament history inside the limits of legitimate critical investigation." Do I understand you to accept those inside and reject those outside? Or in other words, how can methods be rationalistic and still be inside the limits of legitimate criticism? Robert Stewart.

The language quoted from our recent editorial, taken outside of its connection, might possibly leave open the question as to whether there were "rationalistic methods of dealing with Old Testament history" inside "the limits of legitimate critical investigation." The connection, however, makes it suffiently clear, we think, that we simply meant to say that all rationalistic methods of dealing with Old Testament history are outside the limits of legitimate critical investigation, and that this last phrase was added to indicate that we did not wish to exclude "legitimate critical investigation." The presupposition against the supernatural which stumbles at the doctrine of the incarnation also stumbles at the supernatural element in Old Testament history, and our point was that if the truth of the incarnation be accepted, there need be no stumbling at the manifestation of the supernatural in the unfolding of God's redemptive purpose in Israel, as found in the Old Testament. It is needless to say that we do not accept the rationalistic method of interpretation, and do not believe it belongs to "legitimate criticism."

What is your opinion of the Legion of Honor Bible Training Lessons, published by W. B. Jacobs? Are they undenominational or not?

Laura Beecher.

Hill City, Kan.

We have not seen the series of lessons referred to, but judging from the source from which they come, we suppose their aim to be undenominational. Mr. Jacobs is a well-known Sunday-school worker in the field of Union Sunday-school work, and no doubt aims to make the lesson acceptable, as far as possible, to all religious bodies.

1. If we say we cannot become perfect, are we not admitting that Christ has commanded us to do that which is impossible?

2. If it is not possible to be entirely sanctified, both soul and body, in this life, why, then, did the Apostle Paul, in 1. Thess. 5:23, pray for an impossibility?

3. Does not the Word in 1. John 2:1 imply that we need not sin?

4. Can you give any good reason why it is any more impossible for a Christian of to-day to become perfect than it was for Noah, Job and David, or, in fact, even Jesus Christ himself?

C.

1. The term "perfect" is sometimes used relatively. Christ expects no one to be "perfect" at a single bound, but He placed a perfect ideal before his disciples, toward which they are to struggle.

2. It is possible for Christians to be wholly sanctified, or devoted to God in soul and body, in the sense intended by Paul, in the present life. This does not necessarily imply absolute sinlessness, but the setting apart to sacred uses of both soul and body, which is enjoined upon all Christians.

3. It implies the possibility of sin, even after conversion. We could hardly say that it implies the possibility of sinlessness.

4. A Christian of to-day who has not reached a higher degree of perfection and character than either Noah, Job or David, is not a very high type of Christian. These men were only "perfect" in a relative sense; that is, their hearts were loyal to God, though they often stumbled and fell through weakness of the flesh. As to Jesus Christ, He is the divine ideal to which our lives are to be conformed. It is God's predestined purpose to conform those who believe, to the image of His Son. This process begins here, but perhaps does not reach its culmination until in the life beyond.

What is meant by the "stick of Judah" and the "stick of Ephraim or Joseph?" (Ezek. 37: 15-20.) Does the first refer to the Bible and the second to a record? F. M. Sheldon.

Quimby, Ia.

The prophet Ezekiel was directed to get two sticks and write upon one of them "For Judah, and for the children of Israel, his companions," and upon the other, "For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim and for all the house of Israel, his companions." He was then told to join these two into one stick in his hand, and when the people should inquire what he meant by these his answer was to be, "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph which is in the hand of Ephraim and the tribes of Israel his companions, and I will put them with it, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick; and they shall be one in mine hand." In other words, this was a symbolic form of prophecy indicating God's purpose to unite these two nations into one nation. We see no reference here to "the Bible" or to any "record," but simply a prophecy of a time when Israel and Judah should be united once more under one ruler, and that in a higher and truer sense than they had ever been united before under the kingship of David or Solomon.

No book stimulates the mind so much as the Bible. At every reading new thoughts arise. It is an inexhaustible book of knowledge. Its intellectual span has never been measured; its depths have never been sounded; its heights have never been scaled. It is still at the front of all intellectuality and will so remain.

"Another Reader Has Been Making Money Easily."

I noticed in the Christian Standard that a reader had been very successful selling "Baird's Non-Alcoholic Flavoring Powders," and think my experience will be interesting. It is wonderful how much better these new Fruit Flavors are than the liquid extracts sold in stores, if you stop to think that the Fruit Flavors cost only half as much. You use them for Custards, Cakes, Candies, Ices, etc. We used them ourselves and liked them so well, that I wrote to W. H. Baird & Co., 50 Century Bldg., St. Louis, Mo., for Samples and tried selling them to my neighbors. I began only a short time ago, but the Powders are fast becoming celebrated around here and I have built up a good trade from regular customers, often makover $25.00 per week.

I never before knew of such an easy way of making money and would recommend any one having a little spare time to write to the above firm, as they will start you in business. MRS. M. F.

SOME LESSONS FROM OUR PAST.*

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE JUBILEE CONVENTION:—Nine decades ago, when the century, now hoary with age, was yet in the flush of youth, our fathers lifted up a banner of religious reform and called for a return to the Christianity which Christ taught, and to that unity among his disciples for which he prayed. Four decades later the leaders and representative men in this movement for restoration, gathered in this city to consider the question of organizing a missionary society through which the churches enlisted in the reformation might co-operate in spreading the gospel throughout the earth. Such an organization was then and here organized. After the lapse of fifty years we are gathered once more in this same historic city to celebrate the jubilee of our mother missionary society and the achievements of a half century of co-operative missionary activity. Among the other features of this celebration it has been thought wise and proper that we should sit for awhile at the feet of the Past—the brief but mighty past of our religious history—to enquire what lessons we may learn from it that will help us of to-day the better to accomplish the unfinished tasks that are before us. I beg your indulgence, therefore, while I seek to point out a few of those great truths which, as it seems to me, have been taught anew in our religious history.

IMMANENCE OF CHRIST IN HIS CHURCH.

The first great lesson which finds emphasis in the origin and history of this reformatory movement of the nineteenth century is the immanence of God in human history, and especially in the history of the church. Stated in terms of Christian faith, this divine immanence is but the fulfillment of Christ's promise to his disciples: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." In no other way can we account, intelligently, for those great religious movements in the history of the church which have resulted in its purification, in a measure at least, from existing corruptions, and have set it forward into new eras of conquest. On what other ground, save that of the presence of Jesus Christ in his church, can we account for those providential men who have been raised up in the great crises of history to deliver a fresh message of truth to the world and to make all the succeding ages their debtors? In what other way can we justify the claim that ours is a great providential movement, bearing the divine sanction and being the very offspring of the Spirit of God, moving on the minds and hearts of men, impelling them to noble thoughts and heroic deeds? On the hypothesis of an "absentee God," who does not concern himself directly with the ongoing of his church and kingdom, there is no basis, either in faith or philosophy, for such a claim, and consequently no stimulus for the sacrifices involved in inaugurating and carrying forward the work of religious reform.

Jesus Christ is the Builder of his own church, and through the centuries the great spiritual edifice is going up under his supervision. He it is who, through successive reformations, corrects those departures from his infinitely wise and perfect plans which have marred the unity and harmony of his spiritual building. In this truth alone have we a rational explanation of the marvelous growth in numbers and in power of those who have committed themselves to the advocacy of this reformation, and of the no less marvelous extension and influence of those truths and principles to which this movement has given emphasis. And this lesson of the personal Presence of the living Christ in his church furnishes, not only an explanation of the origin and progress of our religious movement in the past, but inspiration and hope as well, for its future growth and development. We are not left to the arm of flesh to protect us from defeat, nor to mere human wisdom to guide us safely through the perils that may beset us in the future. The same Lord over all, who inspired and guided our fathers in the beginning of this work and whose hand has been manifest in the various crises of our history, will still be with us in the years to come, as long as we stand for the defense and propagation of those truths which make for the unity, the purity and the triumph of his church.

CHRIST'S PRE-EMINENCE.

Closely associated with the lesson of Christ's immanence in history is that of his transcendence or pre-eminence in the church. The emphasis given by this reformation to the sole Lordship and supreme Leadership of Jesus Christ has been one of its most prophetic notes and has demonstrated once again the sufficiency of that truly apostolic creed which, when confessed by Simon Peter, was declared to be the foundation truth of the church by the Master Himself. No more important lesson, perhaps, has been taught in our religious history than the unifying and vitalizing power of this confession of faith. It is significant that no teacher or preacher in our ranks who has ever uttered a compromising word about Christ, who has failed to recognize in Him the fullness of the Godhead, who would pluck one star from his diadem of honor and authority, has ever come into prominence or maintained an abiding influence among us. Just in proportion as we have exalted Christ, not in word alone, but in actual practice, has the divine blessing rested upon us. "The men who have been in the fullest measure and the noblest manner under the prophetic mind of the Lord, the masters who have been conscious of their Master in heaven, and who have held the task at which they toiled to the judgment seat of Christ," says George A. Gordon, "have been the great leaders in Christian history. In so far as they have been subject to this supernal prophetic mind, they have been able to avert the possible disaster; they have been strong enough to realize the possible benefits to the new age of the new development of the eternal truth. . . . . We may assume it as an axiom, that every new movement in human thinking and in human affairs that escapes from the leadership of the Lord, will go to waste. It will prove a sort of Alcibiades. The vaster it is in promise the greater will be the wreck, if the control of the Supreme Mind in history is despised and rejected."

There is not on the earth to-day a single religious body which has proven unfaithful to this fundamental truth of the gospel and of history, that is grappling successfully with the problems of our time, and laboring effectively in the divine enterprise of lifting up degraded peoples and civilizations by the dynamic truths of the gospel. It only needs a truer and larger vision of Christ by the church, and obedience to such a vision, to heal its broken columns, reunite its alienated fragments, revitalize its lukewarm and lagging hosts, and send it forward on a splendid career of victory. Christ immanent in the church and transcendent over the church is the hope of a reunited and triumphant Christendom.

"THE PRESENT TRUTH."

The careful student of the history of this Reformation can hardly fail to learn an important lesson concerning the secret of success in any great religious movement. It is the adaptation of the ever-living truth to the current needs of the time. It is to recognize what is "the present truth" for the age and give that its due emphasis. To ascertain what any age needs, as determined by the mind of Christ, and to minister to that need, is to work with God and along the line of his infinite purpose. There is no success, true and abiding, that does not come from co-operation with God. Statisticians and students of current movements have raised the question without seeming to find a satisfactory answer as to what is the secret of the almost unparalleled growth of this religious movement of the present century. This secret is already manifest in the light of what has just been said. The men who, under God, molded the character of this reformatory movement, saw in the divided condition of the church, and in the prevalence of party spirit over the spirit of unity and brotherly love, a manifest departure from the mind of Christ and voiced His plea for unity among His followers. They saw certain hindrances in the form of creeds and practices which stood in the way of the realization of this unity, and they forthwith sought to move them out of the way. As faithful students of the New Testament, they recognized grave departures from the teaching of Christ and His apostles, and sought straightway to restore the simplicity of the gospel, so that men could understand it, receive it, obey it and rejoice in its blessings. In sounding the note of unity, in exalting Christ above the creeds and making Him the object of faith, and obedience to Him the test of fellowship, in discarding the ecclesiastical and theological jargon of confusing terms and returning to the simpler and purer speech of the New Testament, in emphasizing the sufficiency of the Word of God and the right and duty of every man to understand it and obey it, they were but answering the needs of the age; they were but voicing God's will to the people. This was "the present truth" which the times demanded. It was God's answer to the cry of the best minds and purest hearts of Christendom for a worthier conception of the gospel and a truer embodiment of the divine ideal of the church. No wonder it met with an answering response from the hearts of the people. A movement born thus in the fullness of time and adapting itself to the needs of the age, might be reasonably expected to succeed. The only marvel, as we stop to think of it, is that it has not succeeded more universally than it has. But the lesson to be drawn from the facts just stated is too obvious to escape attention, and is too important to be passed by without a word of emphasis. We are to keep in touch with the times in which we live. Our religious work must have reference to the religious needs of the men and women of our time. Our battles must be fought with the enemy which confronts us to-day. Our fathers served their generation, and we must serve ours. We are, of course, to hold on to all the vital truths to which they held, but must give them such proportion and emphasis as will adapt them to existing needs, and must add to them such other truths as may come into prominence by the changing circumstances and the ever-enlarging revelation of God. To fail at this point would not only be disloyalty to the fathers, but disloyalty to the leadership of Christ, who leads his true followers forward into new situations, new aspects of truth and new triumphs over the powers of darkness.

Those who count it heresy to go beyond the limits of the territory explored by the fathers have lost the spirit of reformation and have become such as need to be themselves reformed.

OUR ESCAPE FROM BONDAGE.

We were not long in learning that, though reformers, we must bear our part in the great enterprise of the world's evangelization. No religious body can long escape the blight of sectarian narrowness and Pharisaic legalism that contents itself with propagating its own peculiarities, while giving no emphasis to the common faith, and bearing no part in winning men from the power of Satan unto God. It was forty years from the Declaration and Address to the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society—the exact period of the time the Israelites wandered in the wilderness before entering upon the conquest of Canaan. This is not a long period in the history of a religious movement. We, too, had to escape from the bondage of our taskmasters—the creeds and traditions of the past—cross the Read Sea of persecution and oppositon, tarry at Sinai awhile for the law—a "thus saith the Lord" for methods and plans, as well as for faith and duty—engage in several theological conflicts with the Amalekites, the Amorites, the Midianites and other hostile tribes, before we were at last prepared to assert our freedom, cross the Jordan of missionary plans and enter into co-operative, organized effort for the conquest of the land which the Lord our God had given us. From thenceforward the current of our religious life flowed on in an ever-deepening and ever-widening channel.

LESSONS FROM OUR MISSIONARY WORK.

What lessons have our fifty years' experience in co-operative missionary work taught us?

1. It has taught us the value of organization. Individual zeal and devotion to the cause of Christ will not alone suffice for effective work in advancing the kingdom of God. In proportion as we have organized our forces, our work has grown more effective. Organization, however, must ever be regarded as means to the end, and not an end in itself, and should be in the simplest possible form to accomplish the purpose in view. What was known in our history as the "Louisville Plan" was admirable, no doubt, as a piece of missionary machinery, but it was entirely too complicated for the people for whom it was intended. For this reason it proved a failure. Simpler methods have proved far more successful, and it is probable that the process of simplification and unification needs to be carried forward to still greater perfection.

2. Fifty years of experience has taught us the inutility of wasting time in the discussion of scriptural plans for carrying on missionary work. This is bondage to the letter. Vastly more might have been accomplished than has been achieved during this half century if the time, talent, energy and space in our religious journals, which were devoted to the defense of this or that plan, had been used for the education of the churches as to the needs of the world and the obligation resting upon Christians to carry out Christ's last and greatest commission.

3. Our experience has taught us the vital connection between the spiritual life of the churches and the growth in mission work. Just as our churches have increased in faith, in piety and in Christian knowledge, they have increased their missionary offerings. The missionary spirit is only another name for the spirit of Christ. Artificial methods of securing missionary contributions must prove a failure. Nothing short of the building up of the churches in spirituality, and the development of a Christian conscience, can afford an adequate and permanent basis for missionary operations.

4. We have learned that the distinction between Home Missions and Foreign Missions is arbitrary and without any basis in the New Testament. The work is one; the gospel has no geographical limitations. As a mere matter of convenience of designation we may refer to the different departments of the work by the terms "home" and "foreign," but any arrangement or method that treats them or causes them to be regarded as rival interests should be discouraged. Our field is the world. Our neighbor is the man whom Sin has wounded and robbed of his true manhood, whether he be in our own favored country or in lands beyond the seas. With the Stars and Stripes waving on the opposite side of the globe, and with the whole world bound closer together by rapid communication, there is no foreign country in the old sense of the term, and there can be no foreign missions in the ancient meaning of the phrase.

5. We have learned, during these fifty years of co-operative missionary effort, that nothing tends more to the preservation of unity among the churches and the brethren in different parts of the country than active participation in missionary work. There is something so unselfish, so Christlike, so noble in conception about the enterprise of disseminating the truth of the gospel in our own and other lands, and in lifting up degraded peoples to a higher civilization, as to broaden the minds of all who are engaged in it. It diverts attention from those smaller questions about which controversies and divisions have arisen, and directs the thought and energies of the people into broader and more useful channels. Just in proportion as the missionary spirit has grown among us has the spirit of controversy over unprofitable questions diminished. The great convocations held in the interest of missions, in which the representative men and women from various sections of the country meet and mingle together in fraternal counsel, and in which the bonds of personal friendship and Christian brotherhood are strengthened, have tended mightily toward keeping "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Nor is unity the only benefit derived from the reflex influence of our mission work. Just as we have come face to face with the problem of saving men from the dominion of sin, whether in our own or in other lands, and have witnessed the transforming and elevating power of the gospel, our confidence in it as "the power of God unto salvation" has been quickened, and we have been saved from any departure from the evangelical faith. We have learned that no church can be evangelistic that is not first evangelical. There is no test of the religious faith of any people so severe as its capacity for dealing with the great problem of the world's redemption and its actual success in the work of saving men. Our experience in mission work has taught us the supreme value of prayer and the need of the Holy Spirit. There are difficulties of such magnitude to overcome in the prosecution of the stupendous enterprise of the world's evangelization, that those who are enlisted in it are driven to God for wisdom and strength to carry it forward, and to form an alliance with Heaven in order to overcome the opposing forces. In a word, we have learned that there is no other way of developing a robust Christian faith and life in our churches than by enlisting them fully in the work of saving others.

TWO IMPORTANT AGENCIES.

6. One of the great lessons emphasized in the history of our past, and especially in connection with our missionary work, is the very important part which has been accomplished by two important agencies, viz., our colleges and religious journals. From the very beginning of our history our movement has felt the mighty impulse and has been guided by the wisdom of educated men, who received their training in Christian colleges and universities. It would have been utterly imposible for the Reformation to have attracted the wide attention, and to have commanded the respect which it did in the beginning, without the advocacy of the scholarly men who consecrated their lives to it. This has been true of every subsequent period of its history. Our institutions of learning, from old Bethany to the youngest of our colleges, have contributed mightily toward making this movement what it has been and is. They have rendered us a service out of all proportion to the recognition they have received from us, especially in the way of financial support. We shall prove false to one of the plainest and most important lessons taught by our past history and by the growth and demands of our missionary work if we do not endow far more liberally than we have yet done those institutions of learning among us whose usefulness has been tested through long years of faithful service. Than this no greater nor more urgent duty rests upon this brotherhood to-day.

This is said on the assumption that we believe in the very highest consecrated learning, that we are not afraid of the light; through whatever medium it may shine; and that there is room among us for the broadest and profoundest scholarship, provided only it be sanctified by Christian faith. Otherwise, let us burn our colleges, and thereby save ourselves the trouble of burning (metaphorically) our heretics, who may dare to bring the light of modern research to the solution of old-time problems. But if we are not prepared for this heroic measure—as I am sure we are not—then let us burn our criminal indifference to the claims of Christian learning and our short-sighted illiberality toward our own schools, in the flames of an all-devouring passion for truth, and in the light of this glorious bonfire our colleges and universities will bound forward upon a new and broader career of power and usefulness.

Along with our colleges our religious journals have played an important part in our history. Let us admit that it has not always been a wise part. No one who knows all the facts can deny that many evils among us, and many hindrances to our work, can be traced to our religious journalism. But when this has been frankly confessed, it remains true that we have been largely dependent upon our religious journals for the education of the people in the truths and principles which we hold dear, for the dissemination of religious news, for the development of the missionary spirit among our churches, and for carrying forward all the lines of our general work. They are the medium, very largly, through which others gain a knowledge of these principles for which we contend. They have had their limitations, as have the colleges, through lack of proper support, but such as they have been and are they have filled and are filling a most important and responsible function in the furtherance of the cause we plead. They need no other endowment than the confidence, good will, patronage and interest of the people, with a good deal of patience, no doubt, for the shortcomings and mistakes of their editors who, in spite of the attribute of omniscience popularly ascribed to them, do occasionally manifest human limitations! There is, perhaps, no one feature by which any religious body is more surely rated, or sized up, than the character of its journalism, for that will be about what the people it represents demand that it shall be, and what they demand their religious papers to be is a sure index of what they are themselves. Is there any agency among us half so potent for good or for evil over which the brotherhood has so little direct control? Is it too much to hope that religious statesmanship among us may be able to find some way by which our papers may receive from the brotherhood both the support and guidance they need without interference with that liberty of the press which is a bulwark of religious as well as of civil liberty?

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

EVOLUTION OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

J. FRAISE RICHARD.

PROPOSITION 3. All other designations in the Scripture are easily interpreted in harmony with this proposition.

1. The "Church of God" is a scriptural title used quite frequently; as, "Church of God at Corinth (1 Cor. 1:1; 2 Cor. 1:1); "Church of the living God" (1 Tim. 2:15, etc.). This title is used by only two writers, Luke and Paul. Strictly speaking, Paul is the only author who uses it; for Luke simply records that Paul, having summoned the elders from Ephesus to Miletus, gave them the charge: "Feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood" (Acts 20:28).

Paul, thoroughly versed in the fundamental principles of law, here recognized the doctrine that what is done by an agent is sometimes attributed to the principal, and vice versa. Here the product of the labors and sacrifices of Jesus, the Son of God, is ascribed to the Father, because the Father worked through the Son. Jesus did his Father's will, and hence the honor here attributed. In the language of the schools the Church of Christ is the church militant, the church on earth; while the Church of God is the church triumphant. The former is the result of the "all authority in heaven and on earth" being given into the hands of Jesus. Its mission is an aggressive one, and will not be completed until his mission as Redeemer of the world shall have been accomplished. Then, as Paul so forcibly argues in his first letter to the church of Corinth (1 Cor. 15:24-28), "Cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all."

Until this transcendently glorious work shall have been fully accomplished the organization will be and should be known as the "Church of Christ," and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." When that mission shall have been completely finished, as it will be in the providence of God, the church militant will gracefully become the church triumphant and God will be "all in all."

2. Various local designations are employed to identify the general organization, but all in harmony with the name honored above every name, the name of Christ, viz.: "Church at Jerusalem" (Acts 11:22); "Churches of Asia" (1 Cor. 16:19); "Churches of the Gentiles" (Rom. 16:4); "Churches of Galatia" (Gal. 1:2); "Church of the Thessalonians" (1 Thess. 1:1); "Seven churches which are in Asia" (Rev. 1:4); "Church of Ephesus;" "Church of Smyrna;" "Church in Bergamos;" Church in Thyatira;" "Church in Sardis;" "Church in Philadelphia;" "Church of the Laodiceans."

These designations are very useful in localizing and distinguishing individual congregations of the Church of Christ. They served that purpose then and will be equally profitable now. When it was necessary to be more specific the inspired writer referred to Aquila and Priscilla and "the church that is in their house;" also to Philemon and "to the church in thy house." The general organization being called the Church of Christ, individual congregations are called, in Scripture language, "Churches of Christ" (Rom. 16:16), and one of them A CHURCH OF CHRIST. In modern times it will be easy to say, with reference to the city of Washington, Vermont Avenue Church of Christ, Ninth Street Church of Christ, etc. The same principle applies to every part of the world.

PROPOSITION 4. All church names in conflict with the name which Christ's body wears should be adandoned.

The reason for this has been made perfectly clear in the preceding portion of this article. In the application of the principle, however, two classes of names will be sacrificed.

(1) Those having a place in the Scriptture. (2) Those not having any place in the Scripture. Under the former head several names will be specified.

(1) "Disciples' Church" or "Church of the Disciples." It was shown in a previous article that the term "disciples" was a current term, both during and subsequent to the personal ministry of Jesus. It was an individual title applied to his personal followers, both before and after his ascension. Luke, it is believed, is the only New Testament writer who used the name after the church was established, and he only because he was accustomed to its employment in his gospel narrative. The term was not applied by him to the organized body of believers. We are prepared to have him say: "When the disciples came together to break bread" (Acts 20:7); "there went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea and brought with them on Mnason, of Cyprus, an old disciple" (Acts 21:16); "the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch" (Acts 26:28).

The name "disciples" had been a favorite and long-cherished one, and hence the efforts of Paul and Barnabas were required a whole year at Antioch to induce and prepare the disciples for the change to the higher and more characteristic name, Christians. The change was made by divine authority, and hence the necessity for thoroughly preparing the disciples for it.

Nowhere in the divine oracles do we read of the Disciples' Church, the Church of the Disciples, or its equivalent as applied to an organization. The change at Antioch from disciples to Christians, as referring to individual members of the body, has a most wonderful significance which ought to be heeded by all who plead for the restoration of the ancient order of things.

(2) "Christian Church." The term "Christian," a follower of Christ, is used three times in the New Testament, and in every case as a noun: "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch" (Acts 11:26); "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian" (Acts 26:28); "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed" (1 Pet. 4:16.)

The term is always applied to individual followers of Christ and not to the organized body. It is not used as an adjective, to describe the church. While the term is derived from the term Christ, it fails to express, with respect to an organization, what it does as applied as a substantive to an individual. The "Washington home" is not always the equivalent of "Washington's home," nor of the "home of Washington."

(3) The terms "brethren" and "saints" are, like "disciples" and "Christians," purely scriptural. They designate members of the body of Christ as viewed from some special characteristic or prominent standpoint. The term "brethren" is indicative of association or fellowship; while that of "saints" is expressive of separation from the world and consecration to a heavenly mission. The popular idea of immaculate holiness or total sinlessness is wholly foreign to the latter word.

The designations, "Baptist Church," "Brethren Church," "United Brethren Church," "Saints' Church" or "Church of ALL Saints," all involve ideas found in the New Testament; but they are not scriptural titles for Christ's organized body. They are, perhaps, on a par with "Disciples' Church," "Church of the Disciples" and "Christian Church," all of which are names more or less denominational in character.

2. Of the names not even mentioned in Scripture, as Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Universalist, Congregationalist, etc., etc., very little need be said. The simple fact that they are not even mentioned in the divine oracles is sufficient reason for excluding them from the list of titles competing for adoption as the name which Jesus would accept as representing his ("my") church.

PROPOSITION 5. The name Church of of Christ affords a basis on which, by scriptural reconstruction, all sects or denominations can, without the sacrifice of either truth or honor, be harmoniously built and united.

This proposition need not be argued. It is as clear and self-evident as an axiom in geometry. No church organization can be truly loyal to Christ if it refuses or neglects to wear his name. All names human in origin give to the creature the honor which belongs rightfully to Christ, the Supreme Head of the church.

Washington, D. C.

THE MINISTER AND HIS LIBRARY.

W. J. RUSSELL.

8. Poetry should have one of the best shelves in the minister's library. If he has no liking for it, the taste should be cultivated. The absence of a poetic taste is a sad indication of a lack of the imaginative faculty; and without imagination, what is life? When properly exercised this faculty lights up the whole horizon of thought, as the sunrise flashes along the mountain tops and lights up the world. By its aid the orator presents his clear, strong argument in his own simple strength and beauty. Imagination is of inestimable value to the minister, and as the study of the ideal creations of others exercises and cultivates this faculty, he should give some time to whatever is grand and lofty and full of inspiration. It is impossible to read the products of any poet's imagination without using our own. One cannot conceive a more thorough discipline of the imaginative faculty than a familiar acquaintance with Milton's Paradise Lost. Or, to take a less noted example, let any reader follow through Shelley's Prometheus, reproducing as he may be able those transcendent pictures in the solitude of his study, and he will quickly feel the stimulating effect of such a poem on his own imaginative power. Not only do the poets enlarge the scope of our imaginative faculties, but they alos bring our sympathies, our emotions into constant play. In the words of Dr. Johnson, "that man is little to be envied" who can read Tennyson's In Memoriam, or Arnold's Rugby Chapel, or Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard, of Cowper's Lines to My Mother's Picture, with unmoistened eye. Wordsworth is one of the noblest of English singers, and keeps the heart that loves and reads him in tune with religion and with the "sweet, sad music of humanity." To destroy the poetry of Shakespeare, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell, this world would be lonely indeed. The world is richer because these sweet spirits have lived, and our lives are made richer as we fill our minds with the choice thoughts of these servants of song. These writers of verse are masters of sentences. They should be studied by the minister. A superficial reading will not suffice. No one or two or three readings of such poems as Wordsworth's Lines on Tintern Abbey, or Tennyson's Vision of Sin, or Browning's Rabbi Ben Ezra, or Coleridge's Ancient Mariner can extract their meaning. And if this be true for these shorter poems, then how much more is it true for longer poems of the great masters, such as Milton's Comus, or Browning's Ring and the Book, or above all, Shakespeare's Hamlet, and Measure for Measure, and Cymbeline. Let there be an earnest gaze into these works—Tennyson for instance, and read him till he has been understood, and the secret of his expression has been mastered, and the proverb, "Dry as a sermon," will no longer be applied to the sermon. A course of study in Pope's Satires would give many a minister new insight into the use of epigram as a weapon of style. And poetry will teach us better than all homiletics the necessity for shunning and how to shun the "commonplace," which is the dry rot of so much discourse.

9. Is fiction to have any place in the minister's library? There are ministers who entertain the most uncompromising antipathy toward works of fiction. Romances, novels and the like, to them, are little short of the "abomination that maketh desolate." No doubt there has been an undue importance given to works of fiction. Novels, like an army of locusts, penetrate everywhere, and with thousands they displace entirely the study of all higher forms of literature. As many of these works of fiction have been written to sell, without any moral object in view, they pander to unworthy tastes and base passions, and have a corrupting influence wherever they may go. When these works are taken into consideration there is a just reason for the uncompromising antipathy alluded to. Occasionally a minister is heard to apologize for such reading on the ground that some beautiful and fragrant flowers, like the water lily, can be plucked only by wading through the mire. So, there are charms about even a viper; but who cares to risk the fangs? Flowers grow elsewhere besides in malarious marshes, and there are charms enough without the venom. If you ask who the best novelists are, I will venture to name those who at least head the column. Here they are: Goldsmith, Scott, Hawthorne, Washington Irving, George Eliot, Cooper, Charles Dickens, Charles Kingsley, Thackeray, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Howells, George Meredith, George W. Cable, Elizabeth Wetherell, Louise Alcott, Lew Wallace, Rudyard Kipling, Tolstoi, Victor Hugo, who is easily the greatest and best. When James T. Field was asked if he had read a certain book he replied, "I only read the saints." I have given a list of saints, those who have taught us generosity, manliness, truth and reverence. They will live long after many others are forgotten. To read these works the minister will realize a great and permanent profit, instead of harm and loss.

10. There should be a collection of such books that have a direct bearing upon the minister's literary culture. I think I am safe in saying that too little attention is given to general literary culture. The minister's library is often crowded with theological books, and especially books of a denominational character. This gives a one-sided education. "The best heads that ever existed," as Emerson asserts, "were quite too wise to undervalue letters. A great man should be a great reader." "It has been my fortune," says Dr. Stalker, "to be acquainted with a good many celebrated preachers, and I have observed that almost without exception they have had a thorough acquaintance with the whole range of the higher English literature." "The culture of letters," says Lacordaire, "is next to religion, the greatest of public treasures, the aroma of youth and the sword of manhood." The literary taste will help the minister to become and to remain a broad man. By it he will almost unconsciously resist the narrowing influences of his vocation. Take, for instance, the essays which constitute a large portion of our choicest literature. There is something in Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship, also his essays on Goethe, Novalis, Richter and Burns, that is most charming. Who can read James Russell Lowell's essays on Dante, Spencer, Wordsworth, Milton and Keats, without being filled with delight and having a consciousness of growing power? Certainly, the essays of Bacon, Addison, Johnson, Macaulay, Ruskin, Milton, Lamb and Emerson should not be neglected. Professor Drummond tells us that the books that influenced his mind most were the books of Ruskin, Emerson, George Eliot, Channing and Robertson. And a certain writer says: "Ruskin is still peerless in gorgeous prose; Emerson reaps to-day the harvest of a most fastidious and exacting literary compactness; George Eliot is more quotable than any writer of fiction of our century; Channing has not yet been displaced from his throne among the foremost of finished pulpit orators, and Robertson, even in fragments, reminds us of the torso of the Greek sculptor, its broken limb more precious than a whole gallery of later and inferior artists."

(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

OUR BUDGET.

—All aboard for 1900!

—Haul in the gangplank; loose the hawsers; let her go!

—We're off for another annual voyage, bound for the Twentieth Century.

—We have a fine party aboard, and expect a delightful and profitable trip.

—There may be wind and wave ahead of us, but our good ship has weathered many a storm, and the hand at the helm has piloted her safely on many a voyage.

—We know not what the year has in store for us, but we know His promise is, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee!" On this promise we can venture on unknown seas.

—"We know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
We only know we cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

—In extending our greetings to all our readers we are glad to report a most auspicious opening for a successful year's work in every department of our business, thanks to the hearty co-operation of our friends. All hands in the establishment are at work with might and main, to win success and to deserve it.

—How do you like our new dress? We thought it due the New Year and our subscribers that we should don a new attire at this time. We hope you will like it, and hand the paper around to your neighbors to show them what they are missing. See our new club rates.

—Turning a new leaf this year will cost something. Perhaps this is the cause of the increased demand for paper and the consequent advance in price. But the prospective or at least the promised moral reform therein implied will justify the increased cost of the paper consumed. However, no true estimate of the problem can be had until the size of the new leaf turned or of the person turning it can be known.

—Farewell Old Year! Thou hast fulfilled thy days and gone to join the caravan of years that stretch across the horizonless plain of the past. Great events were crowded into thy short span of life, and many wrongs were made right in thy days, but the evils which thou didst inherit from thy predecessors—wars, famine, pestilence, moral evil and human miseries—remain. True, thou didst bring to us great blessings, many of which will abide, but thou hast also left great burdens upon our shoulders. Some of the sorrows, cares, mysteries and wrongs, which oppressed us, thou hast graciously carried into the eternal past, but the most prolific source of all trouble—sin—remains. Some of our companions, too, are gone, but they are not with thee. Thou canst carry some things from earth into the unfathomable depths of the past—but not the souls of men; these return unto Him whose existence cannot be measured by years. But thou wilt not be soon forgotten. Events now enclosed within thy bosom will link thee to the hearts of the living and the historic page will declare thy praise unto generations to come. Thou hast also bequeathed to thy successor new hopes, new visions and renewed moral and spiritual energies which alone would perpetuate thy memory. No, dear old 1899, we cannot soon forget thee; when in the distant past thy stars will still reflect thy light. As a sentinel thou hast stood by the gateway—the year 1900—of the closing century forcing back with all thy moral strength the dark things of the past that the new century might have a clearer dawn. Yes, dear old year, we owe thee much—more than we can tell—but thou art gone. Like a hero thou art fallen upon God's great battlefield and with bowed heads and tearful eyes, as thou art sinking into the invisible past, we bid thee adieu and turn our faces to the fortunes of a new year!

—News of terrible suffering in Armenia among widows and orphans continue to come to us from those who have interested themselves personally in their welfare and relief. In their interest Miss E. C. Wheeler, 40 King Street, Worcester, Mass., is publishing, quarterly, a tract, 32 pages, envelope size, at a nominal cost. This tract gives particular instances of suffering and appeals to a generous public for aid asking all contributions for this purpose to be sent to the Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall Street, New York.

ATTENTION, CHURCHES!

Here is the latest order issued by the directors of the Christian Publishing Co.: The recent Special Club Rate to Churches is hereby modified, in the following particulars:

1. The rate of ONE DOLLAR per year for The Christian-Evangelist is granted to clubs of Twenty-Five, instead of fifty, though we expect that all churches whose membership is large enough will send fifty.

2. The paper will be sent direct to the subscribers, instead of to one address, as heretofore announced. This is in response to many requests.

3. Old and new subscribers will be treated alike. Our old subscribers have not asked this, but we grant it, feeling that they deserve the best rate we can offer.

These are important concessions made for the purpose of doubling our circulation, and will be good during the coming year. Clubs should be formed at once, and the money should accompany the order. Single subscriptions will remain as heretofore, $1.50. Clubs of less than twenty will receive proportionate reductions on application to this office.

By order Christian Publishing Co.

J. H. GARRISON, President.
W. D. CREE, Secretary.

—Our esteemed contemporary, the Christian Standard, in its last issue attempts a defense of its circular, which we printed in a former number. It does this by printing a circular which has been sent out by the Christian Publishing Co., referring to its Sunday-school publications. We are obliged to the Standard for placing these two circulars side by side. We are perfectly willing to allow the readers of the Standard and all who are interested to judge of the character of these circulars. We will only say that if there is a false statement or a false implication in the circular sent out by this company, and the same is pointed out, we shall at once correct it. The Standard virtually admits all that we charged against it as to its motive in sending out the circular which we printed. If it is satisfied with this defense, we have no reason to complain. The Standard invites us "to give the Sunday-schools the same guarantee that the Standard has done, by publishing a similar declaration." It will be time enough for us to furnish such guarantee when our patrons call for it. Our S. S. supplies have been before the public for many years and under the same editorial control, and their character is too well understood to require any certification as to their soundness in teaching. The extent to which they are used is sufficient proof that they are satisfactory to the public.

—The year 1899 ended sadly for the church in Stanford, Ill. On Sunday morning, the last day of the year, their church building was burned to the ground. But the flames had not died away until the brethren were talking of a new house, and immediate action will be taken by the official board in this direction.

—Elder I. M. White, of the Mormon Church, Independence, Mo., writes us to say that the notice in the recent number of the Christian-Evangelist that he declined to debate the subject of Mormonism with Clark Braden is a mistake, and in proof of this he encloses a printed challenge, directed to Mr. Braden, to repeat the debate held near Orchardville, Ill. Let this be regarded as sufficient proof of the prowess of Elder White, whatever may be thought of his prudence.

—The popularity of the annuity plan in mission work is increasing at an encouraging rate. The Home Board has just reported annuity receipts as follows: Dec. 16th, $500; Dec. 26th, $500; Dec. 27th, $1,000. In this way the donor gets the income on the money during life, and in addition sees its fruitage in the mission field. For further information address Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—For March offering envelopes, pastoral letters, the Missionary Voice and all necessary supplies, address F. M. Rains, Treasurer, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will be furnished free of charge. It is not too soon to begin to plan for the March offering, and it will take work to reach the new watchword, $200,000 for Foreign Missions this the Silver Jubilee Year." Better send at once for literature and supplies.

—Do not forget that January is the month for state mission collections. The state board is sorely pressed for funds to meet the expenses of the field, whereas it should be able to increase its force of evangelists. It is to be hoped that the pastors, preachers, churches and Disciples of Christ throughout the state will take immediate personal interest in this matter and send in large, liberal collections. Address T. A. Abbott, 1023 Oak St., Kansas City, Mo., for literature, facts, supplies, etc., and do a special work for the state this month.

—The church in Dallas, Oregon, is now free from a galling debt and are happy. Barton Riggs went to Dallas to raise the debt and succeeded. All things were put in readiness and the 17th day of December appointed to do the work, and it was done. It was a rally day indeed for the church. Allyn Esson and B. F. Mulkey were present and assisted by strong addresses. Not a business man outside the church was asked for a dollar. This may not have been the wisest thing to do, but we glory in the bravery of the spirit manifested—the determination to succeed. We wish the church a prosperous future.

—The Reform Bureau, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts superintendent, 210 Delaware Avenue, Washington, D. C., seems to us to be an important agency. It is the special business of this bureau to keep track of all national legislation and to warn the country of any moral taint that might be openly or secretly contained in any bill or measure. And not only so, but this bureau makes itself active in securing the passage of bills strictly in the interest of better morals. It is also a regular sentiment generator as is shown by its activity in the army canteen and the Roberts and other cases. Is it not clear, then, that the bureau should be amply provided with funds to prosecute its important work? It seems to us that all Christian people especially should interest themselves in the support of this national moral ear, eye and arm. Our own F. D. Power is the secretary of this bureau. Subscriptions of any amount will be gratefully acknowledged by the superintendent.

—In our Family Circle this week we publish an article by Geo. A. Patterson, of Hudson, O., on "The Family Altar," which we commend to the careful consideration of our readers. If there is any phase of Christianity that is perceptibly declining it is family worship. This is no doubt due largely to the pressure and spirit of the civilization in which we live; but while there has been a decline in family worship there is evidently an increase in private devotions. This is one of the special benefits of the Christian Endeavor movement, but this is not a sufficient reason for the abandonment of the ancient and sacred custom of family worship. It might, therefore, be well to have a reconsideration of this theme, in which it should be frankly discussed in the light of sacred history and of present environments. So little is written, said or preached upon this subject in these last years that whatever sweetness and value belong to it is about to be lost sight of by our children and the church.

—We are indebted to the Rev. Irl Hicks, of this city, for a copy of his Almanac for 1900. Professor Hicks' storm predictions are so generally credited that his Almanac has become a household necessity in thousands of homes. We know of no other almanac prepared on so elaborate a scale as this one by Prof. Hicks. It seems more like an astronomical treatise than an almanac. The star maps, storm charts and other illustrations are also a prominent and important feature of the work. The book contains 192 pages, all devoted to the positions of the planets, weather forecasts and other meteorological conditions; not a page is marred by patent medicine advertisements. The book is in large, clear type, on good paper and in the language of the people, and to be had for 25 cents by addressing the Word and Works Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo. We should also have mentioned the splendid full-page half-tone picture of Prof. Hicks and his family among the many fine full-page half-tone pictures.

—The Topical Hand-Book, by W. W. Dowling, is an exceedingly convenient, and important companion. It contains the topics of the prayer-meeting, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor for the year 1900 and can be carried in the vest pocket. This valuable little book can be had of the Christian Publishing Company at 50 cents per dozen copies or $3 per hundred. Both editors and pastors have constant use for just such an aid to memory; so also others.

—The writer of the obituary of Mrs. Isabella Brant failed to sign his or her name. The obituary will not be printed until the writer's name is known.

"A Good Name At Home

Is a Tower of Strength Abroad." This truth has been perfectly verified by the history of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which effected its first cures in Lowell, Mass., where it is made and where it still has a larger sale than all other blood purifiers. Its fame and cures and sales have spread abroad all over the world, and it is universally recognized as the best blood medicine money can buy.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

—We are glad to see the announcement in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that the address delivered by J. H. Garrison, the editor, at the Jubilee Convention, on "Lessons from Our Past," is to be published in the New Year's number of that paper. It is an admirable paper, and was well received by the convention. By the way, the reception accorded Bro. Garrison when he appeared before the convention to deliver this address showed unmistakably that notwithstanding the absurd talk of his supposed sympathy with the destructive criticism of the Bible, he still holds the unreserved confidence of his brethren.—Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas.

—The Home department idea of the Sunday-school seems to be growing in popularity and in use. Henry F. Davis, Sunday-school Secretary for Missouri, speaks of it frequently in his notes and will cheerfully give instruction to any who might wish to know more about this work and how to prosecute it. His address is Room 712 Commercial Building. St. Louis. Mo. We have also a lengthy communication from Rev. L. S. Keyser, Atchison, Kansas, on the subject, strongly urging its importance and offering the following suggestion as to its adoption:

Let each one send in a request to the superintendent of the school to be assigned to a suitable class; then let the proper helps for the lesson study be sent to him. Every Sunday he should send in a report that he has given at least a half hour's study to the lesson. With this report he should send his contribution, whether large or small, because the literature with which the school supplies him will cost money. Then the teacher should mark him accordingly in the class record. The children of the family or kind neighbors might be made the carriers of these reports. The "home" pupils might add to the interest of the school by writing out a few thoughts on the lesson, to be read before the class, or they might ask a few questions to be answered by the teacher. In this way everybody might belong to the school and study the great Book of books. Let it be tried. It is a simple and feasible plan.

—The following paragraph is from the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., and is of deep concern to the Christian element of our country, quite independent of any political party consideration. Good morals are always good politics and should have first and highest consideration. We are glad that the Methodist conferences are holding their esteemed and honored servant to account for his actions in so far as they seem to infract sound morals:

The anti-canteen leaders, of Washington, in and out of Congress, have concluded that they will not accept the invitation of the Secretary of War to go through the useless labor of re-enacting the law with no assurance it will not be Griggsed again, but will hold the President responsible for its enforcement. He accepted an appeal from Griggs for "consideration" last July, with a promise to investigate, and to enforce the law according to its true meaning as he should find it. A report of the result of his long consideration should be courteously but firmly demanded by press editorials and private letters. The writer has reliable information that the President is not a little troubled that the indignation of the Christian public does not "blow over," but rather blows with increasing force straight at the White House, threatening to blow him out of it. The ringing rebukes of Methodist conferences begin to have the look of an approaching cyclone. Christian citizenship will be worthy of even increased contempt and neglect among politicians in the 20th Century if it does not press its appeal until the canteen or McKinley himself is set aside. We believe the President is making a political as well as moral mistake, and that adequate pressure would secure right action on his part. In this nullification by the executive of a plain law of Congress we should see with alarm a supreme instance of saloon dominating at the very head of our government, and should make it a decisive battle in defense of "government of the people, by the people and for the people."

—Mt. Cabanne Church held an open reception, New Year's day, from 3 to 5 P. M. While there was an interesting program provided there was an all-round, free-for-all sociable. A neatly printed souvenir in which all the activities of the church are represented in an historic way, was given to each one present. The Berean Band was one of the foremost agents in providing this treat for the church. So now, after wishing each other a "Happy New Year," the entire church has set its face toward an active campaign and mean to make it a new year indeed in the Master's work.

—The article in this paper by J. L. Darsie, of Hiram, O., on "Our Educational Needs," may startle some of our readers, as it was intended, and as it should. It is not the article of a pessimist, but of one who is calmly looking at facts, and what he says is worthy of serious consideration.

—Elsewhere in this paper will be found the picture of Lewis Harvuot, who lately made the church at Panora, Ia., where he lived, a present of a $6,500 building, they furnishing it. He has given in all $7,000 to Drake University and is a strong friend to Christian missions. He has given largely to several interests. He moved to Guthrie county in 1854, has been recorder and treasurer, was lieutenant of the 29th Iowa, during the war, but his chief interest has been in the extension of the Christian Church. He has given so largely to the buildings of the county that they call him the "church builder of Guthrie county." Lewis Harvuot was an uncle to A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, by whom the church was dedicated.

Have you read A. McLean's Circuit of the Globe? You ought to. It is a splendid production from every point of view, whether literary or mechanical. It is well worth its price of $2.00. When you can get it and one year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for $2.50 you should act at once. Your money will be returned if you do not feel satisfied when the book arrives.

The Baptist Standard, of Dallas, Texas, pays the following compliment to W. K. Homan, editor of the Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas: "The Standard congratulates Hon. W. K. Homan, editor of the Christian Courier, of this city, on his election to the presidency of the National Convention of his people, which convened last week in Cincinnati, Ohio. He is in every way highly worthy of this expression of the confidence and esteem of his brethren. Not in all Texas is there a more courtly, unselfish gentleman and citizen than W. K. Homan. We rejoice in any honors that fall to him."

James Shelton, one of the patriarches of Spencer, Va., was called to his rest a few days ago. He was little past his 89th year and had spent 42 or more years in the Horsepasture Church (Va.) as an elder and faithfully stood by the Lord's table to break the loaf to his brethren.

The Gospel Plea, Edwards, Mississippi, edited and published by the Southern Christian Institute, and in the interests of primitive Christianity among the Negro race in the South, is a creditable journal and doing a good work. It is a weekly paper now nearing its fifth volume and speaks well for the college.

Renaldo Moses died at his home in New Whatcom, Wash., December 15, 1899. The deceased had a large number of friends in the East who will mourn his departure. He was the father-in-law of Sister Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis, Bro. Moses accepted Christ in his youth and has been a faithful member of churches in different places in our country.

S. H. Givler, who labors for the Lord in Osawatomie, Kan., was recently given a surprise social and fellowship meeting by the members of his congregation. The speech of the occasion was made by J. W. Shively, one of the patriarches of Eastern Kansas. Bro. Givler expresses the highest manner of praise for the faithfulness of his brethren in Osawatomie.

The Way, edited by Leonard G. Thompson and Grant K. Lewis, Denver, Col., published our editorial on "Some Lines of Religious Progress" in full with proper credit. While we appreciate the compliment. we are glad to see this wide awake state organ up-to-date in its literature and in the extension of sound doctrine. We wish the Way a prosperous and happy 1900.

W. A. Moore, of Webster City, Ia., who was called to the Beulah Church of this city last fall, arrived on the ground last week, preached his first regular sermon on last Sunday, and was duly installed as pastor of the church on Tuesday night of this week. There was a large representative audience with the pastors of the city and appropriate interesting services.

Through S. B. Moore, of this city we learn that his father-in-law, Eld. J. B. Briney is to make his headquarters in this city for the future. His new monthly is to appear from Paris, Mo., for the persent but will probaly move that to this city in the near future. J. P. Lewis, of Stoneville, N. C., writes: "We were called to preach the funeral sermon for the friends of Erasmus Cox, who passed on into the spirit realm last Saturday near Stoneville, N. C. He was not a member of any 'denomination,' but was a moral and good citizen. He had spent his life under the influence of the 'Primitive Baptist' Church and waited for 'the call' that never came —except the call to die."

The Worker, edited by T. E. Cramblet and W. J. Lhamon, Pittsburg, Pa., is one of the ablest edited local papers that comes to our table. It is the organ of all the churches of Christ in and about Pittsburg and their pastors are its associate editors. Aside from the news from each church represented the paper contains an excellent assortment of items, personals, articles, general news and select literature.

Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Emporia, Kan., writes: "Kansas loses another of her most promising young men. Luther E. Sellers has resigned the pastorate of the First Christian Church at Emporia, to accept the larger work at Terre Haute, Ind. In the three years of his ministry at Emporia he has endeared himself to the entire community as well as the church of which he has been the beloved friend, counselor and pastor. His work has been crowned with marked success, 300 having been added to the church and every department built up and strengthened. His strong, spiritual sermons have been a source of great inspiration and strength to his people, and his departure brings the keenest regret to those who have been privileged to labor with him. Kansas loses a most valuable helps in the state work in Bro. Sellers, and his counsels will be greatly missed in the board meetings. He is already considered one of the strongest men in the state, and has won an enviable reputation as a speaker of great earnestness and power. Mrs. Sellers is especially gifted in her work with the children and will be greatly missed. They bear with them the earnest prayers and best wishes of their many friends in Kansas."

Scoville and Huston meeting in Akron, O., closed with 112 additions. Of Scoville, his singer, Frank C. Huston, says: "This year's work with Bro. Scoville has convinced me of the fact that pure, unadulterated gospel, preached in love, will bring people to the feet of Jesus. Twenty men like Chas. Reign Scoville would convert the entire world in a few years. Since Jan. 1st, '99, I have seen 957 stand for Christ and the Bible. Begin new year's work at Mt. Carmel, Ill."

F. M. Green, Kent, O., writes: "I closed my work here last Sunday, as pastor and preacher. When I have taken a needed rest I hope to be able for work again somewhere. In a public life of 46 years this is the first time I have faced the future with no distinct vision of what or where my work will be. Bro. Frank B. Huffman, a graduate of Bethany College, a young man and a good preacher succeeds me here. He is able to do good work in this growing city.

Mrs. W. T. Moore's paper on "The Family and Social Life of Greece in the Homeric Age," read before the Tuesday Club of Columbia, Mo., and published in the Christian College Chronicle for December brings out some peculiar customs of that age and presents in a striking way the influence of Christianity upon the world. It is an interesting and valuable piece of literature, and the Christian College Chronicle, by the way, is as vigorous, newsy and interesting as ever.

Clara H. Hazelrigg, of Topeka, Kan., has recently closed a meeting at Jewell City, Kan., with 81 additions. That it was a great meeting is evidenced by the fact that three simultaneous reports have reached us of it, and two or three witnesses establish the fact or facts stated. It was a fine meeting and the people are happy. Of the 81 it is stated that 46 are men, 22 heads of families. There does not seem to be any thing feminine in this kind of work, but solid substantial building. God is blessing our women evangelists. He is no respector of persons.

Earl Wilfley, of Wilkinsburg, Pa., has received a unanimous and hearty call to the First Church, New Castle, Pa., to succeed Dr. I. A. Thayer, and has accepted the call. The negotiations were conducted with the full consent and approval of the city mission board. The brethren were heartily willing to give him up for the larger work notwithstanding their appreciation of his life, person and work. During his seven months at Wilkinsburg three missions have been established, all of which have secured lots and one has a building nearly completed. Bro. Wilfley will assist C. H. Plattenburg in a meeting in Uniontown, Pa., beginning Jan. 3rd. He also says: "As far away as I am, I cannot do without the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the preacher's friend, the church's advocate in every good work and whose motto seems to be 'amplius.'"

Chicago Letter.

The city of Chicago is unique. It is big and breezy. It is a great mass of human heterogeneity. Many if not all nationalities are represented. It is more in America than America is in it. And yet, it is plainly undergoing the slow process of assimilation and—shall I say it?—civilization; that is, the complex problems which such a congestion of humanity represent are being grappled with by brave, brainy men and women.

There is always something thrilling about a crowd of people. Rivers of humanity sweep through these streets, and swirl and eddy in tenements and palaces. The longest street in the city extends thirty-three miles. The typical Chicagoan claims that at the next census the city will show a population of 2,000,000. What tragedies and tears, what fears and hopes, what victories and defeats, what moral beauty and moral ugliness are to be found in this mass!

The city is electric with thought. It may be that much thought is expended upon things trivial and evanescent, but there is a distinct and vital intellectual atmosphere. Great colleges and universities have their seats here, and it may be safely asserted that these vast prairies never before produced such crops. If any man feels drowsy and wants to be waked up, let him live for awhile in Chicago. Our own preachers' meetings are athrob with intellectuality. In discussions, and papers, everything is open and manly; it is an affair of give and take. No time is wasted on foolish and superlative courtesy. The streets are the scenes of gatherings for socialistic propaganda, and every known panacea is earnestly advocated.

It is to be expected that all kinds of religious fads and fakes flourish here. Dowieism, faith cure, Christian Science, entire sanctification, Adventism, Spiritualism, Salvationism and every conceivable type of evangelism are to be met with. They advertise; they carry banners and beat drums and shout shibboleths. What a motley lot of ring-streaked, striped and speckled "religions" we have!

Do not think that it is an undesirable place of abode. To one who loves his fellowmen, and his country, and yearns for and believes in the redemption of our cities, Chicago rings with Macedonian cries. The very difficulties we encounter, the crushing oppositions, the heavy burdens, the suicidal folly, at times, within our own ranks—all these mean terrible toil and fellowship with Christ in suffering.

The conference on the establishment of a Bible training school, held Thursday, December 21st, at the Palmer House, was a significant and encouraging gathering. Among the visitors from abroad were Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, and A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, by whom the subject was first publicly broached. Letters from G. L. Thurgood and A. B. Philputt were read, expressing their interest and hope of success. After a discussion of several hours the conference appointed a committee of twelve, whose duty it is—1. To present the enterprise to the Acting Board of the A. C. M. S. for their approval. 2. To carry on a campaign of education, solicit funds and secure a principal. 3. To report to a called meeting at Indianapolis, at the time of the National Congress in March. The committeemen are: H. O. Breeden, A. M. Harvuot, J. H. Hardin, E. W. Darst, H. L. Willett, T. E. Cramblet, of Pittsburg, W. B. Taylor, W. H. McClain, of St. Louis, A. B. Philputt, W. F. Richardson, Frank G. Tyrrell and John E. Pounds.

A. M. Harvuot dedicated a church last Lord's day at Pandora, Iowa, a gift to the congregation from his uncle, Lewis E. Harvuot. H. O. Breeden preached for the West Side Church, this city, December 21st. W. W. Williams, of Des Moines, attended the conference. Chas. H. Young, of Charlottesville, Va., is in the city on business, and to attend the conference. C. G. Kindred, for several years pastor at Abingdon, Illinois, has taken up the work at Englewood. The church gives him a reception January 4th. G. W. Muckley made a flying visit to Chicago December 17th, speaking at the First Church in the morning, and visiting Douglas Park Church in the afternoon. He received five-year pledges aggregating $38.00 from the First Church. W. B. Taylor has taken his wife to Asheville, N. C., for her health. She is suffering from tuberculosis. Bruce Brown and family will leave for Denver January 1st, to work with the Central. Contracts have been signed and the work of building at the West Side will go forward. Hyde Park Church will be dedicated December 31st, J. H. Garrison preaching the sermon.

Our Educational Needs.

The most important, and, at the same time, the most unpopular question the Disciples have to deal with at present, is the question of education. In our early history there was a more abiding interest in it than there is now. More money was contributed, the attendance on our schools was larger, and the importance of maintaining our own institutions was held in higher esteem, relatively considered, than they are now.

Our educational work has not only not kept pace with our growth and the expansion of our benevolent work, but it has actually retrograded. We do not now hear of persons giving their last dollar to help endow our colleges as they did then, nor of others actually borrowing money in order that they might help along the good cause. While there is plenty of the heroic spirit among us, yet we are not informed that any one among us is trying to emulate the noble example of Mr. Campbell who, in his advanced life, took it upon himself to travel far and wide, enduring all kinds of hardships for one of his years, and actually cutting short his career in trying to endow and make permanently efficient our educational work. He felt, as no one else seemed to do, the far-reaching importance of this question, and our history and growth as a people is a tribute to his practical wisdom and foresight in this matter. That we are not taking too pessimistic a view of the situation, let us consider a few facts and figures.

We claim a membership of over a million Disciples, and that means a constituency of at least three times as many, the most of whom should be young people and children—the material for supplying our schools. In average intelligence we compare favorably with any other religious body, and hence should have as many proportionately among us of student age as any other people. It is not far out of the way to expect that we should have one hundred thousand persons who should have in view the achievement of an academic training, or one in thirty of our population. According to our best statistics we only have 25,000 attending college, or one in 120, and only 3,000 of these can be accommodated in our own institutions! The other 22,000 are finding tuition in schools that are fostered by other religious people, or in state universities, or similar secular institutions. We are simply not meeting the wants of our own people in furnishing the kind of culture they have a right to expect of us, and hence they go elsewhere to get it. How long will it take, at this rate, to so secularize, sectarianize and rationalize the oncoming generations that our power as a religious force will be utterly neutralized and destroyed? The religious trend and bias that is received during the exceedingly susceptible period of school age is the most difficult to efface of any of the impressions that are made; while the lack of suitable nurture of this kind, at this time, is an irreparable loss.

The average curriculum is deficient in at least two of the essential elements of Christian education. While the intellectual and physical training are well supplied, the social and religious elements are sadly neglected. In some state institutions the prevailing sentiment is such as to utterly destroy any wholesome training the student may have had in this direction. It is an alarming fact that the social life in these institutions is predominantly rationalistic and agnostic. The crown and glory of our work as educators has been the use we have made of the Bible as a text-book in all of our schools as an indispensable part of our educational work, and our ideal that nothing short of this can in any adequate sense meet the needs of Christian education, as we interpret it, should be maintained; while a social atmosphere which is free from all rationalistic bias and full of religious life is equally important. It is a fact, that even in theological seminaries, as fostered by some of our religious neighbors, almost everything is taught but the Bible.

Even supposing that our youth could have this kind of training in Bible study, we still need that they who are to fill positions in all the walks of life among us, as leaders, by virtue of their superior attainments, should be trained in our own way and fashioned according to our own methods and principles, so that they may carry into the work of life as much of the genius and habit of our own "WAY" as possible. We are a peculiar people, and only as such have we a right to exist; it is,

How many years of her life does a woman spend over the hot cook stove getting those three meals a day? Backaching, head throbbing, nerves twitching, it's all the same, there are three meals a day to be prepared. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cannot lighten woman's labor, but it can and does increase her strength. It cures those diseases of the womanly organs which undermine woman's vitality.

"I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription too highly as a tonic for tired, worn-out women who are afflicted with female weakness," writes Mrs. Ira W. Holmes, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. "It has helped me very much and a skillful physician once said to me in answer to my question as to its efficacy, 'I know of cases where it has really worked wonders.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets do not re-act upon the system. They are a good thing to keep in the house. One 'Pellet' is a laxative, two a cathartic dose. The medicine for every woman.

therefore, our paramount duty to make ourselves felt on the best thought and culture of our times, in all that goes to make up the full measure of our existence.

The only way to attain this is in our educational methods and work. Just now, while the religious world is being stirred by the generous life of young people's movements on the one hand, and threatened by questionable methods of criticism on the other hand, the need for emphasizing and impressing upon others our principles, as a people, was never more important. How best to do this and meet this overshadowing question of our brotherhood, may be indicated in another paper.

In conclusion, it is worthy of remark that in one or two respects our educational work has been worthy of all praise. We have done the very best kind of work, turning out the best kind of material with the smallest possible expenditure of means, and in most instances our men of mark and influence have been too much straitened in their circumstances to pay their own expenses.

New York Letter.

Peace, prosperity and gladness be the lot of every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in this good year of grace, the closing cycle of the century. Let us resolve to do the best year's work for our divine Master of all these hundreds of years. Should we not crown the century with the noblest self-sacrificing efforts that are possible? Let it be a year of great spiritual growth in all our churches; of enlarged missionary endeavor at home and abroad; of financial reinforcement of our colleges, and of the broadening and heightening of standards of our religious journalism. This has been a wonderful century in Christian annals, and we trust it is a prophecy of a "brighter age to be." Much has been done, but very much more remains to be done before the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. We trust, however, that the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may, each and all, do their part toward the hastening of the day when all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

The Hansan Place Baptist Church in Brooklyn, of which the Rev. A. C. Dixon, the noted evangelist, is pastor, is about to make a radical departure in the matter of church building. Dr. Dixon has so filled his people with the spirit of evangelism and the necessity of making gospel services attractive at all seasons—summer and winter alike—that his congregation, in arranging plans for a new house of worship, have made provisions for a gospel garden (a summer garden) on the roof. Why not? If people will not go into our churches in the heated season because they are not comfortable, but pass by to the roof-garden concert and theater, why not open a gospel garden and make the place attractive and comfortable? Satan has no mortgage on all pleasing means and comfortable places. We are inclined to believe Dr. Dixon's great church will make a success of this novel experiment, and if so it will not be many years before other city congregations will follow their example.

As the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, is said to be the wealthiest congregation in this country, representing something like four hundred million dollars, and as it was served so long by the late Dr. John Hall, its recent action in the calling of Professor George T. Purves, of Princeton, to the pastorate, is attracting no little attention, especially so since many in the church refused to extend a call to the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London. After stating their faith in Dr. Purves as the suitable man for their church, the trustees in extending the call say: "And, that you may feel free from worldly cares and avocations, we hereby promise and oblige ourselves to pay you the sum of $12,000 per annum, in regular quarterly payments, and to give you the use and possession of a parsonage during the time of your being and continuing the regular pastor of this church, and to furnish you with an assistant minister. In testimony whereof we have respectfully subscribed our names this 20th day of December, 1899."

This is supposed to be equivalent to $17,000 or $18,000 per year besides the assistant minister. It is a large salary, it is true, but the duties are many and the responsibilities of the position are heavy.

The Presbytery of New York have learned by sad experience that heresy trials have a deadly effect upon spiritual work and have very wisely decided to refer the McGiffert case back to the General Assembly for settlement, as may seem best, so as to secure an early and final disposition of it. The Presbytery seemed to say by their action, "The book, not the man, is condemned." Dr. McGiffert refuses to recant or to withdraw from the ministery of the church; but at the same time emphatically asserts his faith in the Christian Scriptures as the only rule of faith and practice and in the deity of Christ. And though he questions whether Jesus Christ intended at the Last Supper to institute a perpetual feast, yet he reverently receives the communion as one of the divine sacraments of the Church of Christ. It is difficult to predict what the the Assembly will do with the case under these circumstances.

Professor Otis Mason has recently expressed himself on "Man of the Distant Future." He says we will occupy a belt near the equator. All savage people will be eliminated from the earth. The entire human race will be brunette. Man will be much stronger, mentally and physically; and our feet and hands will be much smaller. The disappearance of small type will leave the eyes much stronger. The hat will vanish and the hair will improve. The home of that future age will be a communal dwelling, where all people of the same kinship will dwell under one roof—children, parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts and cousins. Rapid transit will eliminate skyscrapers, increased artificialization of life will render co-operation more necessary. Chemically, pure drinking water will free the cells of the body from all mineral matter and permit man to live to the age of Methuselah. Brotherhood and co-operation will forever eradicate seperate establishments, such as the corner grocery; they will be considered relics of bygone days, as will also the keeping of servants. Compressed foods will never come into general use—if they should the stomach would atrophy. The death of an infant will then be the exception; whereas, now more than one-half of the human race never mature. The deadly microbe will be extinct. People who spread diseases will be considered enemies of mankind and will be punished with severe penalties. And dress, while highly ornamental, will be more perfectly adapted to comfort, health, longevity and beauty. Women and men will dress alike. The arbitrament of justice will vanquish the sword. There will be a universal language—a composite of all the present tongues, but simple and easy to speak and write. Religion will be more of an individual sentiment. Creeds will be eliminated. As man progresses more and more, he will rely less and less upon the occult. Punishment will be obsolete. All children will receive the foundation of their education in the public schools, while universities and private institutions will give only special training. Children will have to study less, will learn spontaneously, and will be encouraged to do those things which their minds naturally lead them to prefer.

Certainly, these things are interesting to think about, to say the least. Prof. Mason draws a beautiful picture for us, one whose main features are pleasing.

Thirsting for God.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I am a regular reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and have been very much interested in your articles on the source, means and nature of the Christian life, or as some term it, "the Christ-life." I have been specially interested in this line of discussion because I am, and have deen for a long time, seeking for something—I hardly know what, unless it be this, "That I may know Christ, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his suffering, becoming conformed to his death." See also Eph. 2:14-21: "My soul thirsteth for God." Oh, that some one would tell me just what I crave and how to obtain it! I have striven until I am weary and discouraged. I am told to "surrender," "give up all," "trust," "obey," "pray," etc., etc., all of which I have tried to do again and again, and for awhile, many times, thought I had done, always with the same final result—failure and shame. I seem to be "always learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth."

My Christian career has been about a failure. For my biography read Rom. 7:19-24, with the 25 verse occasionally thrown in. I am the everlasting debtor to the man who will show me the way.

Yours in the blessed Master,

AN ANXIOUS SEEKER.

Forest Grove, Ore., Dec. 9, 1899.

[We are always glad to learn that our readers are dissatisfied with their religious attainments and are seeking to realize more fully the richness and fullness of the Christian life. What Paul desired, and what he was willing to sacrifice everything for, was that he might "know Christ and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his suffering." This has been the desire of many a soul since Paul's day, as it is with the brother who writes the foregoing. It should be remembered, however, that even Paul said, speaking of his own religious experience, "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have apprehended: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14).

We should not become discouraged with ourselves if we fail to make as rapid progress as we think we ought to make. That is a matter we may leave with God. Let it be our concern, simply, that we have committed ourselves to His guidance and are seeking in all things to do His will. It may be that our failures are designed to teach us humility and to save us from spiritual pride.

Judging from the tone of our brother's letter we should say that he perhaps needs, more than any other one thing, just to trust God, and not to look to feelings, nor too much to his own shortcomings, but to the power and sufficiency of Christ. Once we have fully committed ourselves to God to let Him have His way with us, we may dismiss from our minds all doubts or fears as to whether we are making sufficiently rapid progress in the Christian life. The life is not fully surrendered to God that is marked by cares and anxieties as to its own spiritual safety. The fullest joy of Christian living comes from unshaken confidence in God's Word and promise.

We are sure that if our brother will throw away his thoughts and fears of "failure," and "follow on to know the Lord," he will soon pass from the seventh chapter of Romans into the eighth chapter, and will be rejoicing with Paul in the truth that "there is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death."—EDITOR.]

Colorado Letter.

The writer of this letter holds a special commission from the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The commission is very broad. It says: "The whole universe will be open for you to discuss. You can take up the current themes of the day and handle them in your own way. There is no topic that is not open to you now. Whatever you see that needs hitting, hit it; whatever needs helping, help it; and whatever needs changing, change it!"

The name of the letter will be affected, to a degree, by the location of the writer. He is, at present, temporarily in Colorado; the letter, therefore, for a few weeks, or possibly months, will be called the "Colorado Letter."

Colorado, as you know, is an empire in its area. It embraces almost twice as much territory as all New England. It is a land of clear skies, bright sunshine and sublime scenery. It is said that the sun shines in Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou, Pueblo, Trinidad, Golden, Boulder, Ft. Collins and Greeley about sixty-two hours out of every hundred in which it is above the horizon. In Philadelphia the ratio is forty-nine. In ten years in Denver, on the average in each year, there were 341 clear or partly clear days. In Chicago, in the same period, there were 251; in New York, 262. There is not space in this letter to speak of the variety of climate, scenery and productions of Colorado. There are, however, three things that belong to all parts of the state—blue skies, bright sunshine and dry air.

There are 36 congregations of Disciples in the state. Of these the following are self-supporting: The Central Church, the South Broadway and Highlands in Denver; Boulder, Colorado Springs and the Central, in Pueblo. It is possible that the Berkeley Church, in Denver, should be added to this list. Of the 36 churches in Colorado, 21 contributed last year to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The aggregate contributions of churches, Sunday-schools and individuals was $992.34. The number of Disciples of Christ in Colorado is said to be 4,200. This is a moderate estimate. It is probable that there are a thousand persons in Colorado Springs, Colorado City and Manitou, who at some time were immersed by a Christian Church preacher, and who now declare that they are members of the Christian Church. Two persons were found in a single week, recently, who claimed to be members of the Christian Church, but had not been identified with a congregation for twenty years!

While Colorado is an empire in area it is not an empire in population. The governor of the state estimated the population, on January 1, 1899, at 492,500. Leonard G. Thompson, our state evangelist, says that the population is 560,000. Some of us think that Thompson knows as much as the governor; about some things he knows more!

The following states have each a smaller population than Colorado, accepting the statement of our governor as correct: Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming. There is some comfort to Colorado people in the fact that their state does not stand at the bottom oi the list in point of population. It is also believed, and there is comfort in this conviction, that long before the state shall have attained to the present age of Delaware, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, or even Oregon, it will have a much larger population than either of them.

There are 39 preachers of the Christian Church in Colorado; 15 of whom are not engaged in the work of the ministry.

Changes are frequent. The people are on the move. Pastors do not remain long in one place. This is a serious hindrance to the successful prosecution of our work.

Grant K. Seivers leaves the Highlands Church in Denver to become pastor in Pomona, Cal., the first of January. F. M. Dowling has gone from Pomona to Passadena, Cal.

The Highlands Church was organized in 1888. It is a child of Central Church in Denver. John L. Brandt, W. A. Harp and Melvin Putnam served the church before the advent of Bro. Seivers. His pastorate extended through three full years—the longest in the history of the church. This period also makes Bro. Seivers the patriarch among the Disciples in Denver, in the ministry. The church has a membership of 300, and a debt of $8,000.00. There is a good house of worship. There was a net gain in the membership of the church last year of 71. The missionary offering aggregated $385.00. The missionary collection is taken every Lord's day. No complaint in this church of too many collections. The people contributed for local work more than $1,800.00. The Highlands congregation, until last year, was the banner missionary church in the state. This distinction now belongs to the church in Colorado Springs.

Grant K. Seivers is one of the sons of the Christian Church at Angola, Ind. He studied, in preparation for the work of the ministry, in the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., and in Butler College, Irvington, Ind. His departure from Colorado is a distinct loss to the work in the state; his settlement in Pomona is a great gain to the cause of Christ in Southern California.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

For the First time in the History of Medicine, a Cure for Bright's Disease Has Been Discovered.

Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy

Has Proven by Thousands of Triumphant Tests Its Wonderful Success in Diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, Blood and Bright's Disease.

"Christian-Evangelist" Readers May Have A Sample Bottle FREE.

Just as sure as the break of dawn means another day, so does pain in the back mean kidney disease.

When your kidneys become weak and are unable to throw off the waste in the blood, they clog up with poisonous matter, break down, cell by cell, and particles pass away in the urine. Then the albumen, which makes rich, red blood, leaks out, your system breaks down and you have what is known to all mankind as Bright's Disease.

Bright's Disease is taking away more lives today than any other known ailment, excepting possibly consumption; and yet with small precautions and half the care you give to the appearance of your shoes, you may prevent such a calamity as Bright's Disease befalling you.

Are you fortified with the necessary knowledge about Bright's Disease? Do you known how to find out if there is anything the matter with your kidneys? Here is a simple test:

In the morning on arising, take of your urine about two ounces and put it in a glass bottle; let it stand about twenty-four hours, and if, on examination, you find any settling or sediment, if it is cloudy, or if small particles float in it, then you may be assured that nature has warned you, and that your kidneys need attention.

The mild and immediate effect of the famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of the eminent kidney specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and is not recommended for all diseases, but if you have kidney, bladder or uric acid troubles, or diseases depending upon these disorders, you will find Swamp-Root just the remedy you need.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles.

Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and in order that all afflicted may know its benefits. a special arrangement has been made with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by which all readers of our paper who will send their names and addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., will be sent absolutely free, by mail, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root. Also a book of value treating of all kinds of kidney diseases and containing some of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured.

Swamp-Root is for sale by all drug stores in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar.

Remember the name, "Swamp-Root," and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Bruce Brown, for two years pastor of the West Side Church, Chicago, takes up the work at the Central in Denver. The good people in the Central consider that they are fortunate to secure his services. Bro. Brown is a son of Disciple parents. He became a member of the church when he was but 16 years old. He is now 30. More than 300 persons were added to the West Side Church during his pastorate. He was graduated from Oskaloosa College in 1891. Bro. Brown has been very successful in enlisting men in the service of Christ. It is believed that with his coming to Denver there will be a revival in the Central Church—the leading congregation of Disciples of Christ in Colorado.

Flournoy Payne has left the East Side Church in Denver and is now in Colorado City. He will serve the congregation in Colorado City and will study in Colorado College. B. B. TYLER.

Meeting of the Trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

On December 12 to 14 was held, at Lackewood, New Jersey, a meeting of the trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, called a "retreat," or a gathering for prayer and meditation. Matters of business and methods of work were discussed, to be sure, but more than half the time was spent in devotions pure and simple. It was good to be there. The presence of Dr. Clark, Secretary Baer and Treasurer Shaw, with trustees Hill, Hamlin, Stewart, Burrell, Hoyt, Tomkins, Boynton, Crews, Bishop Walters, Power and others gave, not only a Christian Endeavor flavor, but also a deeply spiritual tone to the meeting. Lakewood is a place of surpassing quiet and beauty, a winter resort, nestling among the pines, and frequented mostly by afflicted and run-down people from New York and Philadelphia, in search of rest and health.

The sessions of the trustees were morning, afternoon and night, two hours each. The Spirit of the Master was there, and we felt as if we had indeed "come apart to rest awhile." Such hearty good fellowship, such unity of feeling, such brotherly love, it is rare to find. All seemed of one heart and of one soul. How much of this is due to the consecrated spirit and tact of Dr. Clark, who presides always, is difficult to say, but beyond and above the influence of any man we must recognize the Spirit of God, who is moving mightily in these days upon the hearts of his children for unity and love in service.

The Endeavor movement has been led from the first, under God, by men of prayer. It came, not by man, nor for the glory of men, but by the will of God, for the glory of his name.

Some of the matters touched upon were: "Trustees' Relations to State Work and the Field Generally," and it was thought that they should be more in evidence at public meetings, and especially in advisory relations: "The Value of Our Annual National Conventions," which were almost unanimously deemed of great importance: "Local and District Union Plans and Methods," for which a uniform program of topics is now prepared and strongly urged. "A Forward Step for the Juniors," and upon this question a position was unanimously taken by the trustees of great and far-reaching influence if it is carried out, namely, the use of a portion of the time of each Junior meeting in catechetical instruction upon the Bible. There are several little books of Scripture questions and answers which can be furnished by the United Society, but it was deemed probable that each denomination would prepare its own.

It was felt that to avoid misunderstandings and complications hereafter the place of holding international conventions should not be determined at the bid of paid agencies representing merely commercial interests, but cities desiring the convention must act through representatives of Christian Endeavor. It was felt, also, that such local committees should take into their counsels more closely representatives of the United Society who from long experience are able to bring invaluable aid and advice to men new in the work. The purpose is to avoid a commercial exploitation of the financial side of these gatherings, which is liable to be disappointing. Reports of the president, secretary and treasurer were read, and the report of the progress of Christian Endeavor in all lands was cheering.

Prof. Amos R. Wells, in a summary of events entitled, "The Story of the Three Years," asserts that in interest and importance the last three years almost equals all the preceding years put together, and demonstrates with convincing force that the society has become a part of the kingdom of God, to grow with its growth and mightily to aid its progress. Within three years there have been many advances in foreign lands. A United Society for India, Burmah and Ceylon has been formed, which holds annual conventions and supports a paper.

The South African Christian Endeavor Union has been enlarged to include all the societies in Cape Colony, Natal, the Free State and the Transvaal. Great growth is noted in China, Spain and Mexico. The total membership in all the world, according to the secretary's report, is now 56,566 societies, with an enrollment of 3,363,960. The story of how the movement has spread, by what seemingly accidental means the seed was carried from scetion to section and from country to country, especially in the earlier days, is a thrilling one and is graphically told in a little tract called World-Wide Endeavor, by Mrs. Francis E. Clark. Get this and read it.

During the last three years our Endeavorors have shared in the "baptism of blood." Three were killed in the blowing up of the Maine. There was an Endeavor Society on Dewey's flagship and on the Oregon, as well as on Sampson's squadron at Santiago. They were in evidence at the great camps at Tampa, Jacksonville, Chickamauga and others. There is one society now in Manila and several in Cuba. They are in the Transvaal, in the midst of the frightful conflict raging there. Christian Endeavor has reached the Klondike and other parts of Alaska. Truly, it is a wonderful story! Within three years it has taken up the Tenth Legion and the Quiet Hour, enrolling thousands who of their own free will take upon themselves the special consecration denoted by these terms.

The greatest thinkers and speakers in the American pulpit recognize the power and permanency of Christian Endeavor and feel complimented by an invitation to appear upon the program of its international conventions. Is it too much to hope that the time is near at hand when all young people's societies will federate with Endeavor, wear its name and have part in its broad, interdenominational fellowship? I think not.

A visit to Lake City in the interest of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST deserves a passing notice; that is, our good people there deserve it. They have the largest congregation and the best house of worship in the Northwest district and were in the midst of a meeting conducted by the pastor of the largest church we have in the Northeast district, Sumner T Martin, of Mason City.

Bro. Martin's preaching was fully in keeping with his great constituency there and at home, but he had his hands very full to augment the enthusiasm which follows the regular work of the pastor, F. H. Lemon. Bro. Lemon will in turn assist Bro. Martin in a meeting at Mason City.

There had been sixteen accessions at that date, and we trebled the list of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who will all await with interest further reports from this strong team of Iowa pastor-evangelists and the enterprising congregations they represent. S. C. HAYTEN.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE C. W. B. M.—1884-1899.

LOIS A. WHITE.

From the time the practicability of Bible Chair work was demonstrated beside the Michigan University, the Disciples of Virginia desired to have similar work undertaken at the seat of their state university. The South and East look to such a work there as a power in our brotherhood, as the central section looks to Ann Arbor. For a beginning a six weeks' series of lectures was opened in February, 1897, upon (1) The Life of Christ, (2) The Life and Work of Paul, (3) The Beginnings of Christianity, (4) Old Testament History, (5) Prophecy, for the students of the university and others who chose the work. Herbert L. Willett, the instructor, wrote in April, '97: "There is a student body of only 500, there was but one instructor; the course lasted only six weeks, and only the men were registered, yet we had 50 such registrants. The lectures were given in the university chapel at Charlottesville, and were attended by an average of about 70 people, the attendance sometimes reaching to much over 100." Col. Jno. B. Cary's family and colaborers felt the legacy he left them, when he departed this life two years ago, was his ardent desire, born of deep conviction, to provide their loved University of Virginia with biblical instruction from the standpoint of history and literature. Nobly are they coming up to the responsibility of this legacy. C. A. Young is in his third year of teaching classes in the Bible at Charlottesville and now for the entire school year 1899-1900. Besides furnishing a part of the current expenses Virginia has contributed about $13,000 toward the endowment of the University of Virigina Bible Lectureship, founded by Jno. B. Cary. Of this $10,000 was given by his widow, Columbia H. Cary. This year the university credits students with work done in the Bible classes and chose Bro. Young as a professor in Hebrew. He has done Bible teaching in Athens three years, for Georgia University students, and also the young women in the Lucy Cobb Institute, at the same place. This summer N. M. Ragland and W. M. Forrest were appointed to go to Calcutta for Bible Chair and evangelistic work.

In 1889 David Wetzell, then C. W. B. M. missionary pastor of the First Church, Portland, Ore., requested an appropriation for current expenses to enable that church to conduct a Chinese mission. In November, 1892, Jeu Hawk, a native of China, graduated from Drake University, was employed to superintend that mission—which was the only one in this country to be superintended by a Chinese until about a year ago the Baptists in Portland followed this example. Bro. Jeu wrote in 1896: "Our work in the mission consists of English lessons, Bible-school, prayer-meeting, Sunday-school and preaching. While we are laboring for accessions to the church, our chief effort is for the firmness of those who have accepted Christ. . . . Two of our brethren are now in China visiting their friends and relatives and preaching the gospel there. . . . The moving about of our brethren keeps us from having a permanent base in this city to work with; but I think their going here and there is just like the dispersion of the early Christians going everywhere preaching the Word." In 1897 he stated: "The united association of five Chinese missions in this city employ a native preacher in Southern China to do evangelistic work. Our mission is one of the five, and this mission is the work of the C. W. B. M.; therefore, the C. W. B. M. is doing missionary work in China." This year 63 scholars have been enrolled with an average attendance of 27. For missionary purposes the offerings totaled $110.85, and the scholars paid their teachers $433. Sermons preached, 70, and conversions, six. Bro. Jeu is in his last year of a medical course to prepare him to be a medical missionary in China. The board now employs him an associate to train in conducting this Portland mission, Bro. Lome Hugh, who was converted there and educated in Drake University.

For several years the sisters in Kentucky were sustaining a "Mountain Mission" in their state, building up a school and church at Hazel Green, Wolfe County. In 1886 this was provisionally placed in the care of the C. W. B. M. In 1888 it was formally and fully transferred to this board and became one of its permanent enterprises. The school opened that autumn with R. H. Wynne, principal; Emma Jenkins, assistant. The property was valued at $3,500. Mr. Wynne taught during the week and preached every Lord's day. The design from the first was to make it a training school for Christian teachers who, with their own characters, built up and strengthened, mentally and spiritually, should go out into their own neglected mountain districts to uplift and train in the Christian life other young people, who were otherwise almost destitute of educational advantages. In September, 1890, W. H. Cord and wife took charge of the work there. In 1891 the board built the Academy Home, at a cost of about $3,500. In the growth of the work a number of worthy assistants have labored with Prof. and Mrs. Cord. He reported for 1899: "Boarders enrolled in the school, 69; pupils living in Hazel Green, 49; day pupils, 40; total enrollment, 158. Enrollment in teachers' classes, 36; graduates, seven. This amount of tuition charged was $884.12. These facts and figures do not begin to measure the magnitude of the work of the mission. We are confident in saying the last session was the best session in the history of the mission. Most of the pupils seem to have but one purpose in view, viz., to make men and women of themselves, to amount to something in the world. The minds of the mountain boys and girls are virgin soil, and are capable of great development; and they will, when properly trained, be strong factors in both state and church. In the nine years of our work in the Mountain Mission, there have been more than 1,100 young men and women, boys and girls. Of these, more than one half were from counties outside of Wolfe County, in which Hazel Green is located. About 600 were boarders in the Academy Home and in private families. There are now teaching in the public district schools of the mountains about 300 of our pupils. Each teacher has in his school an average of 50 boys and girls, making 15,000 boys and girls reached indirectly by our Mountain Mission, to say nothing of the hundreds who are influenced, although not in school. Some are physicians, lawyers, merchants, preachers, etc. Many now are the heads of families and are telling their children of Hazel Green Academy—the Mountain Mission of the C. W. B. M. Can any one measure the good accomplished by and through our beloved mission?"

Through the pleading from Texas, led by Mrs. A. A. Johnston, of sacred memory, M. L. Hoblit was employed and a mission in Mexico opened in December, 1895, at C. Juarez, a border town just across the river from El Paso, Tex. In August, 1899, Bertha C. Mason, paid in part by Texas Endeavorers, began school work in that mission. Her health was not equal to the work the following year. The board acceded to Bro. Hoblit's request to change the mission to an interior location, and he entered Monterey. There reading room, school, preaching and printing work was done.

Colorado, in the progress of the United States work, was adopted in 1891 as a C. W. B. M. field, with the work done through the state board; and M. L. Streator, with headquarters at Denver, was made evangelist for the West. Within these later fifteen years of its history the C. W. B. M. has, besides continuing the Montana and Colorado fields, sustained wholly or in part, for longer or shorter periods, missionaries in Sacramento and Santa Barbara, Cal.; the state of Washington; two churches in Portland, Ore.; Duluth and the Southern District, Minnesota; West Superior and in the state of Wisconsin; Kalkaskia and Ann Arbor, Mich.; Crown Point, Ind.; Toledo, O.; Rochester, Buffalo and Watertown, N. Y.; Washington, D. C.; Altoona, Pa.; Huntington, W. Va.; Roanoke, Newport News, Charlottesville and Crewe, Va.; Winston, N. C.; Athens, Ga.; Florida, Arkansas and Nebraska (aided in sustaining an evangelist); Ogden, Utah and N. Topeka, Kan.

The General, National and State C. W. B. M. Organizers have also been most effective missionaries among the churches. Stations have been adopted and more or less thoroughly equipped in India at Bilaspur, Deoghur, Bina and Mahoba. Of those first four women who went to that country Misses Boyd and Kingsbury are at the first-named station; Laura Kinsey Mitchell at Bina and Mary Graybiel at Mahoba. The quarter century closed with seventeen missionaries on the field in India, in the employ of the C. W. B. M., and besides the two named for Calcutta, Miss Susie Rawson and Dr. Mary Longdon, under appointment for Mahoba and Deoghur. Homes for missionaries have been built at all those places. Orphanage work is done at three of them, hospital work at one and school work at all.

In Jamaica these years have seen redeemed ones go home to God triumphant in the faith they were taught by C. W. B. M. missionaries. The 1899 report from eight employees of this board shows twenty churches with a total membership of 1656; nineteen Sunday-schools; sixteen Christian Endeavor Societies and nine day schools. C. C. Smith, commissioned by the C. W. B. M. for that purpose, visited our Jamaica missionaries and their churches in February and March, 1896. Following one of his recommendations, young native men, chosen by the missionaries from the churches there, have been sent to the Southern Christian Institute to be educated for Christian workers among their own people.

The receipts in 1885 were $16,620.07, in 1890, $42,116.81; in 1895, $58,611.83, with reported membership of 29,512 in 1399 auxiliaries; in 1899, $101,343.54, with 1611 auxiliaries and 30,681 members.

Best of all is the history we can find only within the pearly gates—that of the souls brought to Christ and the Christian characters developed by what God has wrought through the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in twenty-five beautiful years.

[OUR DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—We have noted with sincere regret your trying hour and have intended to express our high appreciation of your situation. Maple Terrace, Merchantville, N. J., Nov. 22, '99.]

Rest him, O Father! Thou didst send him forth
With great and gracious messages of love;
But thy ambassador is weary now,
Worn with the weight of his high embassy.
Now care for him as thou hast cared for us
In sending him, and cause him to lie down
In thy fresh pastures by the stream of peace.
Let thy left hand be now beneath his head,
And thine upholding right encircle him,
And beneath the everlasting arms
Be felt in full support. So let him rest,
Hushed like a little child, without one care;
And so give thy beloved sleep to-night.

Rest him, dear Master! He hath poured for us
The wine of joy and we have been refreshed.
Now fill his chalice, give him sweet new draughts
Of life and love with thine own hand, be thou
His ministrant to-night, draw very near
In all thy tenderness and all thy power.
O speak to him! Thou knowest how to speak
A word in season to thy weary ones,
And he is weary now. Thou lovest him—
Let thy disciple lean upon thy breast,
And leaning, gain new strength to "rise and shine."

Rest him, O loving Spirit! Let thy calm
Fall on his soul to-night. O Holy Dove,
Spread thy bright wing above him, let him rest
Beneath its shadows; let him know afresh
The infinite truth and might of thy dear name—
"Our Comforter!" As gentlest touch will stay
The strong vibrations of a jearing cord,
So lay thy hand upon his heart and still
Each overstraining throb, each pulsing pain.
Then in the stillness breath upon the strings,
And let thy holy music overflow
With soothing power his listening, resting soul.

Doctor's Prophecy.

ABOUT GRAPE-NUTS.

Dr. J. H. Hanaford, one of the oldest physicians n Reading, Mass., says in the Practical Age: "I firmly believe that Mr. Post has rendered u greater service to humanity than any other mad living, in the matter of food.

He claims, with propriety, I think, that his new food, Grape-Nuts, made from the most nourishing element of the grains, contains nourishment in one pound equal to ten of meat, wheat, oats or bread.

From the acquaintance that I have had with this unusually nutritious article, I am satisfied the statement is truthful and demonstratable. I am inclined to believe the food will effect considerable of a revolution in society, to the extent that it is introduced."

This was written by Dr. Hanaford several months ago. The rapid spread of the use of Grape-Nuts all over the country has demonstrated that the doctor's prophecy has already come true, to an extent, at least. Perhaps never before in the history of food manufacture has such rapid progress been made as with Grape-Nuts. It especially appeals to brain workers.

All first-class grocers furnish Grape-Nuts, and the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., are the makers.

China Letter.

One who has studied, traveled, lived among and written much about missions and missionaries has said that "missionaries are the architects of a new civilization." It is encouraging that this verdict is not without attestation by those whose knowledge of the design of Christian missions is less sympathetic. There are those also who study merely the commercial value of missions. They favor missions because of the commercial returns. They are fascinated by the "open doors" which offer such inviting fortunes to the markets and industries of the world. In the rebuilding of China we shall come in contact with much in the line of "wood, hay and stubble." This will have to be identified, labeled and consigned to its own place.

It is the consensus of opinion that the partition of China is the resultant cause of a moral as well as a geographical and political upheaval. The old structures are giving way. The pillars of the nation are rotten. The estimate demands the clearing of the ground of all rubbish and the rearing of a new house according to the plans and specifications of the divine Architect of the kingdom of God.

At this special crisis in the history of China and in the wide-reaching changes, the bare following in the social and political conditions, it is of supreme importance that the missions should push forward their strongest men to occupy the strategic points for future operations. It is not only a pivotal point in the history of the nation, but also a critical time in the experience of missions. The secular and materialistic element is dominant. Already some promising and useful missionaries have injudiciously accepted appointments under the Chinese Government. Such talent is lost to the direct work of missions and the consecrated aim and purpose of the missionary often misapplied and not less often irreparably broken.

Although the great problems of missions are becoming more and more pressing in their urgency, yet it is true also we are coming to understand more clearly its reality, variety and difficulties, and the adaptation necessary to secure the highest and best ends.

That which would help the work in a great sense and also have its reflex influence for good on the churches at home would be the direct participation by the churches in this work. The church that has its own missionary on the field is richly blessed. That missionary also is kept in constant touch with the currents of spiritual life. The churches that support him or her and the workers on the field sustain reciprocal relations to each other, which cannot but be both stimulating and encouraging.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Change of Time.

The new Christian Church, Fairfield, Ia., will be dedicated Sunday, January 14, 1900, instead of January 7, as has been announced. The cost of the building, $5,000, will be provided for before the day of dedication, so that there will be only a free will offering at the services. Pastors and neighboring churches are cordially invited.

LEANDER LANE, Pastor.

Fairfield, Iowa.

Bureau County, Ill.

At a call made by Bro. W. F. Shaw and others, delegates from the five of the six churches of this county met in Princeton, Dec. 15 and 16, and formed themselves into a county co-operation for evangelistic purposes in the county. A splendid program in three sessions was well rendered and much good done already.

W. F. Shaw, Walnut, was elected president; F. C. Thackaberry, Tampico, vice-president and Miss Mabel Walters, Princeton, secretary and treasurer. This county does not afford the best of opportunities for such work, but the doors may open as we get ready to enter them. J. G. WAGGONER.

Princeton, Ill.

Dedication at Panora, Iowa.

There was at this place, on last Lord's day, a very beautiful and commodious church house dedicated by Bro. A. M. Harvuot, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O. The house is a gift to this congregation by Bro. L. Harvuot, an uncle of Bro. A. M. Harvout.

The building was planned by an able architect and is, therefore, up to date in every particular. It contains in all seven rooms, three below, four above. Those below are kitchen, dining room and reception room. Those above are main auditorium, Sunday-school room and two baptistery rooms. The finishing on the inside is of oak, and between Sunday-school room and the main auditorium there are raising doors. The walls were frescoed by an artistic decorator and are very pretty. The furnishings are of the latest and best, consisting of solid oak pews for the auditorium, chairs for the Sunday-school room, five electric, polished brass chandeliers, aisles carpeted, every room heated by furnace and lighted by electricity. The building complete cost, in round numbers, $9,000.

We are going to take for our motto during the coming year, "Fifty souls for Christ and double last year's missionary offering." JOHN LEWIS.

The Work at Atlanta.

The church at Atlanta, Ill., was organized in the early days of our Reformation. It is not often mentioned in our papers, being content to live quietly in its sphere of usefulness. But the brethren will be glad to know of the recent meetings and the success attending them. The meeting continued four weeks and 26 were added to the church. This is said to be the first successful meeting in this respect that the church has had for years. On this account the church is greatly encouraged to go forward in the work for the Master. Among the converts was a man 84 years old, a Grecian, of Damascus, who is attending school there, and a Roman Catholic. W. R. Jinnett, whose picture is shown above, has been pastor of that church, since Sept. 15th, 1899. He was called to that church from East St. Louis, Ill., where he had labored for five years. He is 28 years old, a graduate of Bethany College, class of '94, and a native of North Carolina. His work in East St. Louis was quite successful, and at Atlanta the prospects are said to be very bright for a useful period of work under his leadership. The preaching in the recent meeting was done by him. The church at Atlanta is alive to every good work, being active in all lines of missionary and benevolent activities. Their recent meeting was a great victory for Christ and has been the means of destroying much indifference and awakening many new activities. We wish our esteemed brother and the church in Atlanta abounding success. H.

THE HELPING HAND, by W. W. Dowling, is a manual of instruction for the Y. P. S. C. E., that great movement of the century that is putting new life into our churches, by interesting the young, causing them to flock to the Lord's house "as doves to the windows," and encouraging them earnestly in the Lord's work. It contains, in the most condensed form, full information concerning the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, with instructions and suggestions concerning every point. This work has had a more extensive circulation, and proved more helpful to Endeavor workers than any other hand-book published. 25 cents. Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

T. A. Hedges reports a very successful institute at Hurdland. Bro. Hedges is the evangelist in the northeast district, and by addressing him at LaGrange you will have prompt response.

Elmer Shepard is helping the little band at Morley.

At Clarksville I found Geo. W. Buckner and the members pushing their work to the front. The primary department, under Mrs. J. M. Collins, is giving more than a cent to the pupil, while the entire school, under Superintendent C. B. Gilbert, averages about four cents to the pupil, a most remarkable showing.

Those wishing something handy and useful in the study of next year's lessons can try a "marked" copy of the New Testament, which I am using with much benefit. It is from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 250 LaSalle Avenue, Chicago, at thirteen cents per copy.

Maple Avenue, Clinton and J. K. McClure did your servant so nicely, co-operating with him so generously.

J. A. McKensie moves to St. Joseph shortly, and gives more time and attention to the Mitchell Park Church and school, which have grown rapidly in the last year under his supervision. The workers of Missouri will learn to appreciate J. A. more and more as they know him.

In the midst of our work we send all the Missouri schools a "Happy New Year," hoping that they will see to it that it is a happy year in the interest of the children, and to this end why not have a real, good, lively teachers' meeting every week this year? Something so badly needed in so many schools and so effective in better results. Have it understood that the meeting is for a discussion of methods of class management, lesson teaching and results. Do not use the time of the meeting studying the lesson; do that at home and alone.

Have it also understood that you are going to begin the school promptly at the hour set and that all the exercises are to run on a schedule. Ask the teachers to pledge themselves to thorough home preparation of the lesson, that they may secure like promise from their pupils. Let it be understood among all the teachers that the special work of this year is the conversion of the pupils, and while it is always so, it will come into good account in the study of the life of Jesus.

Paynesville is to put their house in order, but will make no reduction in their giving to our work, and never have during all the hard times. They have given us $30 a year right along.

H. F. DAVIS.

St. Louis.

Our larger churches are pleased with our club offer of $1.00 per year for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in bundles of fifty or more to one address. Some of the smaller churches think this leaves them out altogether. We do not intend to discriminate. Write and tell us the number you can secure for such a club and we will try to accommodate you. Remember, however, that our rate to individual addresses remains $1.50 as formerly, to old and new alike.

HOW THEY SAVED THEIR HOME.

They started their new happy life of love and hope together in a trim-bright-tinted little house that stood back upon a terraced lawn. A smooth path led to the broad "stoop" and hospitable piazza. The long sweep of roof, the wide-curving "bays" and the little western turret with oriel windows bespoke ample room and light and air and gorgeous sunsets.

O, how they loved that little home! He was industrious, frugal, ambitious; she a tender wife with a heart full of devotion; and both of them determined at any cost of struggle or sacrifice to earn and pay for this cherished dwelling place, and possess it as their very own; a cosey nest in days of sunshine, a refuge in time of trouble, a fireside, a home.

HOW TROUBLE CAME.

At first it seemed smooth sailing. He was glad to work over-time, and she being deft with needle and scissors helped the neighbors with their gowns. In such ways a few dollars were added to the small, home-making fund. Day after day, early and late, they earnestly planned and toiled, never realizing that they were going beyond their strength, until the little breakdowns began to come.

Many a morning he would rise with his head feeling as he expressed it, "like a lump of lead," and no stomach for the dainty breakfast she had prepared. "O, you must eat!" she would exclaim anxiously. "You can never work without it." And all the time trying to smile, she would pass her hand lightly across her own forehead as if to brush away the pain that snapped and darted underneath.

Then came days when he could neither eat nor work at all; when his sight was blurred and dizzy, his limbs weighted down as if with shackles; his whole body full of sickness and nausea and distaste of living, and his mind dark with dismal forebodings. Describing this terrible time afterward he said to a friend:

"What troubled me most was that I could not understand what was the matter with me. The doctors said it was consumption; they did me no good. I knew something was killing me by inches. Finally I had to give up and go to bed. I could hardly lift my head off the pillow. My brother wanted to write to Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, and brought me three bottles of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and begged me to take it. I didn't have much faith but said to my wife:

'What's the use? The doctors don't help me a bit and nothing else will. At this rate I'll die anyway. This 'Discovery' can't hurt me; it may help me; I'll try these three bottles just to please Jim. He was right too. The first bottle went straight to my digestion and gave me an appetite so I relished my food. I felt as if every mouthful was doing me good and making good blood in my veins. I began to feel better and pick up my flesh; my bowels came around right and I guess my liver sort of waked up. My cough stopped. I got good and strong and in four weeks I was back at work again like a man."

HOW TROUBLE WENT AWAY.

"My wife never let on how miserable she was feeling all the while; when I found it out I made her take the 'Discovery' too and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for her nerves, and she says she's just made over new again. I sent for his great 'Medical Adviser.' It's the grandest book you ever saw. If we'd had it before, we would have saved hundreds of dollars."

Then came new hopes, new plans, new power and fresh achievements. The little home in time became their very own, earned and paid for by the erstwhile nerveless hands and brain now restored to vigor and activity by the most remarkable life-renewing "Discovery" that medical science has ever revealed to man. And when at length a sweet, fresh little life came to bless their lives, they felt that happiness was complete.

This is a true story and it cannot be told too often or too strongly. What this great "Discovery" did for this man, it has done for thousands of men and women in every corner of this Union, and in every civilized country on the globe.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is sold by all good dealers in medicines every where.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR PILES.

The Pyramid Pile Cure is a success because it has the merit which brings success. It cures every form of piles and cures them to stay cured. It is now the most popular and best known pile remedy before the public, and one reason for its great popularity is because it has taken the place of surgical operations, once considered the only sure cure.

People often wonder that so simple a remedy will so promptly cure such an obstinate trouble as piles are known to be. Yet the greatest remedies and greatest inventions we have are the simplest, and the fact that it does cure is all the sufferer from piles wants to know.

The Pyramid Pile Cure cures piles in any stage of the disease as shown by the following testimonial letters which are published every week, and new cases reported each time:

From Geo. C. Gieck, Owens Mill, Mo.: Some time ago I bought a package of Pyramid Pile Cure for my wife, who had suffered very much. The first trial did her more good than anything she had ever tried. It is just as represented.

From Richard Loan, Whipple, Ohio: I have used the Pyramid and am entirely pleased and satisfied with results. It does the work and no mistake.

Mr. W. R. Hines, of Magnolia, Ark., says: Although I have used the Pyramid Pile Cure only a very short time, yet it has been very beneficial to me.

From Mrs. Peter Lake, Mohawk, N. Y.: I received the Pyramid Pile Cure, but put off using it until last week, when I became so bad I decided to try it. I have suffered twenty-nine years with bleeding piles and have used a great deal of medicine, but never had anything that did so much for me as your remedy.

The proprietors of this remedy could publish columns of similar letters to the above if necessary, but these are enough to show what it will do in different cases.

The Pyramid Pile Cure is prepared by the Pyramid Drug Co., of Marshall, Mich., and for sale by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. One package is sufficient to cure an ordinary case. Your druggist will tell you more about it.

Freedom's Prayer.

Father of all, Author of good,
Arm at Thy call, willing manhood,
When war shall on us beat
E'er keep us from defeat.
Prepare us still, God of the free,
To do Thy will; we wait for Thee.

Send men of might o'er ocean wide
To fight for right by swelling tide,
To conquer where they must,
To care for those who trust,
And plant the seed of Nation strong,
In noble deed and righted wrong.

Father of all, stir every heart;
Let men at home act well their part.
Shall we let wrong oppress,
And never seek redress,
Nor drive away the ills that slay?
For men fall prey from day to day.

But hold our hands from bloody fray,
Let armed bands be kept in stay,
For battles may be fought
And never blood be sought,
While wise men right with vote and voice,
With pens indict the evil choice.

Let light divine upon us shine
And self resign to Thy design,
For manhood must prevail,
And greed shall not avail
To take from us in subtle ways
The blood-bought rights of other days.

Father of all, still make us one;
Let man meet man and love atone
For errors of the head,
And ills to which they led;
Blend ev'ry mind and diverse hand
For one great whole, a righteous land.

The Lost Emigrants.

R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER VI.

Despite the busy days of the vessel's unlading and the erection of temporary shelter, those most deeply concerned in laying a secure foundation for a peaceful and prosperous colony found time to meet together in earnest deliberation.

There were assembled the next morning representative members, male and female, of the several churches, as well as grave and thoughtful persons who had made no religious profession.

After a prayer Mr. Gray arose and said: "Fellow-islanders—Providence has seen fit to place us on this rock in the great ocean. How long we shall stay no man knows. Long ago Plutarch declared that 'a city can sooner be built without any foundation to fix it on than a commonwealth be constituted together without any religion; or, being constituted, be preserved.' Surely, the success of this colony, therefore, depends on its resting on the granite basis of religion.

"We, however, represent several denominations. In union is strength; in division, weakness. It is clearly impossible that we can make any headway in our divided state. I emphatically favor a Christian union."

Prof. Fergus: "The fullest success is impossible with a divided church. The efficiency and success of Protestantism is greatly weakened by its divisions. If believers were one the world would be for Christ before the close of this century.

"Man has a twofold nature. He has a body. Let him care for it. He has no right to starve it. He has a soul. It has hungered in all ages; it does now, and will to the end of the world, hunger for God and immortality. It is worse than foolish; it is criminal, to starve it.

"Divided we will perish by starvation. Self-preservation demands a union."

"But how," said Mr. Smithson, "is a union to be effected? It would be very pleasing to me to have you all turn Baptists. And Mr. White, no doubt, would like to see you all become Methodists. In fine, we each want you to come over to us."

"No," said Mr. White, "I do not ask you all to come over to me. I propose, more generously, to abide by the decision of the majority."

"How would that do in the state you came from?" inquired Fergus. "The majority there is, I believe, on the side of irreligion. The fact is, the majority of religious people were overwhelmingly against Jesus in his day, and has always been on the wrong side. It would take us, with all bodies of professing Christians, over to Romanism at once."

"If you will allow a word from me," said Miss Clarkson, "I will say that it is clear that we must each give up something for the sake of union. We can't go all the way to you, nor can you come all the way to us. But as it was the dying wish and prayer of our Savior that we be one, we are in duty bound to come all the way to him. The nearer to him, the nearer to each other; and in perfect union with him there will be no divisions among us; and we will be 'perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment,' as Paul exhorts."

Whereupon Dr. Andral said: "I thank Miss Clarkson for her noble words. They shed a flood of light on the path of duty. If we love our sects more than Christ we will hold to them and magnify denominational distinctions. Listen to the words of Paul: 'Whereas, there are among you envying and strife and divisions; are ye not carnal and walk as men? For while one saith I am of Paul, and another I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?' How can we expect aught but the condemnation of the Almighty for our divided state when his inspired apostle denounces it in such severe terms?

"How can we become one? By giving up our cherished creeds. They are man-made, and, like all his works, fallible. Some of them teach a fatality as deadening as ever taught in pagan Stoicism or Mohammedanism. Some teach a total depravity—a phrase not once found in the Bible—which does not exempt even infants from the divine wrath. Some teach that Jesus died to reconcile an angry God to man, while the Bible (2 Cor. 5:18-20) teaches that Christ died to reconcile man to a loving God. In short, creeds become outgrown and require revision, and always will, even the best of them. We might proceed to make another, but it would be far from perfect. Let us put aside all of these for Christ's sake, and simply take the infallible Scriptures, and trusting in Jesus and his Word we cannot be led astray."

Mr. Smithson, rising, said: "I am glad to see the way our convictions are carrying us. We cannot exalt the Savior and his authority too much. I now see that my suggestions at the beginning of the meeting were hasty and ill-considered."

"Amen! to that," said White. "And mine, proposing a majority rule, were just as unwise. Let Jesus rule, 'For one is your Master, even Christ.' "

Mr. White was followed by Prof. Fergus, who said: "I am greatly pleased with the trend of the views given. The partisan bias that would hold us away from the unity that the Savior would have finds no place among us. Nor should it, for when men love Jesus and his Word, and each other, how can they stay apart?

"We all of us love the old denominations of which we have been members. That is right. Our willingness to unite together is not because we love our old affiliations the less, but Christ the more.

"And now I want to submit a resolution for which I think we are ready:

" 'Trusting in the Savior, we will endeavor to unite on catholic grounds, and will insist on nothing in faith or practice that is not clearly taught in the sacred Scriptures.'

"I need not say to you that by 'catholic' I do not mean Roman Catholic—which is not catholic—but I mean general or common.

"We propose to come together on common grounds; to ask no one to accept in faith or practice only that on which we can all agree."

The resolution meeting with a cordial approval, the meeting adjourned.

The Family Altar.

GEO. A. PATTERSON.

The chief good of the "family altar" is that by assembling the family together in prayer, each member is brought to see and realize the common Fatherhood of God, and a common fatherhood has for its resultant a common brotherhood. It is the things that we have in common that serve as the strongest possible tie to bind our hearts together in family and national love. It is the common joy and the common grief, the common song and the common sigh, no less than the common blood, that bind the family together in such enduring devotion. The soldier boys are bound more closely together as they see themselves wearing common uniforms, bearing common arms, fighting for common interests under a common flag. The attachment between husband and wife becomes more fixed, more inseparable and more beautiful as they grow into a oneness of toil, a oneness of rest, a oneness of hope, and as they behold themselves cradled in a common crib their oneness of life is complete. Even so when the family, with its members, weak and strong, come to the common altar and bow in reverence to a common God. And as they kneel in that profound spell, in that deep devotion, what brotherhood, what fatherhood, thrills the heart of each only he who is taught to kneel at the family shrine can know.

The family altar is a good environment. Aye! more than that. It is a condition without which no man can say with him of olden time, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." I wonder, friends, if the author of "Home, Sweet Home," did not, when a boy, kneel at the family altar. How could he have sung so sweetly of "Home, Sweet Home," while sick and distressed at heart, had he not remembered how, when a lad, casting all his care upon Him, his ruffled soul was hushed to a calm by the words, "Children, let us pray." With Hamlet we must wish in vain that a man "might know the end of this day's business ere it come to him." But he who kneels with his family in prayer can rest assured that no friction nor jar will disturb the peaceful tenor of that home, for he has furnished an ointment for every wound, a cordial for every faintness. The family altar smooths every irritable edge and delivers us from the encroachments which bilious fits often make upon our dispositions and enables us to appeal to the best there is in the character and dispositions of each other. How can I be cruel, how can I speak unkindly, how else than generous to him with whom this morning I knelt in prayer? Such is the benign influence upon the home where family prayer is wont to be made.

But the family altar is of value also because it is an institution of the home, and the home is a dominant factor in the salvation of the world. The wild and mad rush of the boys to the cities and of the girls to the factories is perilous to our homes. It snatches them from parental protection and home influence so early in life that some power must be brought to bear on them for God at the earliest possible age. And the family altar is this power. It can not do otherwise than have great effect on the little child as it sees its parent, in whom it trusts and to whom it looks for protection, bow down in humble reverence to his God. It is said that Hannibal was led to the altar when a mere boy by his father and made to swear eternal vengeance against the Roman Empire, which he never forgot, but which he spent his whole strength and vigor of manhood in executing. Shall we not do as well as the pagan? The future weal of our country, the betterment of our civilization, the salvation of the world, depends very largely upon the way in which we rock the cradle. More characters are formed, kingdoms built, destinies determined in the sacred oratory of a mother's heart than in all the august assemblies ever convened. The family altar, then, not only blesses those who are able to enter into the spirit of the worship, but also blesses those who look upon it. As Christ hung upon the cross he might have more easily prayed in thought, since it must have been an effort for him to speak in that dying moment, than to have prayed audibly. But who can question the great effect it had upon the mob as he spoke: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do?" It had its influence. It is not forgotten. That lasting legacy still lingers about the name of Jesus. Let the parent know that the open declaration of his devotion under all circumstances as seen in his daily waitings at the family altar will not be quickly erased from the minds and hearts of his children. They wander as prodigals, but like the one of whom Christ spoke will return unto the father. Is it not likely that even that boy was nurtured and reared at the family altar? He may wander heedlessly up and down the earth, but with the influence of home hovering about him he cannot rid himself of that still, small voice that whispers to him through all his wicked life, calling him back to the family altar. And as he sits on the edge of his couch after the unholy revelries of the midnight hour, he will think on it—think on it, and as in the story of old, "The dove found no rest for the sole of her foot and returned unto him in the ark."

The Kingship of Self-Control.

Man has two creators—his God and himself. His first creator furnishes him the raw material of his life and the laws in conformity with which he can make that life what he will. His second creator—himself—has marvelous powers he rarely realizes. It is what a man makes of himself that counts.

When a man fails in life he usually says, "I am as God made me." When he succeeds he proudly proclaims himself a self-made man." Man is placed into this world, not as a finality, but as a possibility. Man's greatest enemy is himself. Man in his weakness is the creature of circumstances; man in his strength is the creator of circumstances. Whether he be victim or victor depends largely on himself.

Man is never truly great merely for what he is, but ever for what he may become. Until man be truly filled with the knowledge of the majesty of his possibility, until there come to him the glow of realization of his privilege to live the life committed to him, as an individual life for which he is individually responsible, for he is merely groping through the years.

At each moment of man's life he is either a king or a slave. As he surrenders to a wrong appetite, to any human weakness; as he falls prostrate in hopeless subjection to any condition, to any environment, to any failure, he is a slave. As he day by day crushes out human weakness, masters opposing elements within him, and day by day he recreates a new self from the sin and folly of his past—then he is a king. He is a king ruling with wisdom over himself. Alexander conquered the whole world except Alexander. Emperor of the earth, he was the servile slave of his own passions.—From "The Kingship of Self-Control," by William George Jordan, published by Fleming H. Revell Company.

Guarding thee from every danger;
Far, far the gleaming star
Shows the pilgrim stranger
Know, know, Infant Redeemer, know
Earth shall love thee so, shall love thee so!

Greet, greet the infant sweet,
In the manger, lowly;
Kneel, kneel, and gladly feel
Every impulse, true and holy;
Stay, stay, O glorious ray,
Let the hours move slowly:—
Know, know, Infant Redeemer, know,
Earth shall love thee so, shall love thee so!

Soon, soon, all too soon,
Skies will darken o'er thee,
Light of day fade away
In the night that will come before thee:
Greet, greet, the Savior, sweet,
Let the world adore thee
Know, know Infant Redeemer, know,
Earth shall love thee so, shall love thee so!

What a Two-cent Stamp Will Do.

It may not be out of place to give an illustration of the vast distances a letter may travel on the strength of a 2-cent postage stamp. Suppose one of the girl readers of the Companion to Key West, Fla., has a brother in the Klondike region who has risked all to dig fortune from mother earth, and writes to tell him the news from home. She drops the letter in the post office at Key West and it starts on its long journey.

It does not, of necessity, travel in a straight line to its destination, but must follow the twistings and turnings of the railroads, which have complete charge of it until the northwest corner of the State of Washington is reached. When it arrives at Seattle it has passed through fourteen states, and yet, so far as time is concerned but one-fourth of the journey has been accomplished.

It now takes a sea voyage from Seattle to Juneau, Alaska, and from the latter place is carried, as I have already described, to Circle City. It may be taken from there by friendly hands further into the Klondike country, and finally delivered to the anxious brother, who has been eagerly awaiting the arrival of the next party from the nearest towns in which a post office is conducted, in the hope that some one would bring him a letter.

This letter has now traveled in the neighborhood of 7,000 miles—by railroad, steamboat, stage, horseback, and perhaps dog-sled, —and has been on the road nearly forty days, without a moment's rest.

No profit, in money, accrues to the Government for delivering that letter; indeed, each letter sent into the Klondike costs the Government for transportation many times that amount of postage charged; but in such cases, should we reckon the profit only in dollars and cents?

Should we not consider also the happiness and satisfaction afforded this brother as he sits by his fire, perhaps homesick and lonely, but now with a loving smile illuminating his face as he reads and reads again every word his thoughtful sister has written about home, mother and father, and perhaps of some one else he holds dear? When, finally, he places his treasure under his pillow and seeks rest, he is happier than for many a day; and Uncle Sam, who has contributed so largely to that happiness, does not regret the small pecuniary loss he has sustained.—The Youth's Companion.

Great Lakes.

The enormous traffic of the Great Lakes is well brought out in an article in Ainsliee's Magazine by Arthur J. Stringer, who writes: "The Great Lakes have become a great artery of our richest commercial blood. One-third of the population of the United States is dependent on these lakes for their export and import trade. This waterway taps the richest and most prosperous agricultural territory on this continent of ours, together with our most productive mines, and it is worth while noting that within a radius of 400 miles of Cleveland lies one-half the population of the United States. It is a well-established fact that deep-water transportation is, and necessarily must be, far below the cost of transportation by rail; indeed, it is computed that the cost of water transportation by steam, when the voyage is of any considerable length, is about one-quarter the average cost of transportation by rail, while by sailboat it is only one-eighth of the latter. As this question of transportation determines to a great extent the existence or the non-existence of a possible industry, and enhances or diminishes the value of every article of export in proportion to its efficiency and economy, the battle cry of the West for 'twenty feet of water between Duluth and the sea' is no great problem to account for. In the year 1898 there passed through the Sault Ste. Marie canals no less than 21,234,664 tons of Canadian freight, alone having a value of $200,000,000, while American ships moved some 168,000,000 tons through the same waters for the same length of time.

The Chautauquan's Prize Anecdote.

"Ransom, Smiley, Smith, J. G. Smith, H. H."—and as the professor methodically continued his roll-call, one big, burly arm of J. G.'s red sweater slipped helplessly from its resting-place, the back of the seat.

Blair—dubbed "Ex-razor" for his wit—mentally construed the motion, "Scrub practice—bluff or flunk—bluff probably"—for J. G. possessed a ready tongue that helped him into and out of many a scrape.

Sure enough, Smiley was hardly seated when Smith, J. G., could not quite understand the theory of "Soul Transmigration." "Professor, I think I can explain that to Mr. Smith," and, nugding the next fellow, Blair arose.

"Suppose that Mr. Smith dies. His soul passes into a canary bird that twitters and sings to the delight of all listeners. The bird's soul passes into a thistle that ornaments a deserted backyard. A passing donkey devours the thistle, and as I stroke the donkey's long silky, ears I say: 'Hullo! Smith, old boy. You aren't changed so much after all.'"

Mr. Smith has never had any more difficulty with the theory.—From the Chautauquan for December.

A Chinaman's View of the Germ Theory.

I stepped into a tea house for some tea, and an opportunity to preach. At the table next to me I overheard some elderly men discussing foreigners. Presently one man said: "They know how to doctor; there is Dr. Macklin, I have seen him at work. Every patient that goes to the hospital is stuck with a pin, and the doctor takes a little of the blood and puts it under the microscope and sees just exactly what bug the man has. For," says he, with a very wise look and accent, "everything is caused by a bug, and when they know exactly what bug is in the blood, they know exactly what medicine to give to kill it. It is not guesswork; there can be no mistake. There is a different bug for each disease. Now the malarial bug," he continued, "is a very bad one; the opium bug is very fierce, but the ordinary food bug, causing hunger, does not matter; it's all right."—Frank Garrett, in Missionary Intelligencer.

The Red Box Clew—XIII.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Several days passed, during which Frank and Vega were constantly together. They were critical days in the life of the deaf girl. Slowly but clearly the knowledge came to her that she had her part in the world to play, and that it lay in her power to make it a part of usefulness and happiness. It was hard for her to understand this at first, for she had been taught, more by the actions than by the words of others, that she was excusable from all duties or unpleasant acts. Since her affliction she had been impressed with the deadening idea that nothing was expected of her. She had thought her privation entitled her to the consideration of others, and excused her from showing kindness to them. Like all lives which receive the waters of beneficent kindness, and have no outlet to pour forth their stores to thirsty lands, her life had become a Dead Sea of bitterness and stagnation. At first she did not like the thought of giving to others some of her blessings; she clung to the habit of receiving all with a sour ingratitude. But underneath this crust of false training and evil habit were the warm capabilities of a child's heart. Frank had reached that heart by returning her love for hate; by giving her a kiss for a blow. It was so strange, Vega had lived among Christians all her life, but she had never seen them act in that manner. The Christians she knew got angry and hated each other just as heartily and as spitefully as possible, and, so far from being ashamed of it, they told their friends how they scorned—as if they were not publishing their own disgrace! Vega liked this new way, and she was soon eager to read all about it in the only book that ever advocated such a practice. So, with Frank by her side, she pored over the Bible, and as there were no footnotes in bigger type than the text, explaining that the verses didn't mean exactly what they said, and that loving an enemy meant something else—as there were no "sidelights" to throw shadows on the words, Vega imagined that they meant just what they declared. So did Frank. For they were only children.

Now one morning Vega alighted on this passage: "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Vega said, "There are such strange things in this book! You see I never read in it before, and what I have heard of it—it was like listening to any other book—I never thought about doing anything about it. But now it looks like everything in it is aimed at me! I know I have been awful mean to everybody and hard to get along with. And what does this mean, Frank?—'Be baptized and wash away thy sins.' How does baptizing wash away sins? Isn't baptism just water? and sins are all on the inside."

"I don't know how, only it's so, you know. It says you must call on the Lord, too; I expect that has something to do with it."

"I haven't been baptized," said Vega.

"Vega, wouldn't you like for your sins to be washed away?"

"But I am going to act differently after this. I am not going to be hateful any more. You pray and have your sins forgiven every night, and I will do the same thing."

"But, Frank, my sins have been washed away."

"You mean you have been baptized?"

"Yes—that's the only way the Bible gives."

"I don't see how it does it," said Vega decidedly. "It's only water."

"I suppose God wants us to do something to show that we are in earnest. How could he know we were really sorry, if we just sat around and talked about it? So he picked out something every one can do. Suppose the condition was to make a long pilgrimage: then the lame couldn't be saved; or to paint a beautiful picture: then the blind would be shut out; or to play a fine composition: that would exclude the deaf; or to learn to recite a long passage from the Bible: the dumb couldn't do that. So with nearly every other act that is possible to men: a few are prevented from doing it by disease or something. But baptism—everybody can be baptized, one as easy as another. That's why I believe God picked that out. And—oh, yes!—and it shows how we rise from the dead. We go down into the grave, but we don't stay there, Vega. We come right up again, fresher than when we went down; and baptism shows that, you know."

Frank's long answer covered both sides of the slate. Vega read it slowly, and then said said, "I don't like it, Frank. There are things in the Bible that seem first-rate, such as doing good—and I like the part about the New Jerusalem, too, especially the way it is all fixed up with jasper gates and other pretty ornaments. But I don't think I shall be baptized—I feel that I should hate to be, with the children all craning their necks to see me; and besides Ma never wanted us to join the church till we were old, because we had to have our fun, you know. And Ma would be as mad as a wet hen if I joined now! Besides, what would Clara think if I went and joined before she did? She would charge, I know! And then if I was baptized, I'd feel that something was expected of me. I don't want to be disappointing people."

Frank wrote, "How happy Jesus must have been, after he was baptized, when the dove lit on his head! Oh, Vega, I believe I know a little how he felt. Because, when you slipped, you know, and fell into the brook—"

"Served me right!" cried Vega, blushing.

"Just for a second—may be for two—I was glad. I thought it a good thing, Vega. But then, all of a sudden, I remembered things from the New Testament, and how Jesus used to act when he was mistreated. And it looked like I loved you then in a way

I never had loved before, and I felt like I couldn't do enough for you, to help you and make you happy. And after I had carried you up the bank—I mean when I kissed you—it was just like a dove had flown into my heart, and was nestling there—a dove from God, you know."

For awhile Vega was silent, as she brushed away a tear in a secret manner. Then she said, "I expect God would be awful pleased if I were to be baptized; don't you, Frank?"

"I know it!" Frank wrote.

"And wouldn't the folks dance a jig?" said Vega, whose religion was still wedded to worldly feelings. "And after all, Frank, I wouldn't have to be much different from what I am now. I can't see that other people change, except they go to church and help pay the preacher (some of 'em) and that gives 'em a right to complain of everything. If they have a grudge against a person, they just go on being Indian. If you make one of 'em mad, they'd die before they'd forgive you. That ain't all, either, for they just hand their grievance to their family and keep it a-going, so some of our best members can't be any colder to each other when they're dead. Frank, which does the Bible command the strongest and most flat-footed—to be baptized, or to love each other?"

"I suppose all the commands are on the same footing, one as flat as another."

"Well," said Vega, "either you've got this wrong, or there are heaps of Christians on the ragged edge. I don't know what I'll do about it, Frank. This is serious business."

At last Monday came and drew to a close. Frank had decided several times that she would not go to the covered bridge at four o'clock Tuesday morning to meet that uncanny Nance. Yet, each time her mind was was made up she was troubled by dark fears; here was an opportunity to learn something of her past history—the first opportunity she had been given. She feared to go, yet she feared to ignore the old woman who claimed to be her mother. It chanced, after supper, that she and Ronald were left together in the drawingroom. All the others had gone driving in the carriage. Frank watched the boy as he bent over his book, and at last she made the desperate resolution to confide in him. His face was open and honest; she felt he was worthy of her trust.

THE CHILD JESUS VISITS JERUSALEM.*

Many interesting events transpired during the twelve years that elapsed between the birth of Jesus and the beautiful incident of our present lesson. Only a few, which cluster closely around the new-born child, are narrated in the Scriptures. Luke tells us that eight days after his birth, according to the Jewish law, the holy babe was circumcised and formally given his name, Jesus, according to the instruction of the angel who foretold his birth. At the end of forty days his parents brought him to the temple in Jerusalem to present him to the Lord, as the first-born. It was doubtless a serious tax upon their scant purse to pay the five shekels of redemption money claimed for the child; and when to this was added the offering required in behalf of the mother for her purification, the burden of their poverty was plainly felt. They were unable to bring the larger offering named in the Levitical law, namely, a lamb for a burnt offering, and a dove, or pigeon, for a sin offering. In gracious accommodation to the necessities of the poor, it was permitted to bring a dove for the burnt offering if the lamb was too expensive. Bringing the two gentle birds, therefore, the mother of the Son of God made the offering required, and received the certificate of her cleansing from the priest. Ah, how in his very birth did the Savior "for our sakes become poor!" But these two young pigeons were a sweeter offering to the heart of the divine Father than many costly offerings of the proud and rich in Jerusalem.

The hearts of Joseph and Mary were strangely stirred during this brief visit to the temple by the words of two aged servants of God who had long been waiting for some manifest token of the gracious fulfillment of Israel's hopes in the coming of the Messiah. Simeon and Anna, seeing in the sweet babe on Mary's breast the answer of God to their prayers, glorified God and foretold the wonderful character and saving ministry of the nfant Christ. As they returned to Bethany what thoughts must have surged through their hearts, and what questionings as to the future of this child, around whose cradle such marvels were gathering!

About this time, probably, was the visit of the Magi from the East, as told by Matthew. Already Jerusalem had heard of this strange child of Bethlehem, and the story of the star by which the Magi had been led to seek the new born King of the Jews filled the heart of the infamous Herod with alarm. Directed to Bethlehem they find the holy family, no longer in a stable, but lodging in a house, and opening their treasures they offer, as to a king, their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh. Receiving divine warning against returning to Jerusalem, they take the shortest way to their distant home, leaving the cruel Herod to glut his vengeance upon the innocent little ones of Bethlehem, after he has found his former plot to have been miscarried.

How strange the ways of Providence! To escape the rage of the bloodthirsty king of Judea, it becomes necessary to take the young child away, beyond the bounds of his dominions. But his parents are very poor. How shall they defray the expenses of the journey and find bread among strangers? The hand of God is not shortened. He brings from afar the gold of the East, and doubtless the treasures of the Magi afford the means for the journey to Egypt. Here their stay is but brief, for soon tidings came of the death of Herod and they hastened to return to the land they love. But the presence of Archelaus, so like his father Herod, on the throne of Judea, makes it unsafe for them to reside in Bethlehem, so they go back to Nazareth their former dwelling place and here for thirty years the Savior of the world makes his earthly home. Galilee received its name from "Galil," meaning a circle, and first applied to the twenty cities given by Solomon to Hiram, of Tyre, for service in connection with the building of the temple. Hiram in disgust called them "Cabul," or "disgusting," and the region never recovered from this evil reputation. Filled with a mixed population, Galilee was always despised by the purer blooded Jews of Judea, while Nazareth, as a prominent station on one of the great caravan roads to the East, was made to bear a special reproach. Jesus was henceforth to be known in scorn as the Nazarene.

Of these years at Nazareth, we are afforded but one glimpse. "Only one flower has been thrown over the wall of the hidden garden, and it is so exquisite as to fill us with intense longing to see the garden itself. But it has pleased God, whose silence is no less wonderful than his words, to keep it shut." The Apochryphal Gospels are full of foolish and grotesque stories of Jesus' childhood, nearly all of which are repulsive, and some blasphemous. Written at a time when the religion of the Christ had begun to generate, it is not strange that men should have sought to portray the Christ in colors according to their diseased fancies. "They sought to honor Christ; but no invention can honor him; he who invents about him degrades him." The one event of our lesson is in perfect keeping with the simple, yet wonderful life of the Son of Man.

At twelve years of age, the Jewish boy was supposed to become personally responsible for his own observance of the ordinances of his religion. From henceforth he must attend the great annual feasts at Jerusalem. To a lad trained as Jesus had been, taught daily in the Scriptures of Moses and the prophets, and familiar from infancy with the history and hopes of his people, this first visit to the Holy City was an event of a lifetime. He set forth with his parents, in company with the groupe of Nazareth families, his heart filled with such joy as could only be felt by one whose beautiful youth was unstained by sin, and unperverted by self-indulgence. How lovely must nature ever have looked, when seen through those pure eyes! For, "It needs no history to tell us that this was a lovely boy. The omitted chapters in his young years speak for themselves. No man develops as He did from a rude or from a thoughtless boyhood. It must be a delicate root that throws out so fair a flower." Nazareth lies in a natural amphitheater amid the hills, "like a handful of pearls in a goblet of emerald." The white walls of its houses, the color and fragrance of its olive, fig, orange and pomegranite trees, and the wealth of verdure amid which the city is embedded, combine to make it one of the lovliest spots of earth. Despite the rule of the Turk, it is the most admired place in all Palestine. Passing through the narrow valley that leads down into the plain of Jezreel, the company make their way, in perhaps four days, to Jerusalem. As they approach the city, they break forth into singing, voicing their praise in the songs of Ascents, found in Psalms 120 to 134. How His young voice must have rung forth in ecstacy, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem!"

The days of the Passover feast were spent in the holy services of Israel's law, and the people knew not that the Lamb of God, the True Passover, was among the worshipers. Joseph and Mary knew enough to make them feel a strange awe of this gentle lad, but they did not yet understand the full meaning of what they had seen and heard. How clear was the self-consciousness of Jesus at this time, we know not; but he must have had already some gleams of light thrown upon his future, and begun to wait for the clear voice of his Father to indicate the time to enter upon his life work.

At the close of the feast, the Nazareth company start on their homeward journey. The children, who have been naturally together during their stay in the city, start forth a merry crowd on the return. It was easy to suppose that Jesus was with them, and to feel no anxiety until evening, when at the hour of camping for the night, his absence is discovered. In dismay, Joseph and Mary turn back, searching for him in every company they met by the way. Reaching the city, they visit every place in which they might expect to find a boy, the heaviness of their hearts increasing as their search continues without success. Finally, they turn their weary steps toward the temple enclosure, to make a last effort for the day. As they come near to one of the porches that surround the temple, the voices of some members of the Jewish Sanhedrin, in earnest discussion, greet their ears. Another moment, and they hear the welcome sound for which their hearts have been yearning, the voice of Jesus. He is sitting as pupil at the feet of the doctors of the law, but seems himself to have become teacher; for they are all astonished at the wisdom with which he answers their questions, and asks them others in turn. The authority of love is above that of fear, however, and his mother breaks in upon the solemn scene and gently reproaches him with the anxiety that he has caused them by his absence. His reply shows how elevated had been his thoughts and purposes, and how little they understood his true mission in the world. "How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" These are the first recorded words of the Son of Man. They give us the keynote to his life and prove that he already perceived its true significance. To do his Father's business—to finish the work he had given him to do, was not this his one purpose always?

But the Father's time is not yet. It is as a man, and not a boy, that the Christ is to accomplish his saving work. Back to Nazareth he goes and humbly submits to the authority of his parents, bares his hands to toil and waits the natural development of body, mind and soul unto the statute of full manhood. He "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men." We must be content with this one glimpse of his wonderful youth, but what may we not expect of his menhood from such a glimpse as this.

Pioneer Disciples in the East.

(The first of a series of four articles on the Pioneer Disciples.)

By F. D. Power, Director.

The Eastern beginnings of the people known as the Disciples of Christ were in the Empire State. The first congregation was founded in New York City where—I speak it to our shame—we have made less progress than in any other city in the United States. For many years previous to this churches of a similar order had existed in Glasgow, Dublin, Edinburg, Manchester and at other points in the mother country known as "Churches of Christ." Under date of March 1st, 1818, the New York congregation addressed a letter to churches of like faith and order, speaking of themselves as "the churches professing obedience to the faith of Jesus Christ, assembling together in New York," and giving a brief sketch of their public worship, soliciting that wherein others might differ from them in any matter they would refer to apostolic practice, as they were "disposed to admit that alone as obligatory which can be clearly adduced from the New Testament without aid of sophistry or allusion to the practices of men."

The order which they derived from the law of Christ is given as follows: "We require that all whom we receive into fellowship should believe in their heart and confess with their mouth that Jesus is the Christ, that he died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that upon such confession, and such alone, they should be baptized.

"We hold it to be the duty and privilege of the Disciples of Jesus to come together into one place on every first day of the week. When thus assembled we proceed to attend to all the ordinances which we can discover to be enjoined by the practice of the first churches and the commandments of the Lord and his apostles.

"1. Our elders presiding, we commence our public worship by kneeling down and offering the prayers directed in 1 Timothy 2:1.

"2. One of the elders selects a suitable hymn, in the singing of which all the members stand up and join.

"3. A portion of the Word of God is read relative to the institution of the Lord's Supper, which is observed.

"4. The collection for the poor saints follows.

"5. Previous to the reading of the Holy Scriptures prayer for the Holy Spirit to open the understanding of all present to understand and receive the sacred Word. The reading consists of a chapter in the law, one in the prophets and one in the New Testament, and opportunity for remarks is given.

"6. Exhortation by elders or brethren.

"8. Prayer."

In the evening the church assembled for worship and "the elders or some other of the brethren, approved by the church, declared the gospel to those without." The kiss of charity, the washing of the feet and the entertainment of the disciples "being things, the performance of which arises from special occasions exemplified in the New Testament," they deemed of importance to be attended to on such occaions.

If the duties of their office rendered aid necessary, this church deemed it their duty and privilege to communicate liberally to the elders, as "the laborer is worthy of his hire." In their intercourse with the world they demanded "the righteousness of character before all men, which the Word enjoins as the evidence of being in Christ, and as the recommendation of his religion to mankind." In their relation to each other they were all brethren, "having no distinction in the church except what gifts necessarily create." "The questions and disputations that generally prevail among professing Christians," they declare, "have no place among us; their reasonings and speculations occupy no part of our time. The knowledge of the simple truth declared by the Lord Jesus and his apostles, and the practical godliness arising from that knowledge, are things whereon we desire to bestow our attention."

This church separated from the Baptists in 1816. Henry Errett, father of Isaac Errett, was one of its elders. Barton W. Stone and his associates in Kentucky, in 1804, announced to the church and the world that they took "the Bible alone as a rule of faith and practice, to the exclusion of all human creeds, confessions and disciplines, and the name Christian to the exclusion of all sectarian or denominational designations or names." Thomas Campbell, in Pennsylvania, in 1809, published the famous "Declaration and Address." In 1811 the Brush Run Church was organized as the "first church of the Christian Association of Washington county, Pa.," and the second church at Wellsburg, 1823, and it was not until 1829 that Mr. Campbell separated from the Baptists. It will be seen, therefore, that the New York church was one of the pioneer societies in the reform movement; strictly the pioneer of the pioneers. Among the pioneer workers in the Empire State were Shepard, Benedict, Lowell, Moss, Hayden and Belding.

The church at Danbury, Conn., was founded by members of the New York church. A few thinking men and women in this place in the year 1817 arrived at the same conclusions reached by the great leaders of the restoration movement in Kentucky and Virginia. Levi Osborne was one of this small number. He saw that the Bible taught that the immersion of only penitent believers was Christian baptism, and that human creeds had no place nor authority in the Church of Christ." Mr. Osborne corresponded with them, and in due time made a visit to the city. It became evident that the hand of God was guiding these men to the truth for a great purpose. Osborne was baptized by Henry Errett, and on his return to Danbury baptized his wife and two others. These four rejected all isms and took as their watchword "Let us speak where the Word of God speaks, and be silent where the Word of God is silent." Mr. Osborne acted as presiding officer of the organization until his deauth in 1851. Among the many faithful men, preachers and evangelists who had served for the church during the early period of its 82 years of history, may be named John Abbott, Porter Thomas, A. G. Cummings, Matthew S. Clapp, Ephraim S. Smith, Francis M. Craig and J. I. Lowell. For ten years past E. Jay Teagarden has labored there in word and doctrine.

In 1815 A. Campbell was visiting New York and Philadelphia and Washington, soliciting funds for a Baptist house of worship in Wellsburg, W. Va., but not until 1833 did he make any decided effort to present his views in these cities. That year he preached in New York City, in Tammany Hall and in Mott Street, which is now Chinatown.

The Planter's Dependence on Good Seeds.

Without good, fresh, fertile seeds, good crops are impossible. It is, then, of the most vital importance that you should exercise the greatest possible caution in selecting the seeds you are to plant the coming season. Since you cannot determine their fertility or freshness by sight, the only certain way to insure yourself against worthless seeds is to buy only those that bear the name of a firm about whose reliability there is no question. There are no better known seedmen anywhere, and none who have a higher reputation for integrity, than D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich. Ferry's Seeds have been a synonym for good seeds for many years. Thousands of gardeners who continue to plant them season after season, do so with the full confidence that they will uniformly be found to be of high vitality, and most important of all, true to name.

Ferry's Seed Annual for 1900 is fully up to the standard of former years and will be welcomed by all who have learned to regard it as a thoroughly reliable and practical guide to planting. A copy may be obtained free by addressing the firm as above.

THE METHOD OF JESUS. By W. B. Anthony. Silver Burdette & Co., Boston, New York and Chicago, publishers. Price, $1.25; 264 pages.

This book seeks to set forth an interpretation of personal religion as taught by Jesus, and is both suggestive and helpful. It hardly goes outside of the Sermon on the Mount, but there is no disparaging of other Scriptures. "There is a recognition—not at all aggressively—of the fact that theology in some of its traditional forms is outworn; that mere creeds are losing their charm, and that only the religion that is character and life counts for much to-day." Prof. Anthony writes easily, ardently and with purpose, and will not be read without warm appreciation by thoughtful Christians.

"The Presbyterian Christian Endeavor Manual," by William T. Ellis, containing the C. E. topics for 1900 together with valuable topic thoughts, suggestions and other information, is a convenient vest pocket companion published by the Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Great Physician," is the title of a small book written by E. E. Byrum, to sustain the claim of divine healing of the body from diseases by scriptural quotations and precedents. A careful reading convinces us that many of the quotations are inapt and misapplied. We doubt the propriety of any attempt to maintain in theory or in practice the curing of diseases apart from the science of medicine by any person or persons in or out of any church. This book, however, is published by the Gospel Trumpet Company, Moundsville, W. Va., and may be had at 50 cents per copy; paper, 20 cents.

"A Bible Year" is the title of a very helpful handbook on how to read the Bible through with profit during the year. Each day's portion is indicated briefly, for each week, separately followed by suggested themes for meditation, one for each day, and, if time permits, suggestions for further reading and study. The author says that nearly ten thousand persons enrolled their names in this simple course of Bible reading for the year 1899 and we trust that ten thousand times that number will read it by the same method this year 1900. The book may be had of the Christian Endeavor World Publishing Company, Boston, Mass., at 35 cents per copy.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

The New Lippincott for January begins a significant series of stories on Mormon Life, by Mrs. J. K. Hudson, entitled "The Third Wife."

Thirty-two authors, ten illustrators and eight photographic artists contribute to the excellent January issue of The Ladies' Home Journal.

Two of the leading serial features of Scribner's for 1900 begin with the January number; they are "Tommy and Grizel," by J. M. Barre, and "Oliver Bromwell," by Theodore Roosevelt.

Frank Leslie for January has a comprehensive article on "America at the Paris Exposition," by the Hon. Ferdinand W. Peck, Commissioner General for the United States.

The Ledger Monthly for January has a double page given to magnificent photographic illustrations of the romantic city of Innsbruck and mountain scenery in the Austrian Tyrol, accompanied by a descriptive article.

The future of Cuba and Porto Rico, the Philippine question, financial legislation in the new Congress, Secretary Root's report, the British reverses in South Africa, and the recent progress of American municipalities are some of the topics editorially treated in the January Review of Reviews.

The January Woman's Home Companion testifies to the appropriateness of the name. It contains many articles of special literary value, chief among which is a masterly discussion of "The Revival of Art and Beauty," by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis.

The conductors of Everybody's Magazine are evidently endeavoring to give their readers a bountiful ten cents' worth. The contents for the January number include seven complete short stories, eight special articles on subjects of current interest or profitable instruction, a little poetry, a little fun, a curiosity page in photographs, some book-buying hints and a hundred and thirty-two illustrations.

The January Century contains a poem by Rudyard Kipling, "In the Matter of One Compass." Dr. Mitchell's story, "The Autobiography of a Quack," ends in this issue, but another serial by Dr. Mitchell will begin in the March number. It is called "Dr. North and His Friends," and one who has read the manuscript calls it "an epitome of the science, culture and common sense of the nineteenth century."

BRAGG.

Nola Gordon Bragg, the beloved wife of R. B. Bragg, was born in Tennessee, 1865. She was married at Kennett, Mo., in 1885 and died at Pullman, Wash., Nov. 11, 1899. She rejoiced in life because of the dear ones God had given her, and desired above all things else to see them safe in Christ. Her death was a triumph of Christian faith. In the hour of separation she exclaimed, "It is a glorious thing to live, but more glorious to die." GEO. E. BARROWS.

BROOKS.

Andrew H. Brooks was born Oct. 5, 1863 in Seneca County, New York. He came with his parents to Michigad when four years old. At 21 years of age was converted and united with the M. P. Church at Burton, but later saw fit to put his membership in the Church of Christ at Owosso. He was married to Jennie M. Bradley, Dec. 3, 1885. To them was born four children, three of whom have preceded him to the better land. At his death he was a charter member of the Church of Christ of Durand, Mich. He departed this life Dec. 7, 1899. Aged 36 years, 2 months and 2 days. He leaves behind him a devoted wife and little daughter to mourn their loss.

CURTIS.

Mrs. Susan S. Curtis was born in Putman County, Ohio, Feb. 22, 1838, and died Dec. 14, 1899. She leaves a daughter and two sons to mourn her departure. She accepted Christ when 21 years of age, but went back to the world. About four years since she returned to Christ and has lived a consistent Christian life, dying in the blessed hope of heaven. S. A. STRAWN.

MONAHAN.

Susannah Margaret Jackson was born April 10, 1839, in Marshall County, Ill., and departed this life December 17, 1899. She became a Christian at the age of 16 years. Her parents were instrumental in helping to organize the first Church of Christ in Marshall County. She was married to James Monahan in 1864 and has lived in Saunemin, Livingston County, since 1874. She was the mother of five children, all of whom survive her and with the husband mourn the loss of a devoted christian mother. She was a faithful member of the C. W. B. M. and for years worked for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. "She rests from her labors and her works do follow her."

M. E. MONAHAN.

TODD.

"He is not dead, but sleepeth." Riley Todd departed this life Nov. 2, 1899, near his home at Fairmount, Kansas, and was interred in Stranger Cemetery. Bro. Todd was born in Clay County, Mo., March 13, 1830; age, 69 years, seven months and 14 days. He was the son of William Todd, of Platte County, Mo., and one of a family of 10 children, of whom five survive him. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his loss, but our loss is his and heaven's gain. He was always ready for all good work. Some of his last words of warning were, "Be ye ready." The end came suddenly and peacefully; the loved ones sorrow, but not as those who have no hope. "We will meet again." Written by his daughter, "SUSIE."

WILLIAMS.

Elder Martin J. Williams was born in Tennessee, April 23, 1825, and died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Luther Dye, in Boulder, Colorado, Dec. 11, 1899; aged 74 years, seven months and 18 days. He became a Christian when 18 years old, and at 20 began telling publicly the story of Christ and his love. He labored in word and doctrine at Mulkeytown, Jeffersonville, Plumbfield, Aver and other points in Southern Illinois, and one year at Bryan and adjacent points in Texas. He came to Colorado Springs, Col., in 1885. Three years ago he moved to Colorado City, being one of the charter members of this congregation and its senior elder. Bro. Williams was married three times; the last time to Miss Elizabeth A. Crim, of Franklin County, Ill; Elder Wm. L. Crimm, a brother of the bride officiating. Owing to a complication of physical ailments, Father Williams has been unable to preach or perform manual labor for sometime. He was always faithful in all his Christian duties, so far as ability would permit. Church Extension News.

The Board of Church Extension has just mailed its Eleventh Annual Report. It is bound in the November-December number of Business in Christianity.

Though this is but the Eleventh Annual Report, the receipts from all departments mount up to over $64,000. The new receipts, including interest, amount to $47,664. This is a gain of more than 20,000 over last year. There was $206,000 in the Fund on Sept. 30th, 1899.

Nearly $18,000 were received on the Annuity Plan. The Board has now over $20,000 in the Annuity Fund. This Plan has worked so well during the past two years that the Jubilee Convention recommended "that we give special emphasis to the Annuity feature of our Extension work, experience having already demonstrated its extraordinary value."

The report shows a great work done in the loan department. Fifty-eight churches were aided to build. These loans aggregate $53,786. Seventy-three churches were promised aid, aggregating $41,940. These loans were promised in view of the Annual Offering. This is an aggregate of 131 congregations made glad with new homes or the assurance of new homes.

The entire report is a cheerful one from beginning to end, because of gains in all departments. The remarkable thing about our Extension work is that with aiding more than 500 churches not a dollar has been lost on loans.

Send for one of these reports by sending a card to the writer, Kansas City, Mo. It will be mailed you free. Get the inspiration to help raise our Fund to $250,000 by our next national convention.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

The Foreign Society has now 229 men on its pay roll. Twelve new missionaries are under appointment. Others should and will be sent out before the year closes. The need of reinforcement in Japan is very great and very urgent.

As the work in the foreign field is increased the expense will also increase. Every new missionary sent out, every station opened and every native helper employed, adds to the cost of the work. A living work must grow. Supporters must understand that and increase their offerings accordingly.

We are well able to give more than we have ever given for Foreign Missions. The receipts of the Foreign Society last year were about $153,000. This year the society is asking for $200,000. With over a million members it would seem that the request is a very modest one. We are well able to give three or four times that amount without interfering with any other work. The time has come for a long stride in advance.

Waiting for Information.

The following dialogue holds out a bright promise of surcease from groping:

Farmer Dunk. What is this country comin' to?

Farmer Hornbeak. I don't know, just at present, but my son Amzi, who is in the high school, is writin' his graduation essay, and as soon as he gits it finished and delivers it, accompanied by a lot of appropriate gestures that I've seen him practicin' in the barn, I expect to learn all about whither we are driftin'.

A New Arrangement.

"I don't see," said the old man, "why chopping wood isn't just about as good exercise and just as enjoyable as playing golf."

"It is the walking between strokes that makes golf so valuable as an exercise," explained the boy. "That equalizes matters and gives the legs the exercise that they need."

Thus it happened that the old man went out into the yard and placed sticks of wood at intervals all around it, after which he handed the boy an ax and told him to play the full course.

Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove:

Thine are these orbs of light and shade;
Thou madest Life in man and brute;
Thou madest Death: and lo, thy foot
Is on the skull which thou hast made.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man; he knows not why,—
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him: thou art just.

Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, thou:
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine.

Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be:
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they.

Look at the label on your paper. If you are in arrears, please remit and send us the subscription of a new subscriber at the same time. You will remember that this is the plan for doubling our list—every present subscriber to send at least one new one. It looks easy, does it not? It is easy, too, if you really are in earnest about it. With the present excellence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST each present reader ought to find very little difficulty in sending us from one to ten new subscribers. Don't wait, do it now.

Has your church taken up the question of forming a club of subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? Has our unprecedented offer of One Dollar in clubs of twenty-five or more, mailed to individual addresses been allowed to go without notice? Do you realize that publications of anything like equal merit with this journal obtain Two Dollars and Two Dollars and a Half for a year's subscription?

Are you unmindful that ten thousand additional subscribers should be added under this arrangement in order to justify this experiment?

We have made this offer in response to repeated requests from leaders in the church everywhere who have assured us of their conviction that it would result in multiplying many fold the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in their communities and thus aid in the work of strengthening the church by increasing the knowledge and zeal of its members.

It should not be overlooked that in making this remarkable club offer we have not at any point or in any degree lessened the quality of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The enormous advance in the price of paper has induced many publishers to adopt a paper of inferior quality to that previously used in order to avoid a large increase in their expense account on this item. We are using exactly the same paper we have used during the year just passed. New type and new headings have also been purchased. Nothing has been neglected that would tend to keep up the mechanical standard of the paper, although this has been done at largely increased expense.

All we ask in order to confirm this claim is to compare the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with other publications.

In the matter of contents we can truthfully say that our plans have never been so excellent and complete.

The editorial force has been enlarged and our corps of contributors materially strengthened.

Every change which has been made in this respect for the coming year has been with a view to added excellence and not towards cheapening the quality of our pages.

It is apparent to every one that while it is a simple and easy matter to fill a weekly paper with something, the best literature can be furnished only by securing the best talent; and this means expense.

We have done our part. We are furnishing a representative journal that will suffer none by comparison with those of any other religious people. You will have neither to blush nor apologize for its appearance, nor yet for its contents, when examined by your religious neighbors. It believes in progress and growth; it shows its faith in this respect by its works.

Unless, however, the congregations do their part this effort to have a Christian paper in every home will not succeed.

You may recognize the remarkable liberality of this offer, so may your neighbor; but unless some one takes up the matter vigorously and brings it to the attention of the church membership, the offer will not accomplish the full limit of possibility.

Let some committee or some person be selected, and selected at once, to put the plan into execution. A statue is a beautiful thing, but it lacks the breath of life. A machine may be perfectly adapted for a certain work, but a man to guide and operate it is necessary. Our offer is a splendid opportunity, but it must be seized and used.

Very many of our friends have written to us expressing their appreciation of the fact that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is exceedingly cheap at the regular subscription price of one dollar and fifty cents. They have urged us not to lower the price on any conditions because they have doubts about our ability to maintain the quality at any lower rate.

We want to say earnestly and positively that we will maintain the quality. As to whether our one-dollar club rate will become anything more than an experiment we cannot say at this time; it depends on how promptly and earnestly the churches take up the matter of raising clubs.

Try thoroughly for one year the plan of having the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extensively read by those who attend your Bible-school, Christian Endeavor Society, midweek prayer-meeting and by the church membership generally; if at the close of the year you do not find that the work has improved in every desirable way, you may say it is a failure and give it up. But it will not be a failure; we are positive that the results would be amazing, and as gratifying as amazing. Don't leave this matter to chance. Have some plan arranged and some one selected at once to take up and push the matter.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The expected crisis in Natal has come and has resulted in a British victory. General White has entirely retrieved his reputation, and his former defeat before Ladysmith has been forgotten in his present achievement. With Buller at the Tugela River, only fifteen miles from Ladysmith, the Boers felt the necessity of forcing the crisis at the besieged town before it could be relieved. Accordingly, Gen. Joubert strengthened his fortifications at the Tugela, leaving such obstacles that Buller could not reach Ladysmith within three days, and went to aid the besieging force in a decisive attack on the town. As heretofore, the Boer forces proved to be less effective on the offensive than on the defensive and after a battle of seventeen hours they were driven back, the British being still in possession of the town. The losses on both sides were heavy, but have not yet been reported in detail. The official reports will probably show that it was the hardest battle of the war. Meanwhile, Gen. Buller only fifteen miles away was unable to give any aid more effective than a futile "demonstration," which failed in its purpose of calling back Joubert's forces. As the London Times cautiously observes: "There may be sound reasons for Gen. Buller's proceedings, but at present they are not obvious." The iron is now hot for a decisive blow. If Buller can contrive in some way to get over, under, through or around the intrenchments which bar his path at the Tugela River, a single battle in co-operation with White may relieve Ladysmith from its seige of two months and a half, and turn the tide of the war from defeat to victory. At any rate the situation is decidedly more hopeful for the British.

With the reopening of Congress after the Christmas recess, the center of activity and interest shifts from the House of Representatives to the Senate. The House will have comparatively little business of importance during the next few weeks. The debate on the Senate financial bill was opened on Thursday by a speech by Mr. Aldrich, which was rather an exposition of the bill than an argument for it. The Philippine resolutions which were presented before the recess are standing somewhat in the way of the financial debate. Senator Hoar insists upon expounding and defending the Pettigrew resolution at great length before he will allow the Senate to proceed with other business. Mr. Beveridge, the new senator from Indiana, who visited the Philippines last summer and received an appointment on the committee on Philippine affairs, has presented the following resolution, on which he will speak Tuesday: "That the Philippine Islands are territory belonging to the United States, that it is the intention of the United States to retain them as such, and to establish and maintain such governmental control throughout the archipelago as the situation may demand." During the two or three weeks (or possibly more) which the consideration of the financial bill will consume, there may be expected an intermixture of speeches for and against expansion. Reports from the field indicate that the Tagals need encouragement. They will get it when Hoar and Pettigrew begin. Meanwhile, the question of Mr. Quay's right to a seat in the Senate on the governor's appointment, and consideration of the charges of bribery against Senator Clark, of Montana, are not progressing very rapidly toward a settlement. Both questions would be decided quickly enough on the evidence in hand in any field but politics.

The establishment of a permanent government for Hawaii is one of the immediate duties which confronts the present Congress. Already a bill has been reported in the Senate by Mr. Cullom, providing for the institution of a government practically the same as that in force in our territories. This will probably be taken up for consideration immediately after the financial bill. Presumably Senator Cullom's bill represents the view of the administration. Application has already been made by certain Hawaiians for a representation in the Republican National Convention this year, and the national committee has suggested that one or two representatives be chosen, "whose eligibility shall be passed upon when the convention meets." Those who oppose the granting of territorial government to Hawaii point to its small proportion of Anglo-Saxon population as a proof of its permanent unfitness for statehood. Of the 124,234 inhabitants of the island, only 5,200, or about 3 per cent., are Americans and British. It is noteworthy that those who opposed the annexation of Hawaii are in general opposed to territorial government, and favor governing it as a dependent colony. There is nothing inconsistent about this, but it reveals the real principle which underlies the anti-expansion position. It is not a sense of the injustice involved in encroaching on the territory of weaker and less civilized races, and forcing upon them our laws and institutions; for if so the anti-expansionists would not so unanimously oppose giving the rights of territorial government to Hawaii. The motive is rather a conviction that these races are by nature permanently incapable of governing themselves according to such institutions as prevail in the civilized world —a belief in the permanent impossibility of civilizing the uncivilized. On this basis the position expressed by the Springfield Republican, and shared by many so-called anti-imperialists, is entirely consistent—that the United States ought never to have annexed Hawaii, but, having annexed it, ought to hold it by an imperialistic goverment as a dependency.

The abuses of the pension system were bad enough befor the late war, but it is safe to say that military history shows no parallel to the scramble for pensions which has followed the war with Spain. The total number of enlistments for the Spanish and Philippine wars was 342,000. Deducting for re-enlistments, we have, approximately, 300,000 men. Already there have been more than 25,000 applications for pensions. The banner regiment in the competition is the Ninth Massachusetts, of whose 1,200 men 650 have filed applications. In part, this is an evidence of the demoralizing effect of the spectacle which the pension bureau has afforded during the last quarter of a century. The national treasury has been robbed by so many claims, virtually if not technically fraudulent, that a great part of the public seems to have entirely lost conscience in the matter. But even more than this, it is an evidence of the pernicious activity of the pension attorney, who, like the shrewd business man that he is, does not wait for trade to come to him, but goes after the trade and creates the demand which it is his business to supply. Investigation has developed the fact that a regular system is in operation. The pension attorneys secure daily from the war department the lists of the killed, wounded and diseased. By getting access to the enlistment papers, which was not refused to them until recently, they learn the name and address of the nearest relatives of the unfortunate ones. Upon this basis they proceed to secure authorization to file a claim and work up the case. The relatives thus solicited seldom refuse their consent, and the consequence is, as above stated, that already, less than two years after the outbreak of the war, one out of every twelve enlisted men has applied for a pension.

As announced last week, the Drainage Canal, by which the sewerage of Chicago is to be turned into the Illinois River and through it into the Mississippi, has been opened. Fearing an injunction which would prevent the opening, the work was done secretly and without the sanction of the Illinois state authorities which was legally necessary. The state authorities had refused to sanction the act, not because they objected to it, but because they did not care to be responsible for it in the face of other people's objections. But the drainage canal is now an accomplished fact whatever legal contests may grow out of the claim that it is a pollution of a public water-way and hence a nuisance. The actual effects remain to be seen, but in so far as the case could be decided without actual trial, it occurs to us that the time to decide it was not after spending thirty-three millions upon the canal and when it is on the eve of opening, but fifteen years ago when the project was first set on foot. There has been plenty of agitation and plenty of vague and general claims that the water supply of St. Louis and other cities on the Mississippi would be polluted, but there have been no legal measures taken to have the thing tested and decided. The canal may perhaps be dangerous; we can't tell. But to head it off by applying for an injunction the night before it is opened, strikes us as an eleventh hour proceeding—and 11:59 at that. The completion of the Canadian canals whereby a channel is afforded for vessels of 14 feet draught from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic by way of the St. Lawrence River, causes us to think again seriously about a ship canal through our territory from the lakes to the sea. The Erie canal will not do. It has been a valuable enterprise, but an expensive one and its history of nearly a century does not encourage the hope that the best route for a ship canal is by way of the Mohawk Valley and Hudson River. The only alternative is to make it by way of the Drainage Canal and the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to the Gulf of Mexico.

The Mazet committee, which has been investigating the corruption in New York City politics, has finished its work. The work of probing and digging in the mass of rottenness known as the New York municipal government (and we in St. Louis speak these words with a due sense of the shortcomings of ous own Council and police force) stirred up several new smells from the same old filth, which everybody knew was there even before it received this new airing. The same facts which the Lexow committee disclosed as the result of Dr. Parkhurst's agitation, have been disclosed again. There can be no surprise at them. The surprise is that nobody seems to care particularly about it. The fact is that the Mazet committee was a committee for investigation and not for reform, and in municipal politics, especially in New York, it is a long journey from the former to the latter. When Croker was called before the committee he suggested that it also investigate Platt. The suggestion was not half bad, considering that Croker made it. But the committee did not investigate Platt. In fact it was Platt's committee. The committee has not published a report, but two of its counsel have given out a report embodying some recommendations which aim to cut the root of a good deal of the corruption. The recommendations are in the form of suggested amendments to the new charter of Greater New York, some of which are as follows: (1) That the mayor's power of absolute removal be continued through his whole term, instead of limited to the first six months; (2) that the mayor's term of office be reduced from four years to two; (3) that the municipal assembly be organized with only one house; (4) that judicial candidates be prohibited from contributing to campaign funds. The committee disavows this report and will probably try to counteract it by publishing a counter-report. Gradually and inevitably the impression grows into a conviction that the power which molded the charter, namely, Mr. Platt, is also the power which molds the Mazet committee and will mould its report, and that in neither instance can high-minded patriotism and virtuous desire for honest government be assigned as the sole motive.

Goebel, the defeated candidate for the Kentucky governorship, has been elected president of the senate in the legislature of that state, a position which gives him a substantial advantage in his contest for the gubernatorial seat. The contest has been carried to the legislature and submitted to a committee chosen by lot from the members of the legislature. The committee which is to judge the case of Goebel is composed of nine Democrats, one Republican and one Populist. The case of Beckham vs. Marshall, for the lieutenant-governorship is being tried before a committee of nine Democrats and two Republicans. Even this does not leave Gov. Taylor's case entirely hopeless, for it will be remembered that there was a Democratic majority in the Board of Election Commissioners which decided the contest in his favor in the first place. In making his claim for the governorship, Goebel specifies nine points by reason of which the election should be decided in his favor. They are all very dubious points, which may or may not be true. But even if they are true, they are all technicalities, such as tissue ballots and the mis-spelling of a name. It is a noteworthy fact that he does not even profess to claim that a plurality of the people wanted him to be governor, or that the Republican irregularities, if there were any, thwarted the popular will.

Governor Roosevelt's message to the New York Legislature was awaited with interest and received with satisfaction. His treatment of the subject of trusts and governmental control of them is particularly interesting. Mr. Roosevelt has the advantage of being a rich man himself, and is therefore able to look at the questions from the capitalist's point of view. He has also the far greater advantage of being a man of the people, upon whose reputation for public and private honesty there has never been a breath of suspicion. He can, therefore, look at the question with an eye single to the public good. The restriction of unlawful combinations for the restraint of trade can never be accomplished, he says, by making war upon wealth or by attempting to fix an arbitrary limit to the accumulation or combination of capital. In general, the accumulation of a fortune represents some actual service performed. There are exceptions, as in the cases where men have become rich through speculation, but in general it will hold good that wealth is society's payment (often unwilling) for services rendered. The remedy for unlawful combinations of capital operating to the detriment of society is to be found first in publicity. The public has a right to know what a corporation is doing, what it possesses and what it is earning, how much of its stock represents property, how much good will and how much water. In this way the force of public opinion and the state's power of taxation would together be able to correct abuses. A trust cannot operate successfully except in comparative secrecy; so turn on the light. Those who are standing in the way of reasonable reform along this line on the ground that many of the reformers demand unreasonable things, will do well to remember Gov. Roosevelt's statement, that the "adoption of what is reasonable in the demands of reformers is the surest way to prevent the adoption of what is unreasonable."

A GREAT ISSUE.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—The superb series of articles on "Actual and Formal Remission of Sins," by A. B. Jones—just concluded in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—and J. B. Briney's rejoinder from time to time, must have elicited unusual, even profound interest on the part of every careful reader. As the large majority of your subscribers, however, have more than likely neglected to follow closely the lengthy discussion; and as the question at issue is of great moment, will you not, yourself, give in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the gist of the contention in a resume of the claims made by each of the writers. At the same time will you state which of the two you consider nearest to the true scriptural teaching. In his main proposition Bro. Jones certainly finds himself in good company, when he can quote Alexander Campbell as having said: "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, yet he had no solemn pledge of the fact, no formal acquittal, no formal purgation of his sins, until he washed them away in the water of baptism." It is my humble opinion that this particular question which Bro. Jones has so masterfully and painstakingly presented should not be suffered to drop out of notice, but be kept to the front and pressed to an issue if the position be correct according to the Scriptures. Take our own people and the Baptists—when these two great bodies come to stand together on this ground, all minor shades of doctrinal differences may be expected to readily adjust themselves, and such a stride towards the solution of the union problem will have been made as the cause of Christ has never yet taken. It is safe to say that our people have been more misunderstood and misquoted, by reason of supposed or actual legalism along this line, than in all else combined. Do you not feel, Bro. Garrison, that it is possible for us to reach a common agreement among ourselves at this point, and that the time is even now at hand for us to set ourselves right in the eyes and understanding of every enquiring person? This, not for our sakes, but for God's glory, and because of the profession we make as the exponents of the truth of God and of his Christ touching the essential three—faith, repentance, baptism. W. P. KEELER.

Chicago, Dec. 16, 1899.

The discussion to which our brother refers presented a fine illustration of critical acumen and dialectic skill. The articles, however, during the latter part of the discussion, spread themselves out over so large a field as to render more or less vague the real issue between the two brethren. Is there a just distinction between real and formal remission of sins? Bro. Jones affirmed, Bro. Briney denied. In this distinction, Bro. Jones finds the the harmonization of those passages of Scripture which are quoted on different sides of the question as to whether baptism is for the remission of sins. Bro. Briney finds the needed reconciliation of these passages by the principle of inclusion or induction. The latter is the ground that has generally been held by the Disciples in their discussions with their religious neighbors.

Bro. Jones is undoubtedly correct in drawing a distinction between civil government and divine government. He would displace the legal element by the paternal feature of the divine government. He is undoubtedly right in laying emphasis upon the motives and purposes of the heart, or upon the spiritual side of conversion. In holding that God's attitude toward the sinner in the matter of forgiveness is determined by the sinner's attitude toward God and toward his own sins, rather than by any external act which the sinner may perform, he seems to us to be reasoning in harmony, not only with true philosophy, but with true biblical theology. On the other hand, Bro. Briney's contention, that baptism is not to be separated from faith and repentance, as a thing apart, but is to be regarded as an overt, decisive act of faith and penitence, seems to find abundant support in the New Testament. Baptism is nothing when stripped of these spiritual prerequisites.

The discussion between the two views herein set forth has come up in many forms during our history. There have always been leading men among us who sought refuge from the cold logic of certain others, either by making the distinction which Bro. Jones makes, and which Alexander Campbell seems to have made, or by falling back on the "uncovenanted mercies" of God. This class of men claim that those who reach the logical conclusion that only those who have been immersed have received remission of sins, omit certain very important elements from their logical formula, such as the coordination of ability and responsibility, the confusing nature of the contradictory teaching on the subject of baptism, thwarting honest intention in many cases, and the superior value, in the sight of God, of those psychical conditions which alone give significance to baptism.

We could not undertake, in the limits of a single article, to present a full and satisfactory digest of the discussion between these two brethren. We believe, however, that the solution of the problem with which they were wrestling—the distinction, if any, between real and formal remission of sins—is to be found in a clearer mutual understanding of what is involved in the phrase "remission of sins." We have felt for some time that there was hidden in this phrase the secret cause of whatever difference of opinion may exist among us, and largely between ourselves and other religious bodies, as to the relation of baptism to the remission of sins. If the phrase is understood to involve the cessation of sin, the putting away of the love of sin and practice of sin, this is a moral process, and of course involves moral means. Faith and repentance are the spiritual conditions by which sins are sent away in this sense of the term remission. If remission of sins, however, be understood to signify simply the element of forgiveness, or the remission of the guilt of past sins, then the act of pardon may be declared or set forth in an overt act, like baptism. Does not the remission of sins include both these meanings? We throw out this hint as pointing toward a possible solution of the question involved.

We have spoken of the valuelessness of baptism when stripped of its spiritual requisites—a position in which all of us would agree. But can we speak with equal truth of the valuelessness of the spiritual prerequisites—faith and repentance—without baptism? No one would affirm this. All would agree, however, that a faith and a repentance that faltered at the command to be baptized, knowing it to be a command of Christ, would be spurious; but it is well known that many real, genuine believers, whose lives of loyalty and sacrifice show them to be such, have never been immersed, not because of any spirit of disobedience, for many of these would die for Christ, but because they have been taught that immersion is not necessary to baptism. Is the kingdom of God of such a nature that one is debarred from it through an intellectual mistake? This is another form of the same question which these brethren have been discussing.

As to the possibility of reaching a practical agreement among ourselves on this subject, it may be said, we think, that we have reached a practical agreement—that is, a working basis on which all of us are agreed. This basis may be stated as follows:

Baptism is a command of Christ by which believing penitents openly surrender themselves to the leadership of Christ, and in obedience to which they secure the divine assurance of forgiveness of sins and recognition as members of the Church of Christ. It is, therefore, the duty of all penitent believers to arise and be baptized, and claim the divine promise of forgiveness and the gift of the Holy Spirit. So far, perhaps, there is practical unanimity. It is only when we go beyond this practical working basis and enter the theological or philosophical aspects of the question that differences of opinion emerge. It is entirely proper that these aspects of the subject be discussed, but too much importance should not be attached to these differences of opinion. The things on which we agree contain all that is vital on the subject.

The two extremes to be guarded against on this subject, as it seems to us, are (1) the legalistic view of baptism, in which its gracious adaptation to human needs is lost sight of in the emphasis laid on it as a law of pardon, and as an invariable prerequisite to salvation, and (2) the purely ritualistic view, which regards it merely as a ceremony having no necessary connection with the conscience, or with faith, and having nothing to do with the soul's relation to Christ, nor with the knowledge of forgiveness. If we avoid these two extremes and continue to point out the plain pathway to forgiveness and membership in Christ's body, we will escape both Scylla and Charybdis.

Hour of Prayer.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO IN MY PLACE?

(Luke 9:23-27; 1 Pet. 2:21-25.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Jan. 17.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Jesus Christ is not only the Savior of men, but He is the Pattern, the Ideal, to which our lives are to be conformed. We cannot do better, in every question of conduct which confronts us, than ask ourselves what Jesus would do if He were in our place, and act accordingly.

We are indebted to Jesus Christ for two things of inestimable value—a perfect life, and the power by which, through faith in Him, we may realize that life. Christians have always thought of Christ as a Savior from past sins and the One through whom we are to enjoy life eternal in the world beyond; but they have too often overlooked the fact that He is also the pattern of our daily lives, and that His character is the ideal toward which we are to continually struggle. Especially has it been overlooked by many in the past that we are to carry the spirit of Christ into all our daily acts, into whatever pursuit may engage our energies, and into all the crevices and corners of our lives.

It was this thought, that Christ expects us to follow Him in all the affairs of life, and the practical illustration of this thought, that gave Mr. Sheldon's book, "In His Steps," such a world-wide reading. Thousands of Christians, even, have been made to ask, Is it really true that we can apply Christianity to all our callings, and do as He would have us do, or as He would do if He were in our place? Strangely enough, this thought has been startling, as if it were not the plainest teaching of the New Testament. A theoretical Christianity that does not affect the conduct and the daily life, has no sanction in the Word of God, any more than it has in reason or experience.

Take this condition of discipleship laid down in the passage above cited: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me." Can anything be more transparently clear than that? Following Christ means self-denial and daily cross-bearing. It means the merging of our lives into the will of Christ, and losing them in Him: "For whosoever would save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it."

If any one should think that this is a hard, forbidding kind of life, it is only because such an one has not tried it. There are compensations that he knows not of. There is a peace, passing all understanding, and a vision of things spiritual and eternal which far outweigh the sacrifices involved in following Christ. For what He would have us deny ourselves of is not any innocent joy nor anything which ministers to our real happiness but only that which mars the body, soul and spirit, and wars against our highest interests.

Where many of us turn back from following Christ is the point at which following Him involves suffering. We forget what Peter tells us in this lesson, that "hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow His steps." Following His steps! These are the words that furnish the keynote of Mr. Sheldon's book. Do they furnish the keynote to our lives? If not, why not?

After the words "that ye follow His steps" is the following statement: "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, threatened not; but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Perhaps there is no one respect in which it is more difficult to follow in His steps than in declining to return evil for evil, reviling for reviling. Maligned, misrepresented, misunderstood, falsely condemned, Jesus committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Conscious of His own innocency and purity of motive, He could well afford to rest His case with the righteous judgment of God. Would that we might all learn this lesson of the Master and follow in His steps in this respect! Will the readers of this Hour of Prayer department join with the editor in the resolve to follow the Master more faithfully in doing good for evil, and in praying for those who despitefully use us?

Is it too much that Christ is asking of us, to follow in His steps, "who His own self bore our sins in His body on the tree, that we, having died unto sin, might live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed?" Does not this fact lay us under infinite obligations to follow Him even unto death? Surely, if ever a leader had a right to expect loyal followers, it is Jesus of Nazareth, "who loved us and gave Himself for us."

PRAYER.

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father: We thank Thee that Thou hast come so near to us in the person of Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. We thank Thee that in Him Thou hast made the way of duty plain, and that through Him Thou dost give strength to all who desire to follow Him in newness of life. We thank Thee for this high ideal of life and of character, which Thou hast set before us in Him who, though clothed in our human nature, lived a sinless life and gave Himself in unselfish service for the world's redemption. Though we have confessed His name and have taken Him to be our leader, we confess that we have followed Him at too great a distance, and we desire to renew our allegiance to Him and to follow more closely in His steps. Give us grace, we pray Thee, so to do, that, suffering with Him here on earth, we may enjoy everlasting life with Him in the world to come. For His name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

What shall be done with the dreary day that brings only drudgery? There are such days, and they must have their office to perform in the beneficent scheme of life. The skies are leaden, the air seems heavy, the tasks seem hard, the mind sluggish, the interruptions are frequent, and life takes on a somber hue. The evening finds little accomplished, apparently, and we feel dissatisfied with ourselves and our work. Such days, we venture to affirm, come to most people, occasionally. Is there any philosophy that will help us to bear them more cheerfully? It is just here that faith comes in—Christian faith—which is the truest philosophy. It reveals to us the true motive of service, which is not happiness, not success, not appreciation of friends, but to do the will of Him that sent us, We can console ourselves with the reflection that we can be faithful even though the skies seem dreary. It is faith that converts drudgery into a royal service, and makes it a sacrament in the building up of character.

A father has a large family of boys to train. He has in his home books, maps, charts, magazines and papers, and he is seeking to develop them intellectually and morally. He encourages them to investigate questions for themselves and form their own conclusions. Some of them do this, and not infrequently reach wrong conclusions, which they are compelled to abandon on the presentation of fuller information. Some others read the books, or listen to their older brothers talk, and are careful to form no opinions contrary to those generally received. In other words, they echo the opinions of others rather than form any of their own by independent thinking. Which of these two classes of his boys, think you, the father most approves? Evidently the former. Is it different with our Heavenly Father and His children? Does not His approbation rest upon those who love the truth and who earestly seek to discover it, even though they sometimes fall into error, rather than upon those who are content to accept those opinions which are most popular or most generally received by others? If there remain truths to be discovered which only fearless investigation can bring to light, there can be no doubt as to the answer to this question.

But on the other hand let no one suppose that it is necessary for him to differ from the commonly accepted view of any subject in order to show his independence of thought. It may show just the contrary, namely, that he is a slave to his desire to be regarded as an original thinker. Many a person, we fear, has been tempted to toy with infidelity and to trifle with the solemn verities of the gospel, under the false impression that he is thereby giving evidence of independence, or freedom of thought. In other words, cowardice sometimes keeps men from accepting an old truth, because it is old, just as it prevents others from accepting a new truth because it is new. The true motive, of course, is to seek the truth for the truth's sake and then speak it in love, whether it meets with approval or disapproval.

One of the most common forms which unbelief takes in our day is a morbid fear that freedom of investigation and freedom of utterance, if the latter runs out of familiar lines, will play havoc with the faith of the people. They who have this fear profess to feel no anxiety about the Bible itself, but they tremble for the faith of the people once they find out that scholars have said thus and so! But if the Bible is not able to hold its own with the common people, against the false theories of its enemies, or the mistakes of its friends, it is a less potent book than we have been accustomed to believe. Trust the Bible. Trust the common sense and honesty of the people. A panic among Christians from fear that some indiscreet remark of some Bible student will overthrow the faith of many can only result from a lack of faith in the ability of the Bible to take care of itself and of the faith of those who read it.

Closely akin to this morbid fear, and prehaps springing out of it, is the disposition, or tendency, at least, to generate suspicion as to certain brethren and their teachings. Any one acquainted with our newspaper literature will recall the fact that there have always been papers and individuals whose special aim it seems to have been to excite suspicion in the minds of the brethren against other brethren and papers. A little study of history, too, will show that such papers and such individuals, however much harm they may have done, always come out in the minority and are themselves discredited. A well-known brother in commending the spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as "catholic, charitable and just," quotes a verse from the lamented Knowles Shaw, the sentiment of which he would commend to the brethren:

> "O be not the first to discover
> A flaw in the fame of a friend,
> A fault in the faith of a brother,
> Whose heart may be true to the end."

In other words, let us be slow to believe injurious reports against our brethren, especially slow in repeating them, and careful to give the most favorable interpretation to the language of a brother, until we are compelled to do otherwise. We are all human, we all make mistakes, but there are very few who, in their hearts, are not loyal to the cause we advocate, and honestly desirous of knowing and speaking the truth. Every brother has a right to be so regarded until his character and conduct prove to the contrary. The supreme heresy, according to the New Testament, is uncharitableness, and it is the one about which many seem to have the least fear and the least caution. It is well to be sound in faith; it is still more important to be sound in charity.

Questions and Answers.

Referring to a recent answer in your "Questions and Answers" department, please explain how a child may have confidence (faith) in Christ, love for him and become converted by a voluntary obedience to his authority without an understanding of first principles? C.

The explanation is to be found in the use of the phrase "first principles" of the gospel. Faith in Christ and love for Him, together with repentance and the willingness to obey, are "first principles." A child may grasp these and become a Christian without being able to understand the relation between faith and repentance or the nature of faith or the design of baptism or the relation of the Holy Spirit to obedience. This is what was meant by our answer. Parents sometimes feel that their children should have intelligent views on these questions before they are fit to be baptized; whereas, many persons whose views are quite correct on these subjects are unfit for baptism, because they are impenitent and unbelieving. It is not clearness of intellectual perception on theological questions that prepares one for baptism, but love for Christ and the desire to be saved by Him from his sins. This a child may have.

Would it be feasible or desirable, in your opinion, for the brotherhood to establish a publishing house of its own for the purpose of advancing the interests of the brotherhood, both spiritually and financially?

A. A. Honeywell.

There would certainly be many advantages in such a publishing house if it were under wise management and was conducted in the interests of the cause of Christ. Whether such a concern, however, would harmonize with a religious body of the character of our own is another question. The only way such an enterprise would be feasible at the present time would be for a large number of men of wealth to purchase for the benefit of the brotherhood all the publishing interests which now exist, and combine them in one publishing house with such branch houses as it might establish in various places. This perhaps is not feasible at the present time, though it would have been an easy matter in the beginning to have started out on that basis. Other religious bodies have found such publishing houses to be sources of strength to them. It is probably more in harmony with the free spirit of our brotherhood to allow every man who wants to do so to establish a publishing house of his own, but there are many disadvantages attending it. Perhaps those who come after us may be able to solve the problem in a way that we cannot now.

Does the Bible support the custom of making collections on the first day of the week to pay the preacher's salary? 1 Cor. 16:1-3 refers to the collections for the poor in Judea and not for the preacher. H. M. Hawn.

Pleasant Grove, Cal.

The passage quoted is interesting as indicating the custom of the Corinthian church and as showing their method of raising money for the poor in Judea, but it is by no means to be regarded as laying down a rule for the churches of to-day by which they are to raise money for any purpose. The New Testament is not that kind of a book, and Christianity is not that kind of a religion. Churches of to-day are free to raise money on any day of the week that is most convenient, and for any purpose that is considered legitimate. Churches generally find it convenient in this age to make their offerings on the first day of the week for the same reason, no doubt, that the church at Corinth did, viz., that that is the day of the week on which the church meets in larger numbers than on any other day. It is entirely legitimate for churches on that day to make their offerings for current expenses, for missionary work, or for benevolent purposes.

A has just been married to B. A has two divorced husbands, neither scripturally entitled to a divorce. B is a nominal member of the church and A wants to be immersed. What must the preacher do? M.

Immerse her on satisfactory evidence of genuine repentance.

Current Religious Thought.

The cultivation of the spirit of benevolent giving is a matter in which most Sunday-schools give very little effective training. The weekly transfer of a copper or two from the parental pocket to the Sunday-school treasury through the passive agency of Willie or Susie, for the purchase of lesson-leaves, cannot be called benevolence. The Biblical World, in a series of editorial paragraphs, makes some good points in this connection. First, the Sunday-school is a function of the church and its expenses should be borne by the church, so that its first thought in its collection could be of benevolence and not of self-support. Second, the interest of the children should be aroused by the choice of a specific object for the benevolence of the school. This would also afford training in the most neglected factor of benevolence, viz., rational choice in the distribution of charity. Third, the following scheme is outlined: "Divide the total amount contributed by the school into three parts, one part to be used for the expenses of the school, the second to be appropriated as a whole to some definite object which has been selected by the school, and the third portion to be kept as a fund from which special appropriations can be made by the school to such various objects as may be presented."

An article in the Journal and Messenger, on Open Communion, states concisely the attitude of the writer, who represents a large class of Baptists, though not all of them, toward the rest of the Christian world. The writer proceeds first to demolish the arguments in favor of open communion and to assert the necessity and scripturalness of the practice of close communion, which has been discontinued already by a considerable part of his own denomination. He adds:

> It is but right to say, however, that a Baptist Church is the only one that can consistently discard open communion. I lay it down as a principle in this matter that churches that interchange letters are justified in intercommunion. In this regard we stand nearly if not entirely alone. We can receive letters from no church (with the exception, perhaps, of the Freewill Baptists), while our letters are current everywhere on the earth, among Christians. A letter from a Baptist Church is received in any Protestant church, so far as I have ever heard. It is not bigotry that prevents us from receiving letters from other churches, but this is the reason: a letter from any Pedobaptist church would leave the question of baptism undetermined, and additional testimony would be required, so that the candidate could not be received on the letter alone. One coming to us with a letter from the "Christian" Church would leave the question of conversion in doubt, so that an "experience" would be needful.

In the same paper there is another article on "Christian Experience" which embodies some very high thinking on this important topic. After guarding against the error of identifying "emotional craze," "animal excitement" and "æsthetic sentimentalism," and speaking of the criteria of genuine Christian experience, the writer says:

> Here, then, is the test, and we have simply to ask in any case, Are these moods and feelings, these tastes and sensibilities, the impulses by which we are being incited to action, moved and molded by the truth as it is in Jesus? We may readily infer what will be the effects of a true Christian experience. The spirit of truth will, with first and most immediate effect, quicken the intelligence, impelling to thought, reflection, inquiry. It will very naturally put all the thinking powers into vigorous action. So where real Christianity prevails we may reasonably look for progress in knowledge, the broadening of intelligence and the exercise of superior wisdom.

One of the curious products of the sect-producing tendency of the present century is the so-called "Irvingite" movement, otherwise known as the "Catholic Apostolic Church." It began with the eloquent prophetic preaching of Rev. Edward Irving, a friend of Carlyle and Coleridge, about 1830, in England, and on the basis of its new revelation developed a highly complex ecclesiastical and ritualistic system. The expectation of the immediate second coming of Christ is among its tenets, and there has lately been a marked increase in the zeal of its propaganda. The following description of the Irvingite Church in New York and its present activity is taken from the New York Sun:

> The interior has much in common with the early Christian basilicas. Its seating capacity does not exceed four hundred. Just inside the door the visitor finds a benitier with holy water built into the wall. The low pulpit stands in the nave, while the chancel has many prie-dieux. The seats are high-backed. Seven small incense burners are suspended in a line from the ceiling over the front part of the church, and a large glimmering lamp burns with a soft light over the simple altar. The Irvingites refuse to be placed in the same class as the Adventists and similar sects, because they do not pretend to know the hour and day of the Lord's coming. No man can know more than that the hour is drawing near. But they have not lived up to these teachings. Robert Baxter, their first male prophet, who later recanted, prophesied in 1832 that the Lord would come in three and a half years to gather up his witnesses. On July 14, 1875, when the fortieth anniversary of the institution of the new apostleship was celebrated, more than one thousand communicants assembled in their cathedral in Gordon Square, London, because some prophet had figured out that the Lord would return on that day. The present activity, which has resulted in the despatching of six evangelists to this country, seems to have been caused by the expectation that Christ's promise to his first apostles must be fulfilled before the last member of the second apostleship passes away.

SOME LESSONS FROM OUR PAST.*

No careful student of the past fifty years of our history—a period marked by intense evangelistic zeal in the home field—can fail to be impressed with the lesson that we must give much greater attention in the future to providing for the spiritual needs of the unshepherded flocks among us than we have hitherto done, if we would avoid the reproach of neglecting our own offspring, or present to the world, in our local churches, our conception of the New Testament church. In throwing off the chains of a former ecclesiasticism, which neither we nor our fathers were able to wear, we have run into an extreme individualism, or congregational independency, which has proved fatal to the spiritual life of many weak churches, and which has been the chief barrier in effective co-operation in missionary, educational and benevolent work. One of the chief tasks set before the leaders among us of the present generation is to devise some system by which the weaker churches may be provided with pastoral care, and unemployed ministers of approved character and ability be utilized in the accomplishment of this end. We ought certainly, by this time, to have reached a stage in our spiritual development when our sense of moral obligation to churches that are languishing and dying for lack of proper er care, should overcome all scruples concerning mere methods which do not interfere with the liberty of the churches nor the rights of the individual conscience. Jesus Christ has given to His church all necessary authority for doing whatever is essential to its well-being, and the great Shepherd will hold us responsible for the just exercise of this authority in caring for the weak and perishing flocks of His one spiritual fold. Not until this task is accomplished in some good degree can we carry out what we all feel to be a supreme duty of the hour, namely, the training of our churches and membership in a more thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, deepening their spiritual life and in securing their hearty co-operation in the work of extending the kingdom of God among men.

SECRET OF UNITY.

Before closing this brief glance backward along the shining track of the past, for lessons to guide us in the work of the future, I wish to call attention to one or two other points which seem to me to be of supreme value in their bearing on our future welfare.

It is a matter for profound congratulation, and of gratitude to God, as we study the history of these fifty or ninety years that lie behind us, that we have been able to maintain, throughout all the discussions and differences of opinion which have arisen, not only the essential unity of faith, but also an essential unity of the body. Divisive spirits have arisen, here and there, along our history, speaking perverse things and seeking to draw away followers after themselves, but their efforts have uniformly come to naught. The great body of disciples who have gathered under the banner of this Reformation have stood loyal to its fundamental principles and are to-day, without the aid of authoritative human creed or confession of faith, as united a body of believers as can be found in all Christendom. In looking for the secret of this unity which has existed in spite of that individualism and independency so characteristic of our movement, we find it readily in that fundamental principle to which our fathers gave emphasis, which makes Jesus Christ the supreme object of faith and loyalty to Him the supreme test of fellowship. Taking up the old cry of Rupertus Meldenius, which comes down to us from the days of fierce dogmatic controversy following the Lutheran Reformation, and which translated in modern form is, "In faith, unity; in opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity," we have sought to make it a vital principle, and the working basis of a practical Christian unity. Not our own history alone, but the history of the church universal, teaches that it is the violation of this principle that has brought about division in the body of Christ and filled the pages of ecclesiastical history with the notes of controversy and strife among brethren. Whatever discord has marred our own history, and detracted from the influence of our plea for unity, has arisen largely from unfaithfulness, on the part of some, to this cardinal feature of our Reformation. It seems to me pertinent to this Jubiblee occasion that we revive and renew our fealty to this principle, which is, after all, but the exaltation of the Lordship of Jesus Christ above human opinions as the very Magna Charta of our religious liberty. It is a foregone conclusion, Mr. President, that there must be differences of opinion and of judgment among free and independent people, who have been trained to think for themselves on every great question which concerns their present and eternal well-being. It can not be otherwise. I do not know that it is desirable that it should be otherwise, for out of this very conflict of opinion has come most of the progress in our religious thinking. If, therefore, our bond of unity in Christ is not sufficiently strong to hold us together in spite of differing views concerning questions of interpretation and criticism, then our plea for unity is vain, and our Lord's prayer for unity is destined never to be realized. In an address delivered by President Angell, of the University of Michigan, before the recent International Council of Congregationalists, in Boston, he said concerning that body of believers what is equally true concerning our own brotherhood:

"We must have large liberty of thought and expression in our fold. We have always emphasized the importance of high scholarship and intellectual activity, especially in our teachers and preachers. We must not cripple their usefulness on the plea of preserving orthodoxy by binding them in the metaphysical or exegetical fetters which men no more enlightened nor devout than they have forged in the past. We best honor the fathers by renouncing their errors. Sincere and earnest disciples of our day must be permitted and encouraged to pursue with courage their studies in the fuller light which scientific, archæological and critical research has shed upon their path."

Equally true and significant are the words spoken by Dr. J. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, Scotland, before the late Pan-Presbyterian Council in Washington:

"The churches which this council represents will command the attention of the age only in the measure in which, without lowering either their testimony or their ideals, they recognize and make room for its trends and habits of thought and its expansions and complexities of life. We are not worshipers of the past. But if it is a false liberalism which ruthlessly tears the present from the past, it is an equally false conservatism which insists that the molds into which the conclusions of a bygone period were cast shall remain fixed and rigid for all further periods."

It would be strange, Mr. President, if we, who claim to have come into an inh itance of a larger measure of religious liberty than our religious neighbors, should claim for ourselves less intellectual and spiritual freedom than these denominational leaders demand for the churches which they represent. We can not do it and be loyal to the plea of our fathers. If we have in any degree contributed to that progress in religious liberty which finds expression in such sentiments as we have quoted, we would prove recreant to a great mission if we did not illustrate in our history that broad spirit of fraternity and unity in Christ which we have urged upon others as an essential condition of bringing about that unity for which our Lord prayed.

LOYALTY AND LIBERTY.

Let us, indeed, be loyal to the Scriptures, as our fathers were; but let us manifest that loyalty by our willingness to accept whatever light helps us to a better understanding of their history and sacred contents. Let us, indeed, "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints;" but let us not contend with each other over differences of opinion to the overthrow of faith and the confusson of saints. Let us, with Paul, pronounce an anathema upon all who would preach "any other gospel than that which has been preached;" but let us pronounce a blessing upon every son of light who can give us a clearer insight into that gospel, a better interpretation of its meaning and a truer and wider application of its principles to the conditions and needs of our time. Let us, indeed, "walk in the old paths;" but see to it that our faces are turned in the right direction, and that we place no barbed-wire fence across those paths which would prevent inquiring souls from going out in quest of higher truths and nobler attainments in Christian life. Let us, indeed, be zealous for the truth delivered unto us by our spiritual fathers; but let us never doubt that God has other truths for other ages and generations to emphasize, and that if we have the spirit of reformers which they possessed, God will have a message for us to deliver to our age, as he had for them to deliver to their age. Let us, indeed, stand unflinchingly for the doctrine taught by Christ and His apostles; but let us not neglect that divine charity or love, without which all our knowledge and all our faith are but as "a sounding brass and a clanging cymbal."

We have, indeed, been dull students of history, and of the New Testament as well, if we have not learned the supreme excellence of love as an essential condition of unity and of progress. In our zeal for restoring the "ancient order of things" let us, above all things, restore that love which "bears all things," "is not easily provoked," "rejoiceth in the truth," cares for the widow and the orphan, comforts and ministers to aged and destitute preachers of the gospel, reaches down helpful hands to lift up the fallen and the oppressed, and stands for—

The right against the wrong,
The weak against the strong,
And the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

CHRISTIAN UNION IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

Standing, Mr. President, on the heights of this Jubilee occasion, it is not difficult to look through the open portals of the twentieth century and see the working out of some of those vast problems which the present century must leave unsolved. Among these great problems is that of the unity of Christ's followers, the advocacy of which has been so prominent a part of our own religious movement. I make no pretensions to be able to forecast the future except along the broad lines of God's infinite purposes. I believe Christian unity is to come, but the how and the when of its coming, I am willing to leave to God. If it be according to God's will that it shall come differently from what we formerly supposed it would come, this fact would render none the less important the service we have rendered in our plea for unity. If it be according to God's plan to break down the barriers of denominational prejudice, and bring these several bodies of believers into such conformity to his will in things essential, and to so abate party spirit and soften denominational lines as that we may all co-operate together under the leadership of a common Lord, until, gradually, denominational names and party shibboleths shall be outgrown rather than the sudden breaking up of these denominational organizations, who are we that we should withstand God? If we may judgefrom His dealings with us and with the religious world about us, this is, in all probability, God's method of bringing about the unity of His people. But, whatever may be the plan, and whatever the process, the essential unity of believers under the common Headship of Christ, and their co-operation in united efforts for the overthrow of Satan and the extension of the kingdom of God on earth must come, and their coming must antedate the millennium and be the means of ushering it in.

CONCLUSION.

All hail, then, the growing consciousness of unity among the severed children of God! All hail the free intermingling, in interdenominational organizations and conventions, of evangelical believers of every name and creed—a prophecy of that time, foretold by the Master, when His scattered sheep shall be gathered, and there shall be "one fold and one shepherd." All hail the advancing banners of our own great missionary organizations, whose purpose it is to carry this gospel of unity and liberty and love and brotherhood unto the ends of the world! All hail the signs to be seen on every sky, and in every land, which indicate that the despised Prophet of Nazareth, who was slain by His generation, is marching on triumphantly to the conquest of the world! All hail ye veterans of the Reformation, who have come down to us from the heroic past, and whom God has spared to see this day of glory and of triumph! All hail ye younger generation of reformers—a vast throng—who have come into this inheritance of religious truth and liberty, and who, guided and instructed by the lessons of the past, are to go forth under the leadership of Christ to fight other battles and win other victories for God and the right. May the spirit that was in the fathers—the spirit of unconquerable devotion to truth, and of unswerving loyalty to Christ—be also in you, and may your eyes witness triumphs of truth and righteousness in the earth, which it was not given our fathers nor us to see. So shall the sowers and reapers rejoice together in that greater Jubilee of a united and glorified church and of a redeemed world.

THE MINISTER AND HIS LIBRARY.

W. J. RUSSELL.

11. Among the books of reference that should have a place in the minister's library a good English dictionary is the most important. And the Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary is everwhere conceded to be the masterwork of the century, the latest and positively the greatest new dictionary of the English language. It challenges criticism and commands admiration. It should have a prominent place in the library, not as an ornament, but to be used—to be studied. Then, too, a good alphabetical cyclopædia is a necessity for every educated man. The Encyclopædia Britannica, revised edition, is a monument of intellectual greatness. But Johnson's Universal Encyclopædia, revised edition, is easily the best, being the most comprehensive and accurate work of the kind. McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature, is a work that is well done, and contains the most copious vocabulary of any religious encyclopædia. The Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge is an invaluable work to the minister. Other works may be added from time to time. The ideal library is a growth, and its value depends on its quality rather than its quantity. We must learn to know books as we learn to know other good things. Their true value cannot be overestimated. Bacon calls them ships of thought voyaging through the sea of time and carrying their precious freight so safely from generation to generation. Here are the finest minds giving us the best wisdom of present and all past ages; here are intellects gifted far beyond ours, ready to give us the results of a life of patient thought; imaginations open to the beauty of the universe, far beyond what it is given us to behold; characters whom we can only vainly hope to imitate, but whom it is one of the highest privileges of life to know. Here they all are; and to learn to know them is the privilege of the educated minister. As Wordsworth says:

"Books are yours,
Within whose silent chambers treasures lie
Preserved from age to age; more precious far
Than that accumulated store of gold
And Orient gems which for a day of need
The Sultan hides deep in ancestral tombs;
These hoards of truth you can unlock at will."

12. The newspapers and magazines, when properly selected, have a rightful place on the library table. But the usual custom of glancing hastily over the daily newspaper tends to mental dissipation. By the time the minister has gone through the Journal, Herald, Times, Tribune, Record and the rest, or two or three of these journals, at least, and kept it up daily for a few years, he has gone far toward becoming dementalized, to say nothing of being demoralized. A good, strong, clean daily newspaper is almost indispensable to the minister who desires to keep well informed in regard to current events. But in reading the daily newspaper, select certain important facts to be carried in the mind, considered and thought about. What is worth reading is worth remembering. "A man," as Emerson has said, "must learn how to read daily newspapers, divining instinctively what was meant for him, and casting the rest aside. The test of fitness is an easy one. A moment's reflection will show any one what part of a newspaper is likely to be useful to him in his daily life, and what part is likely to invigorate and enrich the intellect. The rest is surplusage." This advice to the general reader should be of special interest to the minister. His mind must be kept active. Drowsily droning over newspapers and books that have substantially nothing in them—or over any reading material for that matter—is not the employment to fit a minister for his high calling. In short, such droning is not reading in any proper sense; it is sheer waste of so much time and life.

We now have the foundation for a library growth which may be continued according to the minister's tastes and financial ability. But whether the library be large or small, the minister must sustain a close relationship to it. The library room should be bright and cheerful and large enough for bookcases, desk and table, with sufficient space on the walls for maps, charts and a few choice pictures of art and representative men of the world's history. In the midst of this little world of books, periodicals and pictures, the minister converses with the foremost of all ages. Or rather, sitting quietly in the center of the circle, he listens reverently while they talk to him. He absorbs their great ideas, thinks them over and over, and lets their germinant power fertilize his own mind.

Any minister of solid moral purpose, patient industry, plain common sense and unwavering faith and courage, can become fully equipped for a life of great usefulness in the pulpit. But there is no hope for any one outside of this great law of labor. For the minister to sit still or to idle away his time is to become a fossil; but to press on and win, is God's law. He should insist on having a large forenoon clear of interruptions. He should begin with the early morning hour, which has gold in its mouth. Time should be given for prayer and devotional reading. There should be the steady prosecution of selected lines of study, and the proper distribution of time should be given to each. Something definite should be outlined for each day's work. When this is done, the minister should throw his whole mind into his work. Sooner or later the only genuine success will come to him, if he be faithful to the lofty ideal of his calling. "His richest reward," says the beloved Henry Schell Lobingier, "will be found in his daily experience, as he continues in his devotions at the sacred shrine of spiritual truth and beauty."

"THE MINISTER AND HIS LIBRARY."

BRUCE BROWN.

I feel induty bound to protest against part of the advice offered by W. J. Russell, under the above heading, in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The purpose of the article, doubtless, was to aid young preachers in the selection of books that would be the most helpful to them in their ministry, but that part of the article treating of commentaries, if heeded, would be a great hindrance instead of a help.

The character of a preacher's sermons is decided very largely by the books he uses in their preparation, and it can be laid down as a fundamental rule, that no book or books that make this preparation easy should find a place in the library of a progressive minister. Prepared and predigested and medicated foods for the sick, if used by a healthy person, will debilitate the growing body, and in the same way all homiletical works will weaken the powers of a growing preacher. Great sermons must necessarily have a foundation of great and careful and critical preparation. It is as fatal for a young preacher to use homiletical helps, spiced and sweetened, in sermon preparation, or even in Bible study, as it is for a student to use a "pony" in his college course. While it is true that he can get a class of radiant sermons, that gleam and sparkle and glisten with pyrotechnical effect, by the use of such commentaries, it is equally true that his auditory will grow tired of the display when they discover that it does not illumine the path from sin to heaven.

The Pulpit Commentary, Parker's People's Bible and Matthew Henry's Commentary were the three works of any pretension recommended in the article under the head of commentaries. It is safe to say that the first two of these should not be found in the library of any preacher who has not had at least ten years' experience in the pulpit, and the last is out of date and is not particularly need by any one. While it is possible that a scholarly minister, who has well thought out his subject, may find a few finishing touches and graceful sub-headings in such works; if they are depended upon entirely by the young preacher, or if used by him to any great extent, he will become as sickly and stickish in his sermons as a candy-fed child. I cannot, in the space of this brief article, give a list of reliable and helpful commentaries. Suffice it to say that one should be selected which very briefly and plainly explains the meaning of the Scriptures. It is useless to reply that such works as the Pulpit and Preacher's Commentaries claim for themselves superiority in their exegetical departments, for these claims cannot be substantiated. The best way to prepare a sermon is to select some great Bible theme and trace it through its treatment by Moses, and the prophets, and Christ and the apostles. The essentials and not the incidentials of the gospel should be treated in the pulpit and there are enough of these to last a preacher for a thousand years. Homiletical commentaries, without an exception, sacrifice sense to sound and exaggerate minor details.

I well remember how very eagerly I embraced just such advice as that given in Bro. Russell's article, and began to invest a large part of my scant earnings for these works on the monthly payment plan, and how bitterly I was disappointed before I was half through with the payments to find that I had been deceived. One might almost as well use Talmage's syndicate sermons as a basis for his preparation as the Pulpit Commentary or the Preacher's Commentary or Parker's Bible. Hence, I wish very fraternally but very earnestly to protest against young preachers being advised to invest a large part of their small salaries in these high-priced but worse than useless books.

Chicago, Ill.

[The above criticism, while perhaps it errs like the article criticized in being somewhat too certain and sweeping in its assertions, contains a warning which is not without value. The temptation to the impecunious young preacher to purchase a homiletical commentary on the installment plan is very seductive when presented by a smooth and plausible book agent. Don't do it. Homiletical commentaries are dangerous. Besides, the best commentaries do not come in this encyclopædic form. The vast, many-volumed commentaries on the whole Bible do not contain the best that is said on any book. The safest advice to the young preacher is that he buy his commentaries in single volumes. The International Critical Commentary, now appearing from the press of Scribner's, is undoubtedly the best of those which come in series, but its volumes can be purchased separately. If you like the volume on Deuteronomy you can get it without buying those on Job and Ephesians. In general, Bro. Russell's lists of books under each division do not seem to us to indicate exhaustive research in the bibliography of the several departments. To mention Smith's Bible Dictionary but make no allusion to Hastings is hardly allowable, even in the briefest statement. To mention only Edersheim among the lives of Christ is to recommend the good where there are many better. To speak of Ueberweg's History of Philosophy as "by far the best work" in the field is to ignore the work of Windelband which, in the judgment of students of philosophy, is the full equal of Ueberweg in scholarship and accuracy of detail, far superior in breadth of generalization and comprehensiveness of grasp, and possesses the further advantage of being readable. And to recommend Ladd's Introduction te Philosophy as a first book for beginners is sheer cruelty to young preachers. Bro. Russell's article is useful, however, in its classification of the fields of literature to which the minister must give attention, and in its emphasis upon the rich and diversified intellectual equipment which is required of the highest type of Christian minister.—EDITOR.]

STORY OF THE TESTING OF A SPIRITUAL TEST MEETING.

J. M. ATWATER.

[Introductory Note: It is not claimed in this article that all test mediums are swindlers; but it is claimed that many of them are so, and that most of the "tests" are no tests at all, but are so loose as to give plenty of room for deception.]

Some years ago I first visited Wauseon, a small city in Ohio, near Toledo. I was then about to become pastor of our church there. I had hardly left the train before Bro. Riddle pointed out to me a young fellow who he told me was creating "a great excitement in town." Young Mr. Walker, I learned, was a recent immigrant from England, and was by profession "a spiritual trance medium and orator." I was told that in his public meetings he would first go into a sleep or trance and while in this condition would take any subject from any one and at once make a regular address upon it. I was assured by Christians as well as others that his addresses were really remarkable, especially considering that he was "only nineteen years old." It soon happened that I was introduced to Mr. Walker and heard from him his own explanation of the nature of his public addresses. He stated that in his travels he was regularly attended by a circle of twelve spirits, and that during his addresses he was entirely unconscious, his vocal powers being used by some one of the twelve spirits. He added that, each time, after he became unconscious, and when the subject had been announced, the spirits would agree among themselves which one of their number was best suited to that subject, and that one would then take charge and make the address.

Wauseon is, or at least was at that time, a stronghold of infidelity. Bro. Riddle told me that the infidel element was so strong and aggressive that it was often called "the heathen church," and he told me who was "the pastor" and who "the deacon" of the heathen church. In times after that I myself was impressed that I had never before seen women so outspoken in their infidelity as some there in Wauseon. It was, therefore, not merely the Spiritualists in the town, but the entire force of infidels, who were rejoicing in the anti-Christian and anti-church influence of the Walker lectures. This feeling was so strong that the most scholarly man among the Wauseon Disciples, Dr. Jewell, had already given a public lecture to show that the wonderful phenomenon of these trance lectures (given instantaneously on any and all subjects) could be explained scientifically, without the supposition of the aid of departed spirits. His theory was one which he had drawn from some European writers. It was called "the theory of registered impressions and unconscious cerebration." It teaches that every mental act registers its physical trace on the brain, and that under certain conditions one may unconsciously utter what has been thus physically recorded. Dr. Jewell considered Mr. Walker as entirely ingenuous, and as a very interesting case, well worthy of the people's study. This view of the case helped, of course, to give dignity and public respect to the Walker lectures.

My curiosity was by this time considerably aroused, and I remarked that I would like to give Mr. Walker a subject, so that I might observe his method of handling it. Quite to my surprise my remark was instantly snapped up and treated as a challenge from the church forces of the town. Before I knew what was going on it had been hurriedly agreed that on the next Monday evening, a meeting should be held in the church of the Disciples and there and then Mr. Walker should make a trance address on any subject I should select.

On that same first day of my visit to Wauseon I met Mr. B., "the deacon of the heathen church." He assured me that if it could be done he hoped I would unhorse and expose Mr. Walker. He said he himself only wanted to have the truth prevail; he had no other interest in the matter. Wishing to know how severe the test had been to which the trance speaker had been subjected, I asked what subjects had been given him. I was surprised to learn that they had given him none of a kind which would really test him—no subject dealing with well-ascertained historic facts, where he would be compelled to show knowledge or ignorance as the case might be. He had been called on to discuss "Finance," on which he could not have talked stuff more wild and foolish than the people were used to hearing and the papers at that time were full of, unless he were an actual idiot. They had given him "Evolution," a topic on which any rattle-head with a gift for words could mouth and rant for hours with perfect ease. I was not long in deciding that my chosen subject would be of a style very different from those above named.

As the time for the expected meeting approached the excitement ran higher and higher. There was much prophesying as to the outcome. One set of people agreed in the opinion that "Walker will just wind Atwater around his little finger." Another set nodded their heads and said, "Now Mr. Walker, you've met your match." As I talked with different ones I thought I could detect a lurking desire in some of them to draw me out so as to catch some hint as to what subject I would finally give, or at least what kind of subject. Of course I was not foolish enough to give them any hint, and on the contrary I resolved not to trust my subject even to my best friend, lest it should in some way leak out. For even the slight signs of a wish to know my subject in advance increased my suspicion that Mr. Walker's tests were tricks and deceptions.

With this feeling in my mind I set myself to the task of getting the best possible subject. It must be, I said, a subject bristling with facts, with definite and positive facts. It must be a subject which an immigrant from England, who is only nineteen years old, will never have heard of. Such a subject will prevent him from drawing on any stores of information gained in the usual way, and he will therefore need the help of those twelve spirits he tells of, if indeed those claims are based on fact. But, moreover, the subject must be one that is very familiar to the audience, so that if he resorts to bold guessing, or makes blunders in any way, they may all see it instantly.

As I studied the matter I was struck with the idea that "Stephen A. Douglass," the great politician, would be a subject of the kind I desired. Walker himself would know nothing about Douglass, for he died when Walker was a baby, and the great civil war had, like a deluge, swept away and buried even the great names of the days just before the war. But on the other hand, the audience will know all about Douglass, for he was one of the giants of his time, and his name is still mighty, especially in Ohio and all the West country.

Having thus chosen my subject, I studied how to announce it in such a way that there would be no hint to help Walker guess who and what manner of man Douglass was. I said to myself, "I will not announce 'Senator Douglass,' nor 'Douglass, of Illinois,' nor 'Douglass, the great Democrat,' nor 'Douglass, the Idol of his Party,' nor 'Douglass, the Author of the Doctrine of Squatter Sovereignty,' nor 'Douglass, who came so near being President of the United States.' "

At length the appointed hour arrived, and we found the house filled with an eager and expectant audience, in which friends and enemies of the church were in about equal numbers. "The deacon of the heathen church" was made president of the meeting. Mr. Walker took the stand, and as usual went into a trance. The president signaled to me that all was now ready. I arose and said, so loud that all could plainly hear, "The subject for the address is, 'The Life, Character and Work of Stephen A. Douglass.' "

Then followed a most remarkable scene. At other times he had always started out on the appointed subject promptly and with a kind of soaring, wordy oratory, which reminded one of the movement of a bird with large wings. But this time if, instead of merely springing upon him a genuine test subject I had shot him with a pistol, he would not have staggered more promptly nor more visibly. It was evident at the first flash that not one of his circle of twelve attendant spirits had ever heard of Stephen A. Douglass. His first words were, "The gentleman seems to suppose that the spirits know everything; but they don't." But, realizing that his whole reputation was at stake, he braced himself for the struggle. Knowing that he knew absolutely nothing about Douglass, he tried his best to talk without saying anything—to keep a stream of words flowing without touching a fact or an opinion. His floundering and dodging lest he should bruise himself on an unknown fact reminded me of the old game of Blind Man's Buff and of the dodging and guarding of the blinded boy as he tries to grab somebody in the dark without getting his head broken against a wall or a doorpost. But this art of stringing words together without any thread of thought requires much more genius than Walker possessed. The result was a threefold failure: first, his words dribbled along in a slow, feeble way; second, instead of talking for an hour, as was his custom, he broke down completely and stopped inside of fifteen minutes, and third, in one case only he boldly guessed at a fact, and thus made a most horrible mistake which was seen by everybody. It came in this way, viz., as I was a preacher he guessed that my "Stephen A. Douglass" would be of that class; so in the midst of his dribbling talk he suddenly astounded the audience with these amazing words: "Douglass was undeniably a great theologian, and did a mighty work in the church." In short, his breakdown was so conspicuous and so pitiful that even we who had already believed that he was a trickster and ought to be exposed were filled with sympathetic shame, and actually wished we could sink down through the floor and get away unseen.

But before he fully stopped, in the midst of his pitiful struggle, the president came to me and said, "We can all see that he has made a complete failure; you better give him another subject, and let him try again." I refused, saying that the one test was sufficient; but I said that others should offer him subjects if they thought best. Several fair subjects were offered him, "Abraham Lincoln" being one; but he had burned his fingers badly on "Douglass" and he promptly refused to touch the subjects offered. Up to this point my plan for testing and exposing the shams of the "trance" speaker had worked to perfection. But just at this point I made a bad mistake. The president had now come to me the second time urging that for many reasons I give him another subject. At length I foolishly yielded to him and to friends about me, and gave him "The Copernican System of Astronomy." This choice (not made with due care as my first had been) was a bad choice for two reasons: first, Walker had picked up quite a smattering of astronomy, and second, the audience knew so little of the science that he might have made dozens of huge blunders without their detecting it. The instant I gave him the new subject he seemed, as it were, to spread his wings for soaring oratory. "Now," said he, "we are at home; now we are in our element." In this second effort he made four bad mistakes, which were exposed by the questions which he invited; but the people did not feel these blunders as they did his shocking absurdities about Douglass. And yet, in its general effect the whole exposure was a grand success. Walker became at once literally the laughingstock of the whole town. He left town without ever trying to make another public address, and was never heard of afterwards in Wauseon. Before he went, however, he spent one more evening there, and made a small effort to mend his damaged reputation in the following way: His friends gathered a few invited guests, Christians, Spiritualists, etc., in a private house, and there Walker made an address on "Douglass." The address was a good one, and assurances were given out by his friends that he could not possibly have read even a single line about Douglass since his failure, for some of them had been with him every hour of the time. The inference, of course, was implied that his failure was in some way an accident, and that the spirits did really speak through him after all.

And right here comes the most astounding and instructive part of my story. Some years later, when I had left Wauseon and was back there on a visit, I chanced to meet "the pastor of the heathen church." We stood for a few minutes with a few others on the corner chatting, and in referring to former times the name of Walker was mentioned. To my perfect astonishment he volunteered to give us the inside history of Walker's last day in Wauseon. He said that at that time Walker was a guest at his house, and that on the morning after the great failure on the "Douglass" subject he came out to the barn where he was at work and said to him, "Well, who was Douglass, anyway?" In answer to that question he sat down and talked to him for an hour. He was full of the subject, for Douglass was his favorite politician, and he gave him an ample account of his life and doings. When he was done Walker said, "Now hear me tell it." Upon that he took up the same story and showed a most remarkable memory, giving everything both in substance and in the proper order. And he said that it was this story, which he had thus told him in the barn, that Walker gave that night as his address to the select company in the private house. And it was in this way that it was possible to assure the people that night that he had not read even a single line about Douglass since his great failure.

I am aware that it seems almost incredible that the "pastor" should thus admit that he had helped Walker to palm off a swindle upon the people; but I am stating with exactness the facts which I observed. The moral of this story of Walker is twofold: first, there is a natural alliance between infidels and Spiritualists so strong that it tempts the former to help a dishonest Spiritualist to execute a swindle, and second, the tests to be applied to mediums need to be much more rigid than most people realize.

Cleveland, Ohio.

OUR BUDGET.

—State Missions should come to the front about now.

—There must be a wise distribution of our missionary funds.

—Congress of Disciples of Christ, Indianapolis, March 27-29.

—Great time now for evangelists and agents of religious newspapers.

—With all our additions, let us see to it that a good religious paper be added to each family.

—A good religious journal preaching in the home is a great reinforcement to the preacher in his pulpit.

—More preachers are realizing this fact now than ever before, and the wide-awake ones are giving their personal supervision to the matter of raising clubs.

—Next to the selection of the right preacher is the selection of an allround religious journal, whose influence will supplement that of the preacher in building up the spiritual life of the members.

—An agent who has been through a neighboring state in the interest of the Christian Pub. Co. says he never found a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who was not a friend of the paper. He found some who opposed it, but they were not its readers, but had learned from other sources how naughty a paper it was.

—It was not Bro. Zachary who said he stood "fourteen thousand miles above the level of the sea," but the printer—the naughty printer! A correspondent writes to express sympathy for Bro. Z. in his ethereal condition, but he will be glad to learn that it was only the printer that elevated him to such a dizzy height. It is the printer's business to elevate people.

—Prof. C. L. Loos writes that he is in excellent health and has a good prospect of living to see the 20th century. This is remarkable considering his fondness for fried oysters! Some men are so hardy that nothing daunts them. We trust that Bro. L. may live to take in a large section of the 20th century in spite of his penchant for the fried lamellibranchiate mollusk!

—Occasionally, a brother or sister who does not love peace any more than we do, enters a mild protest against certain paragraphs, humorous and otherwise, which appear in this paper by way of self-defense. Perhaps the protest is justified, but if these friends knew half the provocation that comes to us in the way of misrepresentation, they would at least be more ready to condone our fault. We are trying our best to cultivate the grace that "beareth all things," that "suffers long and is kind."

—A new star has arisen on the horizon of the literary world. Briney's Monthly, Vol. I, No. 1, Paris, Mo., has reached our table. J. B. Briney is the editor and proprietor and his son, W. N. Briney, is the office editor. J. B. Briney, as our readers know, is a writer of ability, and his son is no doubt a chip off the old block. Judging from the initial number of the new monthly, it is likely to be largely controversial in character. We regret to see some things in the paper that have served their purpose elsewhere, and might well have been allowed to rest. We make no prophecy as to the future of the monthly, as that will depend entirely upon how far it meets the legitimate needs of the church. There is no doubt room for high-grade monthlies, but they should excell the weekly in the quality of their literature, illustrations and mechanical make-up. We wish the Monthly may be so conducted as to advance the interests of the cause of Christ wherever it circulates, and to the extent that it serves this purpose we shall rejoice in its success. So far as we know, this is the only monthly published among us, and if wisely conducted we see no reason why it should not succeed.

—The new Christian Church, Fairfield, Iowa, will be dedicated Sunday, January 14th, at 11 A. M. Chancellor William Bayard Craig, of Drake University, Des Moines, will conduct the services and also preach at night. A fellowship meeting will be held at 2:30 P. M., at which the pastors of the city will take part. The cost of the church, $5,000, will be provided for before day of dedication and a free will offering only will be taken. A cordial invitation is extended to all neighboring pastors and their congregations by Leander Lane, pastor, in behalf of the church.

—The Church of Christ in Siloam Springs, Ark., by a a heroic effort has freed itself from debt. They have a membership of a 110; have had, all told, 60 additions during the year, but have a net gain for the year of only ten. They have a Sunday-school of 183, all told, and raised and disbursed for all purposes $1,101.61. The church property, now clear of debt, is valued at $2,500. All the activities of the church were represented in the annual report. This church has been without a pastor for six months.

—"The World's Best Orations," edited by Justice David J. Brewer, of the Supreme Court, and other eminent scholars, contains among other good things the speech of our Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, made in Congress on the occasion of the presentation of the statue of Frank P. Blair, of Missouri, to the United States. It also contains Alexander Campbell's oration on "Mind the Master Force." The brilliant Missourian has reason to be proud of the honor done him in having his speech placed in such noble company and sandwiched in between Cicero and Cassius M. Clay.

—A well-known preacher writes: "I have long thought the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the foremost religious journal amoung us, and the best edited, while my own views were better represented by the ————————." We are glad to know that among our steadfast constituency are many who do not agree with the editor in all things, for this indicates a spirit of toleration and of charity. How often have we told our religious neighbors that we do not all have to think alike in order to be one in Christ! Let us remind ourseves occasionally of what we preach to others "lest we forget."

—We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Fuller, the wife of J. H. Fuller, of Newport, Ark. She departed this life Dec. 31, 1899, from a lingering disease—consumption. Her maiden name was Fannie Stephens. Her death will be mourned by a host of friends. We deeply sympathize with our brother in this bereavement.

—J. W. Mitchell, of Hopkinsville, is representing the Christian Publishing Co. as general agent in Western Kentucky. We shall appreciate any favors shown him in his work.

—The name of J. Fred Jones to numerous meetings reported in our evangelistic department last week was signed to each report in this office and not by himself. The items were transferred to this department from a letter and his name attached to each as in other reports in that department.

—The Register-Review, Jan. 4th, contains a symposium on our state work that ought to stir something. There is too much inactivity, too much coldness, too little interest, and consequently too little income, somehow, somewhere or some way, and things need stirring; a general shake-up is needed. Our state work and our educational interests are not receiving the support that they have the right to expect from the 165,000 Disciples of Christ in Missouri.

—We publish in this paper a letter from Brother Harvuot, of Cincinnati, on the School of Pastoral Helpers, which he is endeavoring to see realized, and which is one of the present demands of the church. This movement, as you will see, has the endorsement of leading pastors and educators among us, and we have no doubt that the more recent decision to locate the school in Chicago is wise and will be likewise endorsed by the friends of the movement. Of the numerous excerpts from letters sent us by Brother Harvuot we could find space but for one in this issue, but this will show how heartily the movement will be received by our pastors, schools and churches.

—The "Story of the Testing of a Spiritual Test Medium" in this paper cannot fail of interest to the reader. It will be well worth your attention in these days of strange things.

—The story of "The Lost Emigrants," in our Family Circle, this week reaches one of those indescribable catastrophes, a fire at sea. The story is becoming intensely interesting.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for January rings with the Silver Jubilee of the Foreign Society and the $200,000 for Foreign Missions this year. Send to A. McLean, Cincinnati, O., for a copy.

—The two papers on "Christian Union," one by E. Snodgrass, the other by A. A. Bennett, read before a union meeting held in Tokyo, Japan, April 19, 1899, have been published in tract form, 48 pages, by The Voice, and may be had at "20 sen' per copy. The papers each look toward a closer unity in the Christian missions of Japan.

—A note from C. M. Pinkerton, Blackburn, Mo., informs us of the death of his wife. He writes: "I am now borne down by grief. The death-angel for the first time has invaded my immediate family circle and taken away my wife and the mother of my children." We tender our sympathies to Bro. P. in this sad bereavement.

—So prominent are the evils of intemperance and the value of total abstinence from intoxicating beverages that a committee was appointed at the Temperance Congress held in Prohibition Park last July to urge upon the life insurance associations to establish a separate class for total abstainers, so as to insure to them the benefits of their temperate habits. And so potent have been the services and influence of this committee that, beginning with the present year, the Equitable Life Insurance Company will separate the policies of total abstainers as a special class, thus assuring them of the increased dividends to be derived from their temperate habits. Other companies will, of course, follow suit. They cannot afford to do otherwise. Here, then, is a substantial gain for the temperance cause in the land. Mr. I. K. Funk, of New York, is the chairman of the above-named committee.

—Next Lord's day is state mission day. The success of the collection for state work on this day depends largely on the preachers. For this reason it is hoped that every preacher in the state has and will give this matter his personal attention. The needs of the state board to carry on this work cannot be too emphatically presented. There are missionaries in the field to be paid and new fields to be entered. The National Conventions meet in Kansas City this year, and Missouri state work should be pushed to the front. Our pride, our interest in the cause, our duty to God and to our fellowmen all demand of us liberal contributions this year for this work. Let us not sleep as do others, but be up and doing. Every church can do something, and that something is needed badly; never worse than now. We shall hope to hear an outburst of joy from Kansas City created by greatly increased contributions to the state work next Sunday.

—The churches should order supplies for the March offering at once. There ought to be no delay in complete preparation. The Foreign Society is reaching into new fields. Cuba, Hawaii, Philippine Islands are now our mission fields.

—As a number of biographies of D. L. Moody are about to be published, the family of the deceased evangelist has announced that not one of them is by their permission or authorization. A duly authorized biography of Mr. Moody, however, is to be prepared under the direction of the family, and all friends wishing to contribute authentic material are requested to send the same to his son, W. R. Moody, East Northfield, Mass. Meanwhile, a briefer biographical sketch will be compiled by his son and issued in the Moody Colportage Library with all possible dispatch.

—"There are two kinds of heretics," said Prof. S. C. Mitchell, at the recent Baptist Congress: "those that think ahead of their age, and those that think behind their age—only we punish the former, but let the latter go free." When the age comes which does not stone its prophets, the millennium is nigh, even at the doors. But is there not a third class of heretics—those that bring forth, in new dress, some old error, against which the true prophets of all ages have fought? Unfortunately, the heretic who thinks behind his age has too often been the foster father of this class of heresy.—Religious Herald.

—A new religion is not necessary. What we need at present is a fresh application of the old to the daily life of the world of industry, of art, of letters. When this is made there will no longer be a cry for something new. The old is good enough if properly applied.—St. Louis Christian Adocate.

—A recent writer says:

Of all ways of dealing with "Higher Criticism," none is more futile, and none will more certainly bring its own Nemesis, than that which thinks it sufficient to brand its followers with charges of willful faithlessness, and to crush them with impotent anathemas, which will only rebound upon the heads of those who utter them.

Another way, equally common among ignorant and incompetent controversialists of the opposite extreme, is to talk as if the Higher Criticism had robbed the Bible of all value, and had shown it to be a mass of falsity and imposture. Here again it requires some knowledge of language, of literature, of history, of national idiosyncrasies, to be even capable of estimating the real nature of a result arrived at. Ignorant and irreverent attempts to discredit and vilify the Bible are even more egregiously illiterate than the idle superexaltation which would turn it into a fetish or an amulet.

—There was a recognition service held at Beulah Church, this city, on Tuesday evening, the 2nd inst., on the occasion of the beginning of Bro. W. A. Moore's work as pastor of that church. Most of our ministers in the city were present, with representatives from their churches, making it a union service. The editor of this paper presided, making a few introductory remaks. D. R. Dungan gave the charge to the preacher, reading copiously from the New Testament and supplementing with observations on the nature of the preacher's work. Bro. W. A. Moore responded to this in a very happy way and made us all feel that he was the right man for the place. A. J. Marshall, our city evangelist, delivered the charge to the church and made it feel its share of the responsibility. This was responded to briefly by Bro. Handley, one of the elders of the church, who called on the heads of the various departments of the church to respond in behalf of their respective organizations. This they all did, pledging the Sunday-school, Endeavor Society, C. W. B. M. and Ladies' Aid Society to hearty co-operation with the new pastor. Brief addresses of welcome were made by visiting pastors and other brethren. These speeches were interlarded with appropriate songs, and after the benediction the people lingered to partake of cake and coffee and enjoy a social season together. It was a very delightful occasion, and Beulah Church, under its new pastor, starts off with every prospect of enlarged success.

"Ouch!"

That is about the mildest form of outcry a man makes when rheumatism suddenly tweaks him. In its worst forms rheumatism is a living death. The victim, incapable of moving hand or foot, has no part in the great procession of life, on which he gazes with hopeless eyes. A great many sufferers from rheumatism, who had given up hope, have been cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. A medicine which will cleanse the blood from uric acid and other poisons, will cure rheumatism. "Golden Medical Discovery" has no equal in its power to cleanse the blood and to enrich it. "Discovery" contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

"I had been troubled with rheumatism for twelve years," writes Mr. R. J. McKnight, of Cades, Williamsburg County, S. C., "so bad at times I could not leave my bed. I was badly crippled. Tried many doctors and two of them gave me up to die. None of them did me much good. The pains in my back, hips, and legs (and at times in my head), would nearly kill me. My appetite was very bad. Everybody who saw me said I must die. I took five bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of 'Pellets,' and to-day my health is good after suffering twelve years with rheumatism."

D. R. Dungan, pastor of the Mt. Cabanne Church, was called to St. Paul, Minn., last week to preach a funeral discourse for the wife of E. T. Gadd, of that city. Mrs. Gadd was a daughter of Jonas Hartzell, one of our pioneer preachers.

The church has freely expressed its appreciation of the labors of Brother Prunty and the fellowship of love is reciprocated. Bro. Prunty also preaches for the church in Lemonville where he has had 15 additions during the last year; 18 at Unionville. The church has been active in all lines of work and especially in spiritual attainments, and we rejoice in the success of both church and pastor.

The services were impressive and greatly enjoyed. During the year just closed Bro. Snively has received into fellowship 215 persons.

The Christian Church, of Augusta, Kan., at the close of the evening services on December 24, gave an expression of their appreciation of their pastor, R. W. Woodside and wife, by presenting to the pastor a gold watch and to his wife a beautiful ring. The church at Haverhill, where R. W. Woodside preaches Sunday afternoon, also joined in the present-making by presenting to the pastor a purse well filled with money.

Wm. E. Phillips, of Battle Creek, Mich., writing us under date of Jan. 2nd, says that a cablegram from Calcutta, India, announces the death of Frederick Wallen Brown, of smallpox. Recently the Bozetta church gave Brother Moore and his wife a reception and the gift of a fine study chair. The Cortland church had sometime previous set the reception and gift example. A. B. Houze, pastor First Christian Church, Riverside, Cal., advertises as a fraud one Rev. Stanley, now on the Pacific Coast, but formerly of Indiana, who represents himself sometimes as a Baptist preacher, in distress, to Baptists, and sometimes as a Christian preacher, when applying for assistance to one of our churches. He warns churches against him.

S. T. Willis, of New York, is expressing his New Year's greetings in the following scriptural language, plainly printed on a plain card, signed and dated:

Lord is round about his people.
Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him.
The Lord shall keep thee from all evil; he shall keep thy soul.
The Lord shall keep thy going out and thy coming in,
From this time forth and forever more.
The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with thee.
Yours sincerely."

Missouri State Missions.

Bro. Abbott sends us a reminder that January 14 is State Mission Day. We have allowed our offerings for state missions to be too much overshadowed by other missionary offerings. This is not right. It is injustice in the long run to our general home and our foreign missionary work to neglect the cause of state missions. Missouri seems to have been especially derelict in responding to the call for state missions. We do not enter into any analysis of the causes of this fact, but the fact itself stares us in the face. The churches in Missouri must renew their allegiance and their liberality toward the state work, or else the cause in the state will suffer great loss. Will not the churches see to it that the month of January is not allowed to pass without an offering being made for state missions? It would seem to be sufficient to call the attention of the brethren of the state to the facts just mentioned to arouse them to a sense of their duty and obligations.

Our Next Congress.

The second Congress of the Disciples of Christ will be held in the Central Church, Indianapolis, March 27-29. The program has been concluded and will be published soon. It contains a number of our ablest thinkers and writers, and the subjects to be treated are those which will excite a great deal of public interest. The success of the first Congress, which was held in this city a year ago, both in attendance and in the deep interests awakened by the discussion, inspires the hope and the belief that the Indianapolis Congress will be of deep interest to the brotherhood. We call attention to the time and place thus early that our readers may plan to attend same.

Dedication of Hyde Park Church, Chicago.

On Lord's day, the last day of the old year, the church at Hyde Park, Chicago, which during the five years of its history has been meeting and worshiping in halls, dedicated a new church building of its own on the Divinity House lot on 57th Street and Lexington Avenue, diagonally across from the University Quadrangle. It is a neat and rather handsome brick structure, capable of accommodating about 350 people, with robing rooms, pastor's study, vestibule, etc., and costing, with furnishings, about $7,000. Bro. Errett Gates, the pastor, had secured subscriptions and otherwise provided for the payment of all this amount except about $1,400. The day of dedication was intensely cold and disagreeable, and only a small audience was present, but nearly half the above amount was subscribed, and Bro. Gates thinks he will have no difficulty in securing the remainder. He has exhibited fine executive ability and any amount of perseverance in carrying forward this enterprise in the face of obstacles which would have discouraged a less determined man. The church deserves credit for the manner in which it has held together, during the past five years, under discouraging circumstances, and is to be congratulated on the brighter prospects which are now before it. As stated above, the church building is erected on a part of the lot belonging to the Divinity House of the Disciples under some equitable arrangement with its Board of Trustees by which it pays an annual rental on the ground. The late bequest of Bro. Davis for the purpose of erecting a suitable hall on this lot gives an assured future to this enterprise. This congregation which was for three or four years under the support of the A. C. M. S. became an independent, self-supporting church a year ago, and we were surprised to learn that it leads all our Chicago churches in its offering to both Home and Foreign Missions, in the report of last year.

By invitation the editor of this paper was present and preached the dedicatory discourse in the forenoon of the Lord's day mentioned. In the afternoon there was a congratulatory service held, which was attended by representatives of most of our Chicago churches and their ministers, and there were a number of very happy speeches made on the occasion. Prof. Ames, of Butler College, to whom chief credit is due for the raising of the funds for the Divinity House lot during his connection with the House, was present at both services and made a brief address in the afternoon.

Located as the church is, under the very shadow of the University of Chicago, where it will have an opportunity of coming in contact with its students and influencing their minds with the truth for which the church stands, it has been an important mission and a most responsible field. We sincerely hope that it will be found equal to this responsibility, and enjoy a prosperous and useful future.

ADDRESS..... COLUMBIA BOOK CONCERN,

100-102-104-106-108 VINE STREET, Department "B," ST. LOUIS, MO.

Dedication at Aurora, Missiouri.

The brethren at Aurora, Lawrence Co., Mo., have erected and appropriately furnished a new and commodious church building. The editor of this paper was with them last Lord's day (Jan. 7) on the occasion of the dedication, preaching for them morning and evening and giving a brief address at an afternoon communion service. About fifteen years ago, returning from a Southern trip we passed through Aurora, then a straggling village, and preached one night in an old, dilapidated building which then served as a church house. Since then the lead mines have been discovered and the sleepy village has grown to a stirring little city of eight or ten thousand population. It is gratifying to know that this increase in material prosperity has not served to eclipse their interest in the kingdom of God. For about twenty years Bro. W. B. Cochran has served as pastor, with perhaps a year or or two of absence. He is known and respected throughout that section of the state, and to him is largely due the credit of the present handsome building. The house is capable of seating 600 or 700 people, is neatly papered and carpeted, and with the furnishings cost a little more than $3,000, utilizing the material in the old structure. Of this amount there remained something less than $800 to provide for, and this was provided at the morning service, to the great joy and delight of the congregation.

The spirit of Christian unity in the town is indicated by the fact that the Methodist, Congregationalist and Presbyterian Churches dismissed their services in the morning, and some of them in the evening, also, their ministers attending our services with their congregations. They also participated in the fellowship of giving. There were representatives of a number of churches in the vicinity present. Bro. Moore, pastor of the church at Marionville, came down with quite a number of his congregation and added to the interest of the occasion. The house was filled both morning and evening, and we do not remember ever to have addressed more attentive and appreciative audiences. Bro. Cochran is to continue the meeting for a number of weeks, and we trust may have a large ingathering. Altogether it was a bright, triumphant day in the history of the church, which henceforth has a better outlook and greater facilities for usefulness than ever before. May it serve both as a lighthouse and a fortress for the truth for all the region round about.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I wish you to know of a new kind of missionary society I found up in Michigan, and if you think your readers would like to know about it, tell them. It was in the Christian Church in Merson, Mich., called the Trowbridge Christian Church. I found more enthusiasm there, more general intelligence on missions, and their institute work was better supported there than any other church in Michigan. The society was called the Missionary Society of the Christian Church at Merson. It was an auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. No one could be an officer in the society who was not a member of the Christian Church. Any one could become a member by signing the constitution and paying from one to 10 cents a month, a pledge no one could give more than 10 cents a month. All moneys received went to the C. W. B. M. Meetings are held Saturday night in the church once a month. The house is generally packed full and running over. The program is announced three weeks in advance at Sunday-school. Papers are read on various departments of mission work. Songs are sung, declamations rendered and short speeches made. The program is made as attractive as possible. They sometimes have instrumental music. The pastor is present and does all he can to make the meetings as successful as psssible. Sometimes letters from foreign missionaries are read and their work explained. The young and the old, the rich and the poor all come to these meetings and find something to interest them. The society has had two presidents during the last six months. It is 14 years old. I think many of our churches could profit by such a society.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Proverb Calendar for 1900 is the prettiest we have seen. It is borne in front of two little girls, whose fresh, sweet faces and dainty robes of blue and pink form a pleasing picture upon which to look during the coming year. The Calendar is printed from large, plain type and gives valuable information. The Calendar is made to stand alone, or it can be suspended from the wall. Every one will want Hood's Calendar, and you should ask your druggist for it at once. You can obtain one, if more convenient, by sending 6 cents in stamps to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

NO MERRY CHRISTMAS.

Last Saturday was called "Black Saturday" in this country, and last week, the second week in December, was styled "Black Week.' 'During that week came a series of dark dispatches from three defeated generals in South Africa. General Gatacre was defeated at Stormberg, General Methuen at Magersfontein and General Buller at Colenso. Never have I seen such depression in England. The awful lists of killed, wounded and missing are alone replete with horror; but the three extraordinary victories of Lord Methuen had raised the national hopes to the point of highest exultation and expectation in respect to further triumphs over the Boers. Then came blow on blow to all these sanguine anticipations. The campaign is blocked. Our commanders have been winning victories by flinging their heroic soldiers at entrenchments manned by Boers armed with Mauser rifles. Thus some thousands of precious lives have been flung uselessly away in order to force the pace and to reach the two beleaguered cities, Kimberley and Ladysmith. Many people are drawing analogies between the beginning of this conflict and that of your great Civil War, when for a time, all the efforts of the Northern armies were thwarted, until the Southerners were worn down by loss of numbers which could not be repaired. We are all in mourning in England. I have been asking my congregation not to wish me, or each other, a "Merry Christmas," for such a salutation is like an invitation to dance on the graves of our dead soldiers.

WHY THIS WAR?

Though I have touched on this all-absorbing topic before, I must add a few words on the reasons which lie at the back of the appalling situation. I was glad, some weeks ago, to see the line of argument taken up, editorially, in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which remark, on my part, shows how fully I partake of the weaknesses of human nature. I suppose that argument of yours, Bro. Garrison, pleased me so much because it happened exactly to express my own view of the Boer Government. You consider that government to have taken up an intolerable attitude in reference to all which constitutes progressive civilization. How any one can think otherwise it seems difficult to comprehend. The Boers have plunged into war rather than (1) grant a genuine five years' franchise to British subjects settled in the Transvaal, (2) submit questions of dispute under the Convention of London to arbitration, and (3) refer other outstanding difficulties to a friendly conference at Capetown. Surely these terms proposed, as late as September 8, by Mr. Chamberlain to President Kruger, were moderation itself, but Kruger would have none of them and his secretary, Mr. Reitz, responded to them by his insulting ultimatum.

A WAR ABOUT TWO IDEALS.

We have a small minority in England against England, in respect to this unhappy war, just as you have one in America against America concerning the Philippine trouble. I think that the matter is put with perfect accuracy by Professor Westlake, of Cambridge University, in a recent lecture. In the light of his exposition the underlying cause of the war is too clear to admit of any question. It is sometimes said that this is a war between two races. It would be much more accurate to say, as Professor Westlake does, that it is a war between two ideals, of which only one is racial. On the one side is the British ideal of a fair field for every race and every language; of equal rights for all white men, with a humane treatment of all the natives. It happens that this ideal makes for the English language and for the ascendency of British institutions, and involves the predominance of the British crown. But it neither seeks nor involves the ascendency of the British race. On the other side is the Transvaal ideal, which is racial alike in its object, and if it succeeds, in its result. It seeks the subjection of the natives, the maintenance of Boer institutions and the ascendency of the Boer oligarchy.

MR. THEODORE SCHREINER'S VIEW.

Great importance is to be attached to the views of enlightened and unprejudiced men who are natives of South Africa and have intimate knowledge of the whole country. One of the most competent and authoritative of these is Theodore Schreiner, brother of the Cape Premier and also of the famous Olive Schreiner. That gifted woman is passionately pro-Boer and has for years been pouring forth plaintive and hysterical rhapsodies against the English. But it is impossible to understand her reasoning, because she never indulges in so unnecessary a commodity as reason or argument. The authoress of "Life on a South African Farm," her only book at all worth reading, never condescends to do anything but to scream incoherently. Her mother, a very clever woman, from whom she derives much of her genius, entirely disagrees with her, both politically and religiously. Olive Schreiner is an agnostic of the most extreme species. But just as Marie Corelli believes only in the devil, the Prince of Wales and Marie Corelli, so does Olive Schreiner pin all her faith to a peculiar trinity of three gods. These divinities are the Kaffir, Kruger and Olive Schreiner. One of your great New York dailies has been receiving frequent communications from this lady. Each of them is a stormy malediction pronounced on the Britishers. But her brother, Theodore, has been writing in the Cape Times in a very different strain. He is not a politician, but is exceedingly active and very well known in the religious and social world of South Africa. He goes straight to the root of the matter. He says that on the one side is the ideal formula of "Africa for the Africanders." This expression simply means that those of a certain race and language should grasp, hold, and wield political, civil and social power over the rest of the inhabitants, and that by virtue of the rifle. On the other side, continues Mr. Schreiner, is the ideal, the system, or the tendency, which finds its most fitting verbal expression in the watchword: "Equal rights for all civilized men south of Zambesi," which means that all men of whatever race who have reached a certain standard of education and respectability shall be entitled to a share in the government of the country, that there shall be no tyrannous oligarchy, but ruling by the will of the civilized majority. It is the conflict between these two ideals which is now being fought out in South Africa.

THE ONLY POSSIBLE ISSUE.

Mr. Schreiner proceeds: "To such a war there can be but one possible issue, or else all God's governance of the history of the world in the past must be reversed. Not backward, to tyranny, to deprivation of rights, to corruption; but forward, to wider share in governing, more generous concession of equal rights, a purer form of government, is the trend of the Higher Hand that guides the world's destinies." May I ask my American readers whether Mr. Schreiner's philosophy does not really apply alike to the motives of England and America with regard to South Africa and the Philippines respectively?

AGAIN AT SOUTHAMPTON.

Once more I have been called on to visit our Church of Christ at Southampton. E. M. Todd and I went together to attend the recognition and welcome meeting in honor of Bro. Leslie A. Morgan. Thus is one more American pastor installed in our ministry in England. American preachers find increasing favor in this country. I owe all the advanced enlightenment I possess concerning the gospel to American preachers, and thus my heart is always responsive whenever any Church of Christ here expresses a wish to secure a pastor from your side. We cannot yet do without a good proportion of American preachers. In the beautiful town of Southampton it is peculiarly appropriate that we should have one of your pastors. That city is linked with America by growing commercial connections. It fell to me to preside at the meeting and to give the charge to the church, while Bro. Todd gave the charge to the church. We believe that Bro. Morgan has come to stay. He first preached at Southampton while passing through. He had been cycling on the Continent with Professor Ernest Garrison, with whom he "wheeled" through France, Switzerland, Germany, into North Italy. He is a splendidly vigorous young man, belonging to the school of "muscular Christianity" so much believed in by Charles Kingsley. He has cycled over 100 miles a day for several days consecutively. A strong man, strong all round, is needed at Southampton, and in this brother you have sent us the sort of man just required to rise to the fine opportunities of the field.

St. Louis Letter.

The newest pastor in St. Louis, of the churches of Christ, is W. A. Moore, of Webster City, Ia. He was installed in the pulpit of the Beulah Church on last Tuesday night. He was called sometime ago, but like some sinners, did not come when he was called; and yet, like all saints do, he put his house in order before his departure —from Webster City.

St. Louis believes in Moore preaching. Within four years she has had four Moore preachers; A. B., Luther, S. B. and W. A. Two are gone and two—the latter—remain. There is much more of the two last Moores than the two former ones —physically; they are big men and St. Louis needs that kind of preachers.

Beulah is one of the newer churches of St. Louis, located in a great and needy field. The church was born out of a Bible-school which was primarily a mission of the Mt. Cabanne Church, but the Beulah Church has since become the mother of the school and the school that brought forth the church has become the child, docile, obedient and industrious, as all good church children should be.

W. A. Moore comes to St. Louis with a splendid reputation for both pulpit and field work, and will be surrounded by earnest, faithful workers in the Beulah Church. At present their membership is estimated at 340, their Bible-school at 220, their Christian Endeavor at 25, the C. W. B. M. auxiliary at 15 and their Junior Endeavor at 25. The church knows what good preaching is, has had some fine protracted meetings and is in fine shape for a forward movement.

Bro. Aldinger, the retiring pastor of the Beulah Church, is a young man of clean hands and pure heart, deeply imbued with the Christ-spirit, studious, earnest and industrious, and would make a splendid assistant for some overburdened pastor. With more experience he has the promise of usefulness and ability in the care of a church, and even now surpasses many who call themselves pastors. Any of our ordinary churches need not hesitate to employ Brother Aldinger.

And now, that we are on the subject, we might as well tell you about the rest of our St. Louis preachers. The last year or so has wrought great changes upon the personnel of the pulpit of the Church of Christ in St. Louis. E. T. McFarland has succeeded W. H. Kern in the Fourth Church; Baxter Waters has succeeded F. G. Tyrrell in the Central; S. B. Moore has succeeded W. W. Sniff in Compton Heights; W. D. Pittman has succeeded Dr. Slusher in the Second; D. N. Gillett has succeeded Luther Moore in Tuxedo; A. J. Marshall has succeeded W. B. Young in Carondelet and W. A. Moore has succeeded F. C. Aldinger in Beulah. With one exception these are all new men to St. Louis.

The oldest remaining pastor in St. Louis is O. A. Bartholomew, of the West End Church. Brother Bartholomew has been in St. Louis more than ten years, was first pastor of the First, then of Mt. Cabanne and now of West End, the newest church in the city, unless we except the reorganized church in Carondelet. Brother Bartholomew is not only the oldest remaining pastor of our people in St. Louis, but has probably given more money to the cause of Christ in this city than any other one preacher, present or past. He has planned and superintended the building of six of the present houses of worship in the city. His hair is white and the burden of years is beginning to tel upon his frame, but he is yet one of our most active, vigorous preachers of the city.

Mt. Cabanne boasts of having the youngest pastor in the city, not in years but in spirit. Dr. Dungan will never grow old; the humorous vein in his nature will not permit it. The frosts have touched his hair, but not his heart. He seldom preaches a sermon or delivers an address that he does not provoke a smile; sometimes a real genuine laugh. His reputation for scholarship, pen and pulpit ability, is national.

W. D. Pittman is one of our St. Louis boys. He grew up in the First Church. His first success was in the business world, from which he now enjoys a comfortable income. His second success was over the business world; it did not divorce him from the church. He persisted in Christian work, both in the church and out of it. He took great interest in the outcast and the fallen of the city, and for years was active in down-town mission work. God finally led him to the Second Church, and he faltered not at the burden. Since then he has reduced the church debt materially and held one of the most remarkable protracted meetings in the history of the church, and now preaches to one of the largest audiences Sunday morning and evening of any of our city pastors. He has done and is doing a remarkable work in and for the Second Church; he is still a young man, with the promise of many years of usefulness in the Master's service. He not only donates his time to the Second Church, but keeps a missionary, Miss Frankie McCarron, constantly at work, and in addition pays the interest on the church debt, a matter of more than $250 per year.

E. T. McFarland, W. F. Hamann and D. N. Gillett each have important fields; their work, however like that in the Second Church, is chiefly of the missionary sort. Brother McFarland comes of a family of preachers and seems well fitted for the complex work of his field. The foreign element is strong in the vicinity of the Fourth Church. They recently concluded one protracted meeting there and are now in another, in which they are assisted by our city evangelist, A. J. Marshall. Brother McFarland is new to the city, but has made a good impression and is well liked by his people. He is an indefatagible worker.

W. F. Hamann has been at the Fifth Church for several years. This church is the child of the Second, as also the Fourth, but located in South St. Louis among the breweries. Brother Hamann has labored for this church at a great financial sacrifice, but with intent. He counts the sacrifice as but expense money for a schooling that he needed, both in field work and in contact with the St. Louis ministry. Not every young man has shown such wisdom.

D. N. Gillett has a field, Tuxedo, just outside the city limits. He is a new man, but is displaying a spirit of determination that is winning friends for him and fruit for the church. He and his equally able and energetic wife are students of Drake University and their studious devotion to the cause is a matter of remark and commendation.

We come now to Compton Heights. A city set on a hill cannot be hid, and S. B. Moore, its pastor, permits no clouds to darken its light. No preacher's sermons are more frequently reported in the St. Louis press than are those of Brother Moore, and few preachers have a more receptive, responsive, appreciative audience than he. This church is handicapped by a big debt on its property, but a church that can survive a cyclone is not likely to go down under a debt, at least not while Brother Moore remains its pastor.

And now, to be in accord with the Scriptures, we shall speak of the Frist Church and its pastors last in this letter. Since the departure of Brother Tyrrell from the Central, no pastor of our faith in this city enjoys the distinctive honor of larger regular audiences than F. O. Fannon, the First's pastor. So great indeed has his work become that the church has now a regularly employed assistant, Brother Cook. Not only has Brother Fannon larger regular audiences than any other of our city pastors, but he has more additions and more baptisms. His church is in the protracted meeting spirit for about six months of the year or longer. No man can tell you how Bro. Fannon preaches, he has to be seen and heard in order to be understood and appreciated. He is in demand everywhere and upon occasions even with other people than his church.

But there goes the editor's bell, and I must quit. Carondelet, the Central, Bro. Marshall, and our other preachers, pastors and evangelists shall have our respects in our next. We shall take up the work of the churches more particularly after we have told you of our preachers. W. W. H.

CLOGGED KIDNEYS

They Produce Poison in the Blood, Become Infected With Disease, Break Down the Entire System and Bring on Bright's Disease.

You know what happens to a sewer when it becomes clogged, don't you?

Do you know what happens to the human system when the kidneys become clogged? They are unable to throw out the impurities from the blood, and become infected with poisons; they decay, fall apart, and pass out in the urine; the blood, unfiltered, carries the poison all over the the system and if not checked death follows. The kidneys are the sewers of the human system.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, sometimes the feet, limbs, or body bloat, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

When you are sick, then, no matter what you think the name of your disease is, the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Perhaps you are in doubt about your kidneys and want to find out. Here's a simple test. Take from your urine passed when you arise in the morning about two ounces; place in a glass or bottle and let it stand for twenty-four hours. If, upon examination, you find any settlings or sediment, if it is milky or cloudy, or if particles float about in it, disease has gotten a foothold in your kidneys and nature is calling for help.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, you would proffit by taking Swamp-Root every now and then as a preventative, and thus absolutely forestall kidney and bladder troubles.

The famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless, too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case, that a special arrangement has been made with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by which all of its readers who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail; also a book telling all about kidney and bladder diseases, and containing some of the thousands of testimonial tributes from men and women reclaimed to lives of happiness and usefulness by the means of Swamp-Root, the kidney remedy.

Be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Swamp-Root is sold by druggists the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptians from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, mauufaotured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Colorado Letter.

In this letter, if you please, I will give some account of a town in the "wild and woolly West." The place of which I write is situated at the foot of Pike's Peak, and is seventy-five miles south of Denver. It is the capital of El Paso county, Col. It is the seat of Colorado College. While the state was yet a territory this institution was founded. A gift of $10,000 and a grant of seventy acres of land, made by the founders of Colorado Springs, was the beginning of this prosperous college. Five and twenty years have passed since the inauguration of this enterprise. The property is worth a million dollars. There is an endowment of $350,000. There are nine buildings especially adapted to their several purposes. With a single exception they are of stone. Heat and electric light are furnished from a central plant on the college grounds. The faculty contains the names of between thirty-five and forty persons. The number of students is in the neighborhood of five hundred. Last year a hall devoted to music was erected at a cost of $30,000. A science hall will be built this year. The cost of this building with its equipment will be about $175,000. Eighty thousand of this amount is now in sight. There is a flourishing Y. M. C. A. and a successful Y. W. C. A. in connection with the college, besides the literary societies usual in such institutions.

Colorado Springs is the financial center of the world famous Cripple Creek gold mining district. There are three banks in the town. The First National and the Exchange National have each about $3,000,000 on deposit. The El Paso County Bank, a private institution, seems to do as much business as either of the banks named. Colorado Springs capitalists are building another railroad to Cripple Creek. The fare for the round trip will be a dollar and a half. This will enable men to engage in business at Cripple while they will reside at the Springs. The output of gold last year was $18,000,000. From the beginning the mines of Cripple Creek have added $70,000,000 to the wealth of the world in gold. The Independence mine paid $488,000 in dividends to stockholders in December. This was a quarterly payment. The legal rate of interest in Colorado is eight per cent. Money is often loaned at ten.

There is a library of 25,000 volumes belonging to Colorado College. The library building would be an ornament to any New England town. W. F. Slocum is president of Colorado College. He is a Massachusetts man and a Congregational minister. The college, however, is free from sectarian control. It has no organic connection with any denomination. The atmosphere is distinctly and emphatically Christian.

Colorado Springs is a prohibition town. The founders secured it such by a clause in the title deeds. The population is about 20,000. It is the most orderly place of its size that I saw. The moral tone of the community is strong. There are only two police men, and they have hardly enough to do to keep them in good health.

Colorado Springs is a popular resort for invalids. They are here from all parts of the land. The very dry atmosphere is supposed to be helpful to persons who are afflicted with pulmonary trouble. Some who come find relief—many do not.

The Christian Church has possibly four hundred members. The house of worship is supposed to have cost $16,000. It was built when J. P. Lucas was pastor. As soon as the holder of the mortgage will consent to surrender the paper, the church will be free from debt. The money to pay the debt is in the church treasury. The mortgage will mature in 1901. It is probable that the creditor will decline to accept payment before that date. This is the only case in which I have known a church with the money in hand and anxious to pay its debts, unable to do so! Such is the present financial condition of the Christian Church in Colorado Springs. During the last year for all purposes the members of the congregation as such have contributed more than $6,000.

What do you now think of "the wild and woolly West?"

The Nebraska Christian Ministerial Association held its semiannual meeting in Geneva, Fillmore County, Dec. 26-28.

There are 180 congregations of Disciples of Christ in Nebraska and 120 preachers. The spirit of the meeting was perfect. Those present were chiefly young men. Their desire for knowledge was eager. They were especially anxious to know how best to do their work. This was a school of the prophets, in fact.

A. W. Henry, pastor in Geneva, is president of the association; R. A. Schell, of Hebron, is secretary and treasurer. W. P. Aylesworth, president of Cotner University, attended the meeting. The financial agent of this institution, J. W. Hilton, was also in attendance The financial burden which has oppressed Cotner for some years will soon be removed. Less than a thousand dollars will free it from debt. The property is worth $50,000. This is a conservative estimate. Seventy-five students were in attendance last term. The brethren believe in Cotner University. They are full of hope as to its future.

Other persons present at this meeting of the Association who were prominent in the exercises were W. A. Baldwin, E. E. Boyd, G. J. Chapman, C. W. Hemny, W. B. Harter, L. A. Hussong, T. A. Lindenmeyer, A. L. Ogden, Wm. Sumpter, V. E. Shivley, H. S. Lander, M. A. Swizer, Samuel Gregg, D. A. Wickizer, E. V. Torrell, W. H. Vanderzee and Jacob Gilstrap, whose names come to my mind as I write—a noble company of the Lord's servants.

B. B. TYLER.

The Four Young Men.

Just as in many communities at hand there cling to many places and men the names or designations attached to them by the circumstances of earlier life, so in our China mission the designation of "The Four Young Men" clings to four English co-workers who have not been least in the burden-bearing. They were all members of W. T. Moore's training class which he conducted during his work in London. Bros. Saw and Hearnden came out in 1886; Bros. Arnold and Hunt in 1889. The former two have finished their itinerating here below and have entered their permanent home above. Malignant typhus fever took one and the other went through the swollen waters of the Cheo River. The other two still stand in the front ranks of the advance army of the cross.

Dr. Macklin founded our work in China. Bros. Hearnden and Saw followed him. With him at Nankin in a native house they lived and studied the first year; then, new recruits having arrived, they began the pioneer work of founding our interior stations. On the highway between Nankin and Pekin, 45 miles from the former, lies the walled city of Chu Cheo with a population of 10,000. They could at first find no man inside who dared rent them a building, so establishing themselves in a small market town near by, they made repeated visits to the place until they had broken down prejudice and obtained a foothold. For seven years their home was within the mud walls of this Chinese house. In 1889 Bros. Hunt and Arnold reached Shanghai and in two weeks were in Chinese dress and queue, studying the language at Chu Cheo. One little Chinaman was struck dumb with amazement when he jerked at the "foreign devil's queue" and found it parted company with the foreigner. The following year a further attempt was made to continue the line of the interior stations to the north, but they were stoned out of the city in which they proposed to settle, and the riots of Central China coming on at this time stopped, not only advancing, but emptied many stations already established. Bros. Saw and Arnold were called to Nankin for a year, during which time they married, and as soon as they were released from this station opened the station at Luh Hoh, 20 miles northeast of Nankin. When the women first entered this city the people were heard asking each other, "Are the women foreign devils too?" Very soon Bro. Arnold went to Wuhu, 60 miles up the river from Nankin and took that station in charge for over a year. Then began a series of itinerating trips which, with other workers, opened up the third of our interior stations at Lu Cheo fu, a city of 60,000 people, 70 miles north of Wuhu. This station is destined to become the center of still further work in the interior of An Hwui Province.

In the summer of '96 came the hurried news from Chu Cheo that Bro. Hearnden, in crossing the river within a short distance of home, had been drowned. He had been on an itinerating trip to the homes of Christian farmers, among which class about Chu Cheo the work had been specially fruitful. His horse had strangled and sank. Rising and struggling for his own life the horse dealt Bro. Hearnden a death-blow and both went down. In sight of a vast crowd of excited, curious and sympathetic Chinese his body was taken from the water, and they had their first opportunity to see foreigners in the presence of their own dead. Bro. Hearnden had lain down his life for in the service. Bro. Saw was called from the ripening fields at Luh Hoh, which never since, on account of shortness of workers, has been occupied as a resident station by us. Friends at home, send some one to this station where the harvest is ready. For three years Bros. Saw and Hunt continued the work at Chu Cheo. The famine refugees, which came south from the Shantung Province, made a heavy burden upon their hearts, and they ministered of both strength and means to relieve the misery. After a hard winter of such work, in 1898 Bro. Hunt's family returned to England on forlough, and Bro. Saw and wife were left alone. At the Nankin annual convention, the fever which had been gathering its hold on him for some time broke out, and within a week Bro. Saw went home to his Father. Up in Kuling, the sanitarium of Central China workers, stands a fitting monument to this man, who was of our mission force the most spiritual. It is the little stone church that knows no creed or name save that of Christ and his followers, and in which all Christians there assembled worship in union. The memorial tablet on its walls show that its erection was largely through Bro. Saw's influence and work, and is a most fitting monument to him whom the love of Christ constrained.

Too Much Honey

PALLS ON THE PALATE.

A man ate a heaping saucer of Grape-Nuts every morning because they "tasted so good."

In about ten days he began to turn against the food, and finally lost the pleasure of his favorite dish altogether.

The same thing happens to a child who eats too much honey or candy, or any other good thing. The system gets more than it needs and nature revolts, in order to prevent further overfeeding. Grape-Nuts furnish a condensed food and when eaten in moderation, give one a delicious dish every morning that is looked forward to with pleasant anticipation. When not more than three heaping teaspoons are used at a meal, the system quickly absorbs all of the nutriment, and the person discovers this fact by his improved feeling of health and strength. Use Grape-Nuts steadily, but avoid excess.

Higher Criticism At Beanville.

Beanville, mo, jan 4, 1900.

We had a verry intrestin praire-meetin at cherch, last nite. Not only wuz it intrestin, but I think I may ad that it wuz awlso proffitabul.

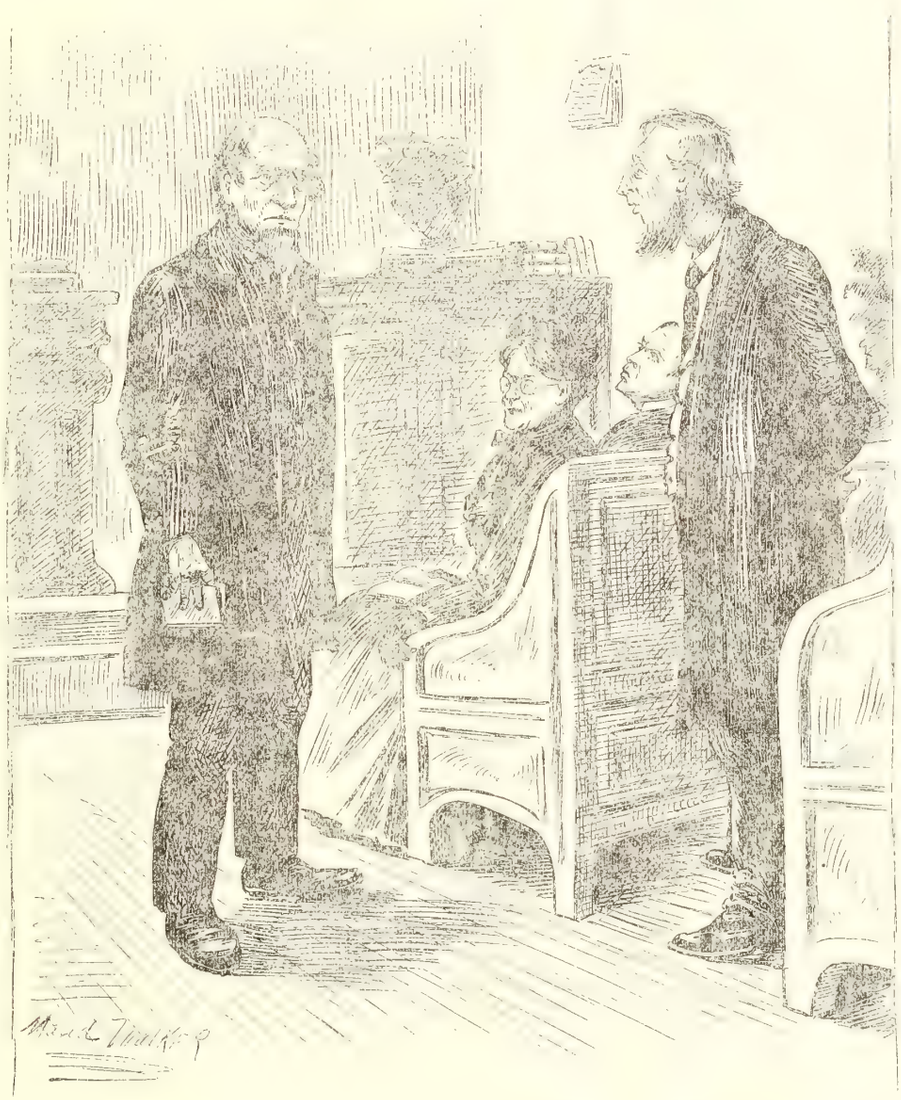
Fer 2 or three yeres past a few ov our members haz bin reedin the Chrischun Battel Flag, wich iz publisht in Cincinatty. Wun ov their agints cum here and staid a week, werkin fer the paper. The regler subskripshun prise ov the Battel Flag wuz $1.50, but when this agint found noboddy wood subskribe at that prise, he begun to cum down. He ferst dropt to wun-twenty-five, with no rezults. Then he offerd it fer a doller, and got wun subskriber. Finully he cum down to 75 cents, and got 2 or three moar.

Natcherally, the reeders ov the Battel Flag haz bin considrabul stirred up, ov lait, on the subjeck of hire krittysizzum. Evvry week they wood reed the "Departmint ov Biblikul Krittysizzum," and wood be moar and moar convinsed that our cause wuz goin to the dogs. Thoze who wuz subskribers ov the Battle Flag loned their papers to uther members ov the cherch, until kwite a number wuz disterbed about "modern skeptysizzum maskeradin under the naim ov skolership," and sich things, ov wich the Battel Flag talked profusely evvry week. Hire krittysizzum was gettin to be the most diskussed topick in Beanville.

It wuzzent long until I diskivered that nun ov thoze wich wuz so werked up on the subjeck, even so mutch az knowed what hire krittysizzum wuz. Fer a while I tried to argu the matter, but wun day I pickt up a book wich my boy Zeke had borrowed from the skule teecher. It wuz rote by a feller naimed George Eliot, and in it wuz theze werds: "It is as useless to fight against the interpretations of ignorance as to whip the fog." This struck me az bein good horse sents, and rite then and thare I kwit arguin with the reeders ov the Battel Flag, and nevver sed no moar on the subjeck until last nite, at prair-meetin.

It cum about this way: Bruther Goodman, our pastor, had bin called away from town, and had asked me to taik charge ov the praire-meetin. Thare wuz a good menny out, fer we hav good meetins at Beanville. I opened the meetin, and after reedin a chapter and offrin prair, I maid a few remarx, and left the meetin in the hands ov the brethrun.

Bruther Wilsun wuz the ferst to speek. He iz a reeder ov the Battel Flag and a dissipel ov the "departmint ov biblikul krittysizzum," and it wuzzent 2 minnits befoar he wuz waivin hiz arms and talkin about hire krittysizzum. "I am sick at hart" he sez, "when I look round and see the way in wich the deer old Bible iz bein attact," he sez, "by thoze who maik a pretence ov lovin it" he sez. "Even in our own brutherhood," he sez, "thare are men who haz gone so far astray." he sez, "that they no longer denownse awl hire kritticks az infidels and awl hire krittysizzum az infidelitty," he sez. "At this time," he sez, "when modern infidelitty iz maskeradin under the naim of skolership," he sez, "it behooves evvry Chrischun to cry aloud and spair not," he sez, "until theze hire kritticks have bin drivvun from among us, and hav gone to the ranks ov avowed infidels," he sez, "whare they belong," he sez. "I hav bin perticklerly greeved," he sez, "at the corse of the CHRISCHUN-EVANGLEST," he sez, "wich haz bin allowin men to say things which the rest ov us do not bleeve," he sez, "insted ov follerin the safe plan ov skwelshin enny man whose opinyuns are not those ov the edditer," he sez.



"WHY" HE SEZ, "ITS—ITS—ITS INFIDELITY," HE SEZ.

Wun or 2 uthers talked in the saim strane, until I thot I reely awt to say sumthing. When awl had finisht, I rose up. "Brethrun." I sez, and sistren." I sez, "I am awlwaze glad to see Chrischuns zellus fer the welfair ov Ziun and the integritty ov the scripchers," I sez. "Happy the cherch," I sez, "whuze members iz standin so ferm agenst assalts on the word ov God," I sez. "But in order that we may know jest whare we are at," I sez, "I am going to ask bruther Wilsun, who seems to hav given sum thot and considerashun to the matter," I sez, "to tell us jest what hire krittysizzum iz," I sez.

"Why," sez bruther Wilsun, "it's—it's—dont you know what it iz?"

"Yes," I sez, "I think I do," I sez, " but in order that we may awl be cleer in our minds," I sez, "I want you to stait jest what it iz," I sez.

"Well," he sez, "it's—it's—it's infidelitty," he sez.

"What maiks you think so?" I sez.

"Because," he sez, "the departmint ov biblikul krittysizzum sez it iz," he sez.

"Jesso," I sez. "I thot as mutch. Az fer me," I sez, "I hav not yet cum to the pint of pastin extracks from the 'departmint ov biblical krittysizzum' in the back ov my bible as co-ordynait parts ov revelashun," I sez, "az sum seem to hav dun," I sez. "Bruther Wilsun," I sez, "who rote the epissel to the Hebrews?"

"I don't know," he sez.

"Korrect," I sez. "Now bruther Wilsun," I sez, spoze you wuz a skoler and had spent menny yeres in studyin the New Testamint and the langwidge in wich it iz rote," I sez, "and that after cairfully examinin evry werd ov the epissel to the Hebrews, and its litrary stile and comparin it with uther epissels whuze awthership is known, and so forth," I sez, "you shood conclood that the apposel Paul rote the book, tho most skolers think he diddent," I sez. "Wood you be a inidel," I sez, "jest because you had a opinyun consernin the the awthership ov Hebrews?" I sez.

"Sertainly not," he sez.

"Amen," I sez. "But you wood be a hire krittick, jest az mutch az ennyboddy ever wuz," I sez. "Thare iz hire kritticks and hire kritticks," I sez. "Sum iz infidels, but not awl ov 'em, nor even the most ov 'em," I sez. "You are a good man, bruther Wilsun," I sez, "and theze uther brethrun who hav bin talkin tonite iz good men, and you meen well," I sez, "but you hav bin gilty of wastin a lot ov time and talk," I sez, "about sumthing you dont know nuthin about," I sez. "I aint no skoler," I sez, "and I aint fit to teech in no bible kollege," I sez. "but I hav got sum gumshun," I sez, "and I thot it my dooty to save you from makin yoreselves redickulus enny longer," I sez. "You aint so mutch to blaim fer it, eether," I sez, "fer you hav bin misled by men who know better," I sez, "and who awt to be ashaimed ov therselves," I sez.

"But," sez bruther Wilsun, "the departmint of biblikul—"

"Excuse me interuptin," I sez. "Without naimin ov no naims," I sez, let me remark that awl good men haz their little faits and failins," I sez, "and the perticklar failin of sum men iz that they imagin they are megacephalic when they are reely microcephalic. Theze werds you can look up in the dickshunnerry when you get home. The rezult ov their miskonsepshun iz that they fale to see the diffrunce betwene what God sez and what they say," I sez, "and in their zeel to denownse thoze who deny the former they oftin get mixt, and denownse thoze who deny the latter," I sez. "Az to the CHRISCHUN-EVANGLEST," I sez, "I ain't werryin nun. It haz awlwaze bin rite, so far, on evry grate queschun," I sez, "and I feel that it can be trustid fer the fuchoor," I sez. "If I had becum a reeder ov it sooner," I sez, "I wood bin saved from maikin sich a specktakul ov myself over the orgin queschun and the mishunery sosiety queschun, a few yeres ago," I sez, "wich you will remember," I sez.

"It iz now time fer this meetin to close," I sez. "We will sing him number 408—'Blest be the ty that binds,'" I sez, "and while you are findin the plase," I sez, "I will ad this werd: Thare iz mity few skolers in the Beanville cherch. The heft ov us," I sez, "are doin mity well to reed the bible in Inglish without maikin mistakes," I sez. "Sich bein the case," I sez, "I fale to see how it can proffit us to put in mutch time discussin hire krittysizzum," I sez, "pertickerly as the combined nollege ov this congregashun on the subjeck wooddent maik a paragraf," I sez. "Let us stand and sing," I sez, "after wich we will reseeve the bennydickshun."

After the meetin sevril ov the brethrun thanked me fer what I had sed. Bruther Wilsun, who iz a mity good man, tho not awlwaze az jewdishus az sum, sed that he wood, at enny rate, lern a littel sumthin about hire krittysizzum befoar he maid enny moar publick addresses on the subjeck. I don't think hire krittysizzum will be talked ov so mutch heer az it wuz. HEZEKIAH HOBSON.

Who Wrote the Ten Commandments?

In generously trying to mend the bad break made by Bro. Waters, Bro. Garrison gets himself a little tangled. Having quoted Ex. 34:1, in which God said, "I will write upon the tables the words that were on the first tables which thou brakest," he cites verse 28 thus: "And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water, and he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." Bro. Garrison declares that in this verse "it is said that Moses wrote" the Ten Commandments, and reconciles the two passages on the hypothesis that God wrote by the hand of Moses. It is true that the verse, as revised by Bro. Garrison, says that Moses did the writing, but by what authority is the period after "water" revised into a comma? and why is a capitalized "And" revised into an uncapitalized "and"? Put a period after "water" and capitalize "And," as both the King's Version and the Revised Verson do, and "he" may refer to "Lord" as its antecedent, and in view of the fact that the Lord said that he would write, correct exegesis so understands it. The King's Version capitalizes "He," showing that its authors understood the reference to be to the Lord as the writer, and not Moses. And Moses himself shuts us up to this conclusion in Deut 10: 1-4: "At that time the Lord said unto me, Hew these two tables of stone like unto the first, and come up unto me into the mount, and make thee an ark of wood. And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first tables which thou brakest, and thou shalt put them in the ark. So I made an ark of acacia wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand. And HE [the Lord] wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments," etc. Here Moses positively asserts that the Lord wrote the Ten Commandments the second time just as he did the first time. Of the first writing it is said, "And the Lord delivered unto me the two tables of stone written with the finger of God" (Deut. 9:10). The matter, then, of believing, or not believing, that the commandments were written by the finger of God is simply a matter of believing, or not believing, the Scriptures.

J. B. BRINEY.

[We are not sure whether the typewriter, printer or editor is responsible for the change in punctuation and capitalization in the passage which we quoted, but we are sure that we had no thought of changing the meaning. Nor do we think the change in punctuation does change the meaning of the passage. There are three verses in Exodus 34 which refer to this question of writing the Ten Commandments or the covenant with Israel. We will quote them:

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first, and I will write upon the tables the words that were on the first tables, which thou brakest" (v. 1).

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words; for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel" (v. 27).

"And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments" (v. 28).

Concerning these passages and Bro. Briney's criticism we would say:

1. Bro. Briney claims that the pronoun "he" in the last sentence of verse 28 refers to the Lord, and not to Moses. While it is true that the Hebrew usage would allow this, where the sense demands it, the only reason for supposing that it does refer to the Lord in this instance is the supposed necessity of making it harmonize with verse 1, where the Lord says to Moses, "I will write upon the tables," etc. In our comments we reconciled these passages by supposing that the literal writing was done by Moses, under the direction of the Lord.

2. There can be no question but that verse 27 contains a command from the Lord to Moses to "write these words." So, in harmonizing verse 28 with verse 1, Bro. Briney brings them both in collision with verse 27. The attempt which has been made by some scholars to make the writing of verse 27 mean something different from the writing referred to in the other two verses involves far greater difficulties than the method of harmonization which we give. But we have no time to go into that matter now. We agree with the writer in the Encyclopædia Britannica who says that "no such distinction lies in the text, and it is not probable that the narrator felt any contradiction between God's promise to write the words, in verse 1, and the use of human instrumentality, as implied in verse 28." (See article, "Decalogue.")

3. Finally, we cannot see what difference it make as to the authority of the words of the covenant, whether they were written by the hand of Moses at the Lord's direction, or without human instrumentality. We are dictating these comments. Bro. Briney will no do doubt treat them or regard them as written by the editor, and he will be right in so doing, although our fingers have not been concerned in the matter. It is sufficiently clear, we apprehend, from the foregoing, that it is not "a matter of believing or not believing the Scriptures," but a matter of understanding or harmonizing the different accounts contained in the Scriptures, of the giving of the Decalogue.—EDITOR.]

One of the most important subjects before the churches to-day is that of ministerial education. The preacher of the gospel must be equipped for his work. The education of twenty-five years ago is not the education required for the present. To furnish the required training the church must have well-equipped schools. The religious bodies that have the best trained ministry have their own schools. This work cannot be turned over to the state, or to the schools of other religious bodies. The Disciples are no exception; they must provide for the training of their own preachers. The Disciples of Missouri have a school that is doing this much-needed work. Christian University is preparing scores of young men to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. No grander work can be engaged in.

Chancellor Hardy is meeting with success in securing endowment. Wherever he goes he meets with encouragement. Bro. Hardy is the man for the place; he knows no such thing as fail. He inspires confidence, and success is certain.

Several new students have come in since Christmas, and others are expected; the prospects for the school were never brighter.

The course of study, both in the classical and scientific departments, is equal to that of the best colleges. The faculty is especially strong. There is no better place for men and women to get an education. Send your children to Christian University. The Bible course is equal to the theological seminaries. The course in the Bible covers its entire history and literature. Two years are given to Hebrew, electives are offered in Aramaic, Assyrian and Syriac. Two years are given to New Testament Greek. Full courses are given in Hermeneutics, Church History, History of Doctrine, Homiletics and pastoral duties, and Christian Doctrine.

Davis Errett, the pastor of the Church in Canton, is getting on well with his work. He is a general favorite with the church and the students.

L. D. Goodwin, Ph. D., is to give a course of lectures at the University on Sociology.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Pendleton Memorial Service.

On December 10th, the writer, pastor of the Adams St. Christian Church, of Jacksonville, Fla., assisted in conducting, by special request, a memorial service at Eustis, Florida, in memory of the much revered and deeply lamented W. K. Pendleton. Eustis, situated in the most beautiful lagoon region of Florida, had been the home of W. K. Pendleton since his resignation of the presidency of Bethany College. Here he had a charming home in the midst of orange groves.

The memorial services were held in the church building, which Bro. Pendleton had been so largely instrumental in erecting. It is by far the most handsome and convenient of any of our churches in this state. On this occasion it was most beautifully, tastefully and profusely decorated with floral emblems and touching designs, the work and arrangement of loving hands. The edifice was crowded, the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches closing their morning services to attend. Dr. Weeks, of the M. E. Church, read the Scriptures and led in prayer. Dr. Potter, of the Presbyterian Church, in a very feeling manner and in eloquent sentences spoke of Bro. Pendleton's influence as a friend and neighbor. Bro. Pattison tenderly referred to his influence in the church, while the writer, who delivered the main address, spoke of the source and basis of the unexceptional principles which made W. K. Pendleton the dignified, courteous, Christian gentleman. The music for the occasion was under the direction of Mrs. Lydia Charles, aided by a good choir. Sister Pendleton and a portion of the family were present, and throughout the entire services were tender and touching.

Bro. Pendleton was greatly beloved by all in Eustis and his wise counsel, genial, affable and gentlemanly bearing, greatly endeared him to the brotherhood of this entire state. We shall miss him greatly at our conventions. Our minds may be given to us, but our characters we must form. Our esteemed friend, teacher and brother cultivated those exalted powers of mind and heart until they produced a noble, exalted and Christly character. His daily walk was marked by a dignity unsullied, and his entire life was an attestation of the power of gospel truth. T. H. B.

Wrecked By Coffee.

HEART FAILURE CAUSED BY THE SEDUCTIVE CUP.

"I have been a great coffee drinker for several years. For a long time I thought I could not eat without coffee.

Have been troubled with my stomach, nerves and heart. The worse I felt, the less I ate, and the more coffee I drank.

I have taken many different kinds of medicines, but could not secure any lasting benefit. Up to eight weeks ago I had but few well days in the preceding two years. I could not do ordinary housework, except with great care, because of heart failure.

"I met a friend who said she could not drink coffee because it affected her heart so. I thought perhaps coffee might be the cause of most of my troubles, and so I quit the use of it about eight weeks ago and took up Postum Food Coffee. I have not taken any medicine, and I have gained so fast that it is a surprise to my friends as well as to myself. I can eat, sleep and work, and do not have any bad spells with my heart at all. I have been wanting to tell people what a relief it is, since I left off coffee and used Postum Food Coffee. I want the fact published that it may relieve some poor, weak, nervous woman." Nebraska Christian Institute.

The semiannual meeting of the Nebraska Christian Ministerial Association was held at Geneva, December 26-28, 1899. A very instructive and inspiring program was rendered. Every number on it was thoughtful and thought-provoking. Among other good things the following are especially worthy of mention. A discussion on the subject, "Is Controversial Preaching a Back Number?" was very interesting and profitable. The prevailing opinion seemed to be that preaching can never be devoid of the controversial feature, but it should ever be delivered in the spirit of love, which was ever manifest by the Master.

Well-written papers on the subjects, "The Ideal Revival" and "The Pastor's Relation to the C. E." were read before the association and called forth earnest discussions.

But the main features of the program were the six addresses delivered by Bro. B. B. Tyler. His subjects were "Back to Christ in Doctrine," "Back to Christ in Practice," "The Restoration of Primitive Christianity—How Far Desirable and Practicable," "The Gospel for the Present Age," "Books, Reading and Study" and "The Greatest Thing in the World."

Space will not permit detailed comment on these addresses. None is needed, for all know that we received a rich, intellectual and spiritual feast when we say Bro. Tyler delivered them. After each address an opportunity was given to ask questions, and Bro. Tyler was literally bombarded. This was a veritable "school of the prophets." It was the prevailing opinion that this was one of the best if not the best convention ever held in the state. Bro. Tyler made a place for himself in the hearts of those present which no one else can fill. We can assure him that it will not be our fault if this is his last visit to the state.

Arrangements were made to hold another semiannual meeting during December of 1900. A number of new members were voted in and the association moved forward all along the line. The annual meeting will be held in connection with the next state convention of the N. C. M. S.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The month of December brought us further reasons for rejoicing.

Bro. T. A. Hedges, besides his successful institutes at Hurdland, did good work at Williamstown, raising the means during the institute to repair the house, organized an Endeavor and met the deficiency on the minister's salary. Our evangelist will visit Green City and Unionville, and other congregations in that part of his district during the month of January. Do you wish his help?

M. H. Wood, in Wright County, hoped to help the brethren toward a new house, and the house is now nearing completion. When done the brethren will no longer be dependent on the schoolhouse and the many harrassments that pertain to its use, and we will have another neat and comfortable house at a cost of only a few dollars on the part of the brotherhood, but many sacrifices by the faithful in the community.

Bro. John Giddens has had to stand close to the work at Filley, where some urged that to build a house under the auspices of the state Bible-school evangelist meant to put themselves under an annual tax for life. But our good brother soon taught them otherwise, and now the work goes on to completion.

Elmer Shepard is working his way toward the swamp country, hoping soon to reach a part of the state where we have had no work done in years. He is meeting with opposition and indifference on the part of those that he thought would heartily support him in his work.

TIME is LIFE

The father? Gone for the doctor. The mother? Alone with her suffering child. Will the doctor never come? When there is croup in the house you can't get the doctor quick enough. It's too dangerous to wait. Don't make such a mistake again; it may cost a life. Always keep on hand a dollar bottle of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

It cures the croup at once. Then when any one in the family comes down with a hard cold or cough a few doses of the Pectoral will cut short the attack at once. A 25 cent bottle will cure a miserable cold; the 50c. size is better for a cold that has been hanging on.

Keep the dollar size on hand.

"About 25 years ago I came near dying with consumption, but was cured with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, since which time I have kept Ayer's medicines in the house and recommend them to all my friends."

If the schools will come to our help in answer to our cards and letters they will do us good service at a most opportune moment. We want you to help us get out of the way of state missions, Foreign Missions, Home Missions and the Orphans' Home Easter Offering by remitting this week.

The Fear of Humbug

Prevents Many People From Trying a Good Medicine.

Stomach troubles are so common and in most cases so obstinate to cure that people are apt to look with suspicion on any remedy claiming to be a radical, permanent cure for dyspepsia and indigestion. Many such pride themselves on their acuteness in never being humbugged, epecially in medicines.

This fear of being humbugged can be carried too far, so far, in fact, that many people suffer for years with weak digestion rather than risk a little time and money in faithfully testing the claims made of a preparation so reliable and universally used as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Now Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are vastly different in one important respect from ordinary proprietary medicines for the reasons that they are not a secret patent medicine, no secret is made of their ingredients, but analysis shows them to contain the natural digestive ferments, pure aseptic pepsin, the digestive acids, Golden Seal, bismuth, hydrastis and nux. They are not cathartic, neither do they act powerfully on any organ, but they cure indigestion on the common-sense plan of digesting the food eaten thoroughly before it has time to ferment, sour and cause the mischief. This is the only secret of their success.

Cathartic pills never have and never can cure indigestion and stomach troubles because they act entirely on the bowels, whereas the whole trouble is realy in the stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets taken after meals digest the food. That is all there is to it. Food not digested is poison as it creates gas, acidity, headaches, palpitation of the heart, loss of flesh and appetite and many other troubles which are often called by some other name.

They are sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. Address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for little book on stomach diseases, sent free.

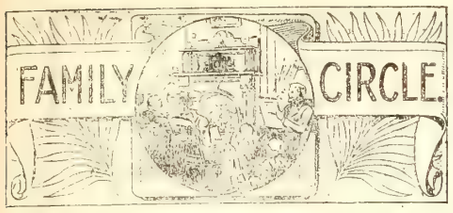
Washing Woolen Blankets.

The theory now is that blankets must be washed instead of dry cleaned to be healthy. To have your blanket as soft as new, make a soapy suds in a half tub of warm water by using one-half cup of Gold Dust Washing Powder, and soak a blanket in it for half an hour, then simply move it around and rub soiled spots; rinse in warm water, same temperature as the one in which you wash it, and hang up in a warm place or sunshiny, out-door air, and see what a soft white blanket you will have.

Blessing the Bells.

A SOLEMN CEREMONY ELIZABETHPORT WITNESSED LAST SUNDAY.

The Henry McShane Manufacturing Co., of Baltimore, have delivered to St. Patrick's Church, Elizabeth, N. J., the chime recently cast by them for Reverend Father Martin Gessner, Pastor of St. Patrick's. Last Sunday the chime was blessed, and later will be placed in position in time for its inauguration on New Year's eve. This is a wonderfully sweet set of bells, the largest or tenor bell weighs 3750 pounds, and the smallest 250 pounds; total weight of the ten is 13,200 pounds. Beside the universal commendation of critical visitors present at the preliminary tone tests at the McShane foundry, the bells are highly praised by experts from the great piano house of Wm. Knabe & Co., who pronounce them perfect in musical and harmonious qualities. St. Patrick's chime is destined to become as famous as the most noted of the McShane creations.



"In His Steps."

NETTIE CRANE NEWTON.

I stood upon the margin of a vast Expanse of land and sea that stretched, in all
Its grand diversities of sight and sound,
Toward the declining sun. Mountains and hills,
Rock-ribbed and forest-crowned, arose in
Majesty to meet the heavens, and gentle
Winds played tender airs among the trees, and Purling streams flowed through fair, flowery vales.
At its far verge I saw a massive gateway
Arched against the sky, and o'er it, framed in Living light, the words: "The Pilgrim's Home." But Oh, the way was long, the hills were steep, and Though the scene was fair, it must ofttimes be Dark and dangers lurk within those sylvan
Shades and sad, discordant notes mar the sweet
Harmony of sounds and fill me with Affright.

I knelt upon the ground and cried:
"Oh, for a light to show the way—a hand
To guide me!" when from a luminous cloud,
Descending low, issued a voice saying:
"I am the light! Mine is the hand! Look up!
Behold the footsteps of the great God-man
Who trod these paths and faltered not nor fell;
Who bore the cross and won the victor's crown.
Following his steps, shalt thou arise at length
From out the mists of earth, transfigured in The light of God."

The vision faded in
A strain as soft and sweet as angels' lutes,
And my rapt soul, engirt with hope, gave strength
To wearied feet. I took my cross, now wreathed
With flowers. I saw the way, e'en to the Distant portal, bathed in light, and beyond,
The eternal hills.

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER VII.

Only the heads of families and the women with a few others who preferred the ship's births remained aboard at this time.

Besides these were some of the sailers who returned at nightfall with the boats, that all passengers might be set ashore if a storm threatened. The boats were suspended at the davits to prevent them being beaten by the waves against the ship's sides.

Some of the sailors and two or three convivial passengers, among them Col. Bird, determined to celebrate the last night on shipboard, provided ways and means could be supplied for proper festivities.

To secure these it was decided, after due deliberation in the forecastle, to institute search among the barrels still remaining in the after part of the hold. Accordingly, two or three with a lighted lamp scrambled over and among the barrels and hogsheads, and presently discovered a case of liquor. From this they carried a goodly supply to the forecastle and proceeded to celebrate in the most approved style, and with frequent potations and ribald song the pitcher was soon empty and the revelers full.

But old topers, like misers, never get enough. More liquor was demanded; but the more moderate drinkers dissented, saying that several were already overloaded.

But one of the sailors was not to be appeased and, seizing a lamp and pitcher, he staggered back to the hold. Presently terrific screams were heard in that direction, and the excited revelers hastened back to find the after part of the ship in flames.

Just how it happened will never be known, as the besotted agent never returned to tell the story. But it is supposed that after filling the pitcher he failed to turn off the liquor and, knocking over the lamp, the alcoholic vapor was ignited and flashed instantly into flame.

It was before midnight and before deep sleep had fallen on the passengers.

The cry of fire, a terror on the land, but a nameless horror on the sea, instantly aroused all and, snatching whatever of clothing or covering was at hand, they rushed on deck a panic-stricken throng.

Dr. Andral, who was about to retire when the alarm was given, was among the first on deck. The captain and mates were ashore.

The boatswain was maudlin, and several of the sailors were in a similar condition.

There was need of haste, for the flames had already seized the after part of the vessel, and rushing through the open hatchways were lighting up the sea with a lurid glare. The doctor, instantly assuming command, ordered a boat to be lowered; but the drunken sailors in their imbecile haste let go the lines and the boat was swamped. This mishap intensified the excitement.

Selecting his men, the doctor had another boat successfully lowered. No sooner had it touched the water than there was a headlong rush of frantic half-drunken men, headed by Bird, but instantly his movement was arrested by a grasp of steel upon his throat, and he found himself hurled back like a battering ram in the face of his followers, and the next instant he was looking into the muzzle of a six-shooter in the sturdy hand of the doctor and hearing the ringing command: "Stand back, you cowardly beasts! The first poltroon that makes a move toward a boat before every woman and child is safe will carry lead where he ought to have brains!"

The unexpected spirit and promptness of this rebuff arrested the disorderly movement and quelled the panic. The women and children were quickly lowered and were pulled away.

The last boat was finally lowered with the remaining passengers and sailors. "Doctor, there's just room enough for you," cried a sailor. "Hold a moment," was the response, as he dashed down into the forecastle, the scene of the debauch.

Presently he returned, bearing a sailor in a drunken stupor, and lowering him into the boat, cried: "Now, lads, pull away. You've no time to spare."

"What! And leave you to be roasted? Never!" said a sailor.

"Pull away, I say; you're already overloaded. Another in the boat and you'll feed the sharks." Obedient to the command, the crew rowed to a safe distance, halted and looked back at the doomed vessel now wrapped in wrathful flames from stem to stern. The doctor was nowhere to be seen. Boats soon came from shore and cruised around in hopes of picking him up, but only to bring back the disheartening report that he was lost.

For my part, I confess that a leaden weight was upon my heart. It was the revived sense of loss I had felt when I turned away from the new-made grave of my mother, and again, with cumulative force, when my poor father's body went down into the deep, deep sea.

And now, with nothing of former bereavements abated, came a third appalling sense of loss, in the death of him whom my heart had called only friend, but who it now secretly confessed was more than friend. Was I the child of evil destiny? Was I to take up through life poor Hinda's lament:

"Oh, ever thus from childhood's hour,
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
I never loved a tree or flower
But 'twas the first to fade away."

And then there came a revulsion of feeling on maturer reflection and I realized the wickedness of my heart.

What right had I to cherish other sentiments toward Dr. Andral than that of simply friend? Was I not a traitor to Miss Clarkson, the best and truest of companions, with whom he was on such intimate terms?

How cold and cruel was the world! How far away and unpitying, God! Then to my rebellious heart there came the sweet words: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." And with a contrite heart I, the child of his pitying love, humbly bowed and supplicated his forgiveness for my rebellious spirit.

And most earnestly I prayed that I might never cherish other emotions than what was frank and generous and true toward my friend, Maria. Most earnestly did I pray that, though grief might endure for the night, joy might come in the morning in the safe return of Dr. Andral.

With the kindling dawn, to the anxious inquiries for tidings of the missing hero there came no encouraging response. Boats were ordered out to search the shores in what seemed a hopeless quest. Captain Wolcott, with fieldglass, carefully scanned the coastline on either side of the harbor, then turned it upon the outlying island. Here he caught a glimpse of a small, white object fluttering in the breeze. A boat was sent over and soon there was a joyful commotion, for the captain announced that he had focussed his glass upon the missing man. There was an ovation on his getting back to camp. To the eager demands for an account of his escape he answered:

"Why should I endanger the safety of every one in an already overladen boat when, by refusing to do so, they and I each had a fair chance? I might have swum ashore, or until a boat came to my relief. But I had no desire to feed the sharks, bated to the ship by the waste food. Seeing some spars, I snatched a rope, bound two together and let them over in the quiet water on the far side of the ship from harbor, and seizing a board for an oar I let myself down and shoved away from the burning hulk. At the same instant a south breeze swept the flames from stem to stern, and every part of the vessel was wrapped in raging flames. I strove to make the harbor, but the tide was running out, and that was impossible with my clumsy craft. Then I tried for the little island, and came near being carried out to sea, but with great difficulty finally effected a landing."

The fact that of all who had been in deadly peril of fire and water every soul had escaped save the drunken cause of the disaster, was a source of joy and thankfulness.

But it pains me to say that the secret communications and scowling faces of those whose ungallant and cowardly attempt to seize the first boat launched from the burning ship had been thwarted by the heroic action of the Doctor indicated, not joy, but regret, at his safe return.

The loss of the ship, serious as it was, was by no means such a calamity as it might have been some days earlier, as the greater part of the articles useful to us had gone ashore.

Some bedding and furniture and wearing apparel and many heavy articles in the hold were lost, but the most distressing loss was that of the ship itself. This seemed to interpose an impassable barrier between ourselves and our country.

Tents had been erected, and rude huts, covered with the broad leaves of the areca sapida, which we called "sap" for short, made excellent temporary shelter. A like building of large size was also made for the more perishable wares taken from the ship.

ASTHMA CAN BE CURED.

Statement of a Noted Physician.

The astonishing statement that Asthma can be cured, coming from so well known an authority as Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann, will be of interest to sufferers from Asthma, Phthisic and Hay Fever. The Doctor's offer, coming as it does from a recognized authority, who during a practice of over 30 years has treated and cured more cases of Asthma and its kindred than any living doctor, is certainly a generous one and an innovation in this age of countless fraudulent nostrums. Believing that the honest way to sell a remedy is to let those who would buy convince themselves of its true merits before purchasing, Dr. Schiffman has authorized this paper to say that he will send a free trial package of his remedy, "Schiffman's Asthma Cure," to any sufferer who sends his name on a postal card before February 1st. This remedy has cured thousands of cases that were considered incurable. Being used by inhalation it reaches the seat of the disease direct, stops the spasm instantly and insures sweet and refreshing sleep. A free trial package will convince the most skeptical. Those desiring to try a free sample should address Dr. R. Schiffmann, 206 Jackson St., St. Paul, Minn.

Nell's Experience.

LAURENE HIGHFIELD.

Nell Davis was spending a month at her grandmother's home in Chester, and as it was the first visit she had made since she was a tiny child, to the place where her mother was born and reared, she had, as she said, to get acquainted with Grandma and Aunt Margaret all over again. They lived together in the pretty, cozy home, from which the boys and girls had gone one by one as they married and sought homes for themselves in more or less distant cities. Nell did not remember her grandfather at all, for he had died when she was scarcely more than a baby.

Aunt Margaret was past the flush of youth, the silver threads were beginning to gleam in her dark hair, and an experienced eye could read in the lines of her face that life had not always proved a thing of joy to her, but to Nell she seemed perfectly happy and the most faultless character she had ever met.

Nell loved her mother very dearly, but Mrs. Davis had been an invalid for years and was unable to take very much interest in the things that made up the life of her daughter. She was always weak and nervous, and Nell never thought of troubling her with the thousand and one confidences which she imparted to her Aunt Margaret before she had been in Chester a week.

That which impressed her most was the fact that Margaret was always busy and never seemed hurried or flurried or nervous. She said to her one day, "Why is it, Aunt Margaret, you don't get impatient and fussy like other people?"

"I never have time, Nell," she replied serenely. "There is always something better waiting to be done. If something that I can't help goes wrong, there is no use to worry. If I can help it I must get right at it and remedy the defect as soon as possible.

It is a waste of time to fret, either way, you see."

Nell laughed. "I see," she said. "I have met lots of people who preached, but I declare you are the first one I ever came across who invariably practices her own doctrines.

Margaret sat down at her desk and began to write. "May I ask what you are doing?" said her niece, after a few minutes of silently watching the busy pen as it glided over the paper. "It doesn't look like letters, and I don't think you are addicted to poetry."

"I am copying some little speeches for our Junior superintendent. She wants to give them to the children next Sunday so they can learn them in time for the rally, and as she clerks in a drygoods store all day and is very busy, I offered to copy them for her, as I had nothing else to do."

Nothing else to do!" exclaimed Nell in amazement. "Oh, you flawless auntie! Have I discovered a weak spot in your character, or have you forgotten the impressive story of George and his little hatchet? What about the jelly for the hospital and the sandwiches for the orphans' excursion and the cake I heard you promise for the social to-night, besides your weighty housekeeping duties?"

"The cake is in the pantry, Nell, the sundwiches started to the boat fully half an hour ago, and the jelly is dripping in a big crock out in the summer kitchen. If you see anything about the house that needs doing, take hold and do it. That is always the surest way of getting things done. Get your pen and help me with this coyping. You've nothing to do, either."

"Much truer in my case than yours, if you have proved yourself innocent of deception in this particular instance," laughed Nell as she gaily complied and industriously fell to work.

One morning while Grandma was sitting in the corner by the window, stringing beans for dinner, and Margaret was ironing at the table, Nell came into the kitchen looking very much provoked. "I was just mending the tear in my white dress," she said, "and it is going to show dreadfully, and I haven't anything else here with me that is fit to wear to Mrs. Brown's party."

"You are not planning to go, are you?" asked Grandma, her tone expressing both astonishment and disapproval. "Of course I am going," said the girl, defiantly. "I don't see one bit of harm in playing whist, and of course Mrs. Brown has invited all the nicest people in the neighborhood."

Grandma's eyebrows came together in a straight line as she solemnly shook her head. "When I was young," she said, "the young people who belonged to the church didn't dance and play cards. We were always taught that it was wicked. There ought to be a distinct line dividing the church and the world, I think."

"Not if it always puts the church on the most unpleasant side," said Nell. "The Bible doesn't say it is wrong to play whist, does it Aunt Margaret?"

"Not that I have ever noticed; but then it doesn't say anything about passing forged checks or betting on horse races or ever so many things which I should not like to indulge in."

Nell flushed just a little. "But those things are morally wrong," she said, "whether one is a church member or not. All our church people at home play cards."

"Perhaps they are not so busy as we are in our little town," said her aunt serenely. "We don't all play here. I have never found time, myself. I am just through here and must change my dress and go to prayer-meeting. Don't you want to go with me?"

"A prayer-meeting in the daytime," said Nell in astonishment; "Why, who goes?"

"Just a few women, usually, but we have some very helpful meetings."

"It seems funny for just a few women to hold a prayer-meeting," said the girl. "I should think you would all feel absurdly conscious! We have a young ladies' society at home and the constitution requires the meetings to be opened with prayer, but none of the girls will attempt to pray for fear the rest might laugh, so we all repeat the Lord's Prayer and let it go at that."

"Don't you have a missionary society and Christian Endeavor in your fine city church?" asked her grandmother, grimly.

"Why, yes. Our church is just as progressive as it can be. The old ladies have their missionary meetings every month, I know, for I have heard them announced, but we girls never go, and I don't care for Endeavor meetings at all."

"Did you ever attend one?" Margaret asked.

"No, I never did," said Nell, frankly. "None of our set do. The society meets at such an unhandy hour it takes the best part of one's Sunday evenings. But I really don't see how a parcel of women could spend the morning holding a prayer-meeting! It seems silly!"

"It isn't," said Aunt Margaret, and something in her tone made the girl flush to the roots of her hair, and wish she had not spoken quite so plainly. "Come with me, Nell."

Nell hesitated, for she did not want to go, but one glance at the indignant face of her outraged grandmother decided her. She would rather go than stay with Grandma and have her talk to her as she would be sure to do when Margaret went away. She knew her aunt would not return to the subject unless she mentioned it again herself, so she hastened away to get ready.

When they arrived at the church they found half a dozen women chatting quietly together, waiting until the time appointed for the service to begin.

"Won't you play the organ for us, dear?" asked Aunt Margaret. "Our organist is too ill to be here this morning."

Nell made a bit of a grimace, but forced herself to answer graciously enough, "Certainly, if there is no one else to play."

She was a brilliant pianist and it was her delight to entertain her admiring and complimentary friends, but to play a wheezy, little red organ at a woman's prayer-meeting was something she had never yet attempted to do. Nevertheless, she seated herself before the instrument and the leader announced that grand old hymn, "Rock of Ages." How they sang it, these few unassuming ladies! None of them were young and all of them had felt much of the world's buffeting. There were no cultivated voices among them, nor any special ability as singers, but the earnestness with which they sang read a new meaning into the pleading words. Nell began the accompanient indifferently enough, but by the time the last verse was reached she joined in the singing with her sweet, well-trained voice, and to her surprise the words seemed to rise from her very heart.

Then the leader prayed. She was one of the sweetest of Christian women, a widow whose husband had been a brave and gallant soldier of the cross, who fell in the service of the cross, who fell in the service upon the foreign mission field. This dear woman had lived all alone since her bereavement and had found in Christ her only hope and consolation, and she prayed now for grace and strength and comfort, till the room seemed filled with a brooding holiness and the Savior was not far away, but a present help in time of trouble.

Then they sang again and Nell played for them, with a lump in her throat that prevented her from singing.

The morning lesson was taken from the eighth chapter of Romans, and the thought turned to the subject of trust, and that passed naturally to the relation of faith and obedience, of human obligation and the steadfastness of the promises of God, and as these women spoke out of their rich experience, of strength in time of weakness, of trust in places of danger, of consolation in sorrow, of faith and hope and love and service, Nell bowed her head in shame above the wheezy organ and her eyes filled with tears. What had she ever done to prove her love for Christ since she came into the church? She had refused to teach in the Sunday-school because it was too much trouble to prepare the lessons properly, and as she had said proudly, she would not try to do anything unless she felt that she could do it well. Not that she feared lack of results from her work, she now told herself, but because if she took a class at all she wanted people to say, "What a fine teacher Miss Davis is!" She had not joined the Christian Endeavor Society. It would take up so much time, and she did not care for such things, and she was not at all interested in missions. She mentally reviewed the three years that had passed since she joined the church. She had not visited the sick, comforted the distressed, or ministered to the needy, nor tried to bring any one to Christ. She could not recall a single deed except desultory attendance at the regular church services that would mark her in any way different from the worldly, frivolous young people who were her chief associates, and as the soft, even voices went on, telling of the trust the speakers had in the Rock of Ages, and the beauty and pleasure of loyal service, she felt almost an outcast. These beautiful things had hitherto meant nothing to her, and she felt herself unworthy to claim them now.

"If ye abide in me," quoted Aunt Margaret softly. "If connection with the vine is broken the branch withereth away. If our obligations are not fulfilled the promise of reward is as barren to us as if never uttered. We must constantly abide, and not only love, but prove our love by our deeds."

When the service was over Aunt Margaret's keen eyes noticed the softened expression upon Nell's face, but she was far too wise to question or even pass any comment upon the prayer-meeting. As they came out into the bright sunshine she said, "I wish to stop at Mrs. Winter's on the way home, dear. Her husband is sick and she has to work very hard to take care of him and earn a living. I feel very sorry for them, for he is an industrious fellow and works whenever he is able, and they would get along finely if he could only keep well."

They stopped at a tidy little rented cottage, scantily furnished, but neat and clean, and the tiny girl who opened the door for them was as sweet and pretty, with her great brown eyes and soft curls, as if her shoes were not so shabby and her gingham pinafore so patched and faded. Nell made friends with her at once and held her on her lap and played with her, while Margaret talked to the overworked little mother. The man who lay upon the bed was very ill indeed and needed almost constant attention, and his wife had to lay her sewing down every few minutes to wait upon him.

"I do not know what I shall do," she said at length, sighing wearily. "Jim is so sick that he needs all my time and this work ought all to be finished by Friday morning. I would let it wait, for I shouldn't so much mind the loss of the pay for this, but if it isn't at the factory on time I won't get any more to do, and if I don't keep working I don't see how we can live till Jim gets better."

"Let me take this sewing home with me," said Margaret quickly. "I love to sew and will have abundance of time to finish every stitch of this before Friday morning. I am sure I can do it well enough for factory work."

The poor, tired little woman protested with tears in her eyes against burdening her friend, but Margaret's insistence prevailed, and after promising to send a trusty nurse to sit up with Mr. Winter that night, she carried away with her every scrap of the work, while the anxious wife, relieved of this worry, sat down and cried.

Nell did not say a word, but that night after she had gone to her room, she took up her Bible and began to search out the promises. She was amazed to find how many of them were conditional. If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love. He that overcometh shall inherit all things. He that believeth, though he were dead, yet he shall live. He that followeth shall have the light of life. If ye abide in me ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be granted unto you. If ye love me, keep my commandments. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

Thursday afternoon, as Margaret sat sewing upon the garments she had brought from Mrs. Winter's, Nell came with her work basket and sat down beside her.

"Aren't you going to Mrs. Brown's party?" asked the aunt, surprised at the shy, half-embarrassed expression of the girl's face.

"No. I am going to help you sew if you will let me," she said. "I have changed my mind about whist parties."

Aunt Margaret supplied her with work and they stitched away for some little time in silence. Then, "What have you decided, dear?" she asked gently.

"I haven't come to any conclusion at all, but this," said Nell. "I have learned a new lesson, Aunt Margaret, and in the light of it I don't see how Christian people can want to spend a whole afternoon playing cards. I am going to quit trying to formulate excuses and justify myself in doing doubtful things, and employ my time in doing something better."

"That is my position exactly, Nell. I never fret personally over those so-called innocent amusements, nor try to decide whether they are wicked or not. Life is too short and too serious a matter to waste it disputing as to whether these things are contrary to the Bible or not, or to be frittered away in a vain search for pleasure that must always be defended or apologized for. The wrong need not matter so much in a world where there is so much right to be done that we can easily keep busy at it if we try."

"And I intend to try," said Nell earnestly. "Henceforth I mean to make my life one of service if I can. I am glad I have known you, Aunt Margaret."

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Ronald had treated Frank with cold indifference since the day she persisted in reading "Hearts Aflame." He made it convenient to be somewhere else when she went forth with Vega. The only reason he did not beat a retreat when they were left alone on this occasion, was that he did not know she was in the room. His book absorbed all his thought. He was startled when she spoke to him. He looked up with a sense of unpleasant surprise.

"Ronald," said the girl timidly, "I would like to tell you something; something about my—about my past life."

"What for?" inquired the boy, frowning.

"I am in trouble; I hoped you would help me."

"Did I have anything to do with getting you into your trouble?" he asked coldly.

"Of course not. It was years ago, Ronald."

"Well, then, I don't like troubles," said Ronald. "Nobody helps me out of mine. Some people may enjoy going out hunting for troubles, and spending their time in trying to destroy 'em when they find 'em. I don't. Keeps me busy fighting my own game."

This was so very discouraging that Frank was silenced. Ronald dived into his book, but he did not stay long under water. "Say," he said, "when you finished 'Hearts Aflame,' did you tackle 'Catherine's Kiss," by the same author?"

Frank's cheeks burned. "No!" Then she added, "You were right about that novel. I ought not to have read it. But I didn't see the harm then. I only thought of finishing it. I am sorry."

"Why are you sorry?" he returned abruptly. "Course, you had a right to suit yourself."

"I thought so, too. I don't think so now. You haven't a right to suit yourself when you are suited by what is wrong."

"Like to know why," retorted Ronald; "guess you belong to yourself, don't you?" I didn't say it was best—only that you have the right."

"But I don't belong to myself, so I haven't the right," replied Frank.

"Oh! Well, I'm glad nobody owns me! But it's mighty funny how you are sorry over 'Hearts Aflame' when you and Vega have been pouring over a trashy novel all week!"

"But indeed we haven't! I have not looked in a story since that day. What made you think so?"

"Clara told me. She has seen you. Why, I saw you, too, myself, with your noses just buried in the book, as if it was a rose and you were smelling it. I don't see how you can deny it," Ronald added with virtuous surprise. "I boned Vega about it, but she wouldn't tell the name of the book; reckon she was ashamed!"

"She wouldn't be if she had read it more," said Frank. "It was the Bible. That's all we've read together."

"Oh!" exclamed Ronald with marked disappointment. "The Bible! What did you want to read it for?"

"It's a pretty good book to read, said Frank. "Don't you think it better than 'Hearts'?"

"Ye-es, but—why, whoever heard of people reading that like it was a book. When Clara thought of joining the church she started out to read in it every day. I knew she'd soon get sick of that. Well, every morning she'd get her out and open her up and scotch around for a short verse, and when she'd read it she put her away in a hurry. In about a week she put it off to read every night, the last thing; and then was generally so sleepy that she just got to hating to have to do it, and then she'd forget. Same way with Ma. Big revival comes along, and Ma takes to her Bible for a few weeks like the old settlers used to hunt their block houses when the Indians were on the war path. May be she'll read half a dozen verses, then put her up and get a novel and spend half a day over it. That's the kind of Bible-reading I've known."

"No wonder they stop, after awhile!" cried Frank. "If you read that way in any book, wouldn't you get tired of it? Suppose I began a story and it said, 'It was a cold stormy night on the prairie,' and then I'd lay it aside till the next night, and read, 'Far in the distance could be discerned the form of a solitary horseman,' then not read another word of it for another day. Wouldn't I get tired of it?"

"That's different," said Ronald. "In the Bible you know what's coming. I never read much of it myself, but one thing's certain: as sure as I open it up, I strike something about a weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. I tell you plain, that for a book that can make you feel dissatisfied and have the blues, nothing can lay over the Bible."

"You don't know, you don't know!" cried Frank, her eyes shining. "Look at this place, at very beginning of a chapter: 'Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.' How do you like that? If you were like me—without a home, without a father—you would know what that means to me! You say you know just what is coming; well, do you think I'll ever get tired reading that? Every time I read it, it is as if Jesus was saying it again, to make me sure. And then over here—here is where Jesus prayed for me; just think! he prayed for me, although it was at the time he was about to be tortured. See, he says: 'Neither pray I for these alone' (apostles, you know), 'but for them also which shall believe on me through their Word;' that's me—I believe. And then see what he prayed for me—for me and for you, if you believe: 'I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world' (because we have our work to do, I suppose, but O, wouldn't it be so much easier if that was the way!), 'but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil.' Ronald, did you ever find anything sweeter than that in your reading? The Bible is full of it. After Jesus rose from the dead—here's the place—Mary saw him standing, but she just thought he was the gardener. And he said, 'Mary!' Can't you guess how he said that? And Mary wanted to touch him." Was it strange that her voice broke with a sob, and the tears blurred the words? And all this had happened so many centuries ago, and she had read about it so many times! Somehow it seemed as new as ever; it might have happened yesterday.

Ronald said abruptly, "Say, Frank, you said awhile ago that you wanted me to help you out of a trouble. Let's hear about it."

Then Frank told him, and it was harder than she had imagined. Her words came slow and uncertain. He was left to guess at somethings, but he understood them better that way. He felt vaguely how she longed to know her parentage, how she must have dreamed of a mother and father for many years, how she had been perplexed by her great mystery. Perhaps her parents were worthless criminals who had deserted her in her infancy. Perhaps they were wealthy and great, and had been robbed of her by a cruel enemy. Perhaps they were dead, or only one was living. Perhaps they sought for her, perhaps they had forgotten her, perhaps they never loved her, perhaps for her their hearts were breaking. "I know that old woman is not my mother," cried Frank—"that horrible old Nance—it couldn't be possible! Yet, she knows about me. She will be waiting at the Covered Bridge in the morning at four o'clock to meet me—to tell me something. Ought I to go? Ronald, you are the only one I can ask for advice. Your mother and father wouldn't understand. I couldn't tell them about—about being left that way on the doorstep. And Mrs. Dew—do you think she can be my mother? If you had seen her face when she told me not to speak of her little girl! Perhaps Nance can give me proofs. But I am afraid to go. What would you do?"

"You ought to go," said Ronald. "Probably she won't tell you the truth, but she'll tell you something. You're right about not telling Pa and Ma. They'd have a fit if they knew that. But I'll tell you what: I'll go with you. I'll take care of you, Frank."

"But can you?" said Frank doubtfully.

Ronald laughed at this ungallant question. "You've trusted me with your story—you must trust me with yourself," he said stoutly. "I can protect you. And I will. Now there's no need to mention this again—the folks'll be back directly. At about four in the morning I'll be at the front gate, waiting for you. It's a mightly early time of day, but it will be getting light."

W. F. RICHARDSON.

THE PREACHING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.*

After the one glimpse of Jesus' early life, which was the subject of last week's lessson, we face a silence in the sacred narrative reaching through eighteen years. But two brief statements tell us aught of this period, the period of preparation for the most far-reaching and vital mission ever given to man. One of these is the last verse of the preceding chapter of Luke, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." This is sufficient, however, to show us that the growth and development of the Christ was a truly human one, following the order of every other soul, only pursuing that course with unfailing fidelity to the perfect ideal set before the higher nature, and maintaining a pure heart and steadfast conscience. This fourfold development in stature, in wisdom, in favor with men and with God, gives us the rule for a complete humanity. It signifies nothing less than the growth of man in the physical,intellectual, social and spiritual powers which result in symmetry and consequent beauty. The other passage from which we gather a hint of Jesus' life in Nazareth is Mark 6:3: "Is not this the carpenter?" We thus know him as a son of toil, identifying himself with the masses of those who must eat their bread in the sweat of their brows. He is speaking from no dreamy height of idleness when he speaks words of comfort and promise to those who labor and are heavy laden. His education was that of the average intelligent son of godly parents. Not the subleties of the schools, or the fantastic sophistries of the rabbis, but the words of Holy Scripture, as read in the synagogues every Sabbath and taught in the humble carpenter's home. "The school of holy obedience, of sweet contentment, of unalloyed simplicity, of stainless purity, of cheerful toil," helped to form that guileless and supremely beautiful character. These were the years in which he "began to do" before he "began to teach." He lived the life before he invited others to attempt it. It is here in the obscure and homely years of Nazareth that Jesus becomes the example to most of us, whose lives never reach beyond the limits of our own community.

The same silence is observed by the evangelists regarding the early life of John the Baptist. Besides the record of his birth we have but one verse of his life story for thirty years. In Luke 1:80 we are told, "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel." But his early home must have been much like that of Christ. His godly parents trained him in the strict regimen of a Nazarite, and his soul took naturally to that stern and self-renouncing career. He chose the silence and loneliness of the "wilderness" that lay round about the lower Jordan rather than the thronged streets of the city, or even the smaller company of village gossips in his native town. What he had seen of the religious and social life of his people had made him sick at heart, and he waited impatiently for the day when he might go forth with his message of repentance and redemption.

The tide of Israel's national life was at its extreme ebb. In the words of Farrar, "A Tiberius was polluting by his infamies the throne of the empire; a Pontius Pilate, with his insolences, cruelties, extortions, massacres, was maddening a fanatic people; Herod Antipas was exhibiting to facile learners the example of calculated apostasy and reckless lust; Caiaphas and Annas were dividing the functions of a priesthood which they disgraced." The morals of the chosen people were sadly corrupted. The publican wrought extortion upon the helpless victims of Roman taxation. Harlotry abounded in the cities and villages. The formal and ostentatious virtue of the Pharisee was often but a cloak for secret vice, or at least an evil heart. Selfishness suffers the rich and poor to live side by side without awaking sympathy in the heart of the one, or patience in that of the other. The officers and soldiers of the empire, under such circumstances, were not careful to make the yoke easy for the neck of the subjugated nation, and many exactions were practiced upon the communities where they were quartered. Not all of Israel were such as these, but the picture was dark enough to appall any but the stoutest heart. A few, only, of Abraham's children were waiting in hope for the promised Messiah; could they rally the nation about his banner when he should appear?

Into this discouraging scene burst a strange figure with a startling message. Like Elijah, from the wilds of Gilead, the Baptist issued from the wilderness of Judea, his appearance almost as unexpected as if he had risen out of the very ground. Like Elijah, he wore the rough coat of camel's hair, fastened about his waist with a strip of skin. He fed on the coarse fare of the wilderness, cakes made from the powdered bodies of the abundant locust, sweetened with wild honey. His message was in keeping with his appearance. No smooth speeches, neatly turned compliments or gentle suggestions to tame and lifeless morality. His was a trumpet note, and it warned of death and called to battle.

Repentance and the kingdom were the two parts of his theme. Wrath waited for an unholy nation, and only repentance could avert its awful descent. God would be merciful to those who turned away from their sin. As a sign of their abandonment of the old life they were called upon to submit to the significant ordinance of baptism. As they sank beneath the waters they might well feel that the old life was being buried out of sight; as they arose from the symbolic grave they could not but feel that a new manner of living was before them. Such repentance would prepare them for the coming of the King, the Messiah, of whom John was the herald. He was the voice from the wilderness foretold by the prophet, who should sound throughout Israel, rallying the nation to reformation. Like the highway of a king's progress, their life was to be cleared of the obstructions of ignorance, prejudice and sin, that the King of glory might come in. The final result was to be the salvation of the Gentile world. "All flesh should see the salvation of God."

First among those who hastened to the new prophet, to claim as their especial privilege a share in the benefits of his mission, were many of the Pharisees and Sadducees. As children of Abraham and leaders in the religious life of their people, they confidently expected to have first place in the Baptist's regard. They were shocked with his rude reception. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" He gave them to understand that he was no mere mouther of musty traditions, no juggler with words. Every soul must be personally responsible to God. Fleshly birth had no weight with Jehovah. Outward behavior did not suffice. The axe was to be applied to the root of conduct, the heart. Men must be right, that they might in the truest sense do right. Not since the days of Malachi, four hundred years before, had they heard such a voice. It shook the nation to its center. John did not have to seek an audience, nor solicit hearers. They "went out to him" from all the region round about. There is an aggressive preaching that goes out after men till it finds them. There is another kind of preaching, the attractive, that draws men irresistably to it. This was John's way with men. We need to cultivate this kind of preaching. It can be done, but only by the man who has a true message and a true heart. "Speak the right word, and you will not need to press men to come and hear it. The spiritual instincts of human nature may be dormant, but they are not dead. Let the right music sound outside, and the hidden man of the heart will rise and come to the window and look out and listen. No obstacles can keep people away when a voice sufficiently charged with the Holy Ghost is heard. John has only to lift up his voice and the entire country hastened to hear him."

Such preaching could not be dismissed with empty compliments. The people responded, "What shall we do, then?" Any preaching that does not result in improved practice is thrown away. How practical the answers of John. Share your abundance with those who want. Administer your office honestly and kindly. Make your authority as easy over others as possible and practice contentment. Not one of these principles is needless in our daily life to-day.

Soon the suggestion found its way into the hearts of men that this brave prophet might be the Messiah, and the question finally came to open expression. The answer was prompt and explicit. I am but a voice. He of whom I am but a sound going before will perform for you a more glorious ministry. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire. Like grain into the garner he will gather those who open their hearts to his Spirit; like chaff thrown into the fire will he scatter those who prove hostile to his truth. The history of the early proclamation of the gospel proves the Baptist a true prophet. The fan wielded by apostolic hands separted between wheat and chaff, and those who were friends of the Bridegroom went in with him unto the feast.

"School of Pastoral Helpers," or Christian Training School.

Under this heading I desire to say a few words. I attended the conference at Chicago recently, which was called with a view to the establishment of such a school. I will not undertake to make a report of this conference, for I am certain that others will do this, but having been the first to agitate this matter and naturally having it upon my heart that it should be started in Cincinnati, I think it fitting that I should now make a statement. It was decided at the conference to start the school, and the work was placed in the hands of a committee of twelve, Bro. Geo. A. Miller and myself being two of the number. I have thought much about the mattar since the conference and prayed over it, and since returning have had a council wlth Bro. Miller. We believe that there are three reasons why this school should be established in Chicago. In the first place, some of the brethren here are conservative and do not desire it, while Chicago, so far as I could see, will receive it with open arms, and a third and very important reason is that Chicago is four times the size of Cincinnati and will give place for more work and so a larger school.

I am anxious that it shall be a school for the brotherhood and that for the present, at least, there should be no attempt to establish like schools in other cities.

It was the feeling of the conference that a splendid general should be selected as soon as possible to man the whole affair. Let the brotherhood unite in prayer that the committee may make no mistake in his selection.

Bro. F. G. Tyrrell is Chairman of our committee and Bro. Hiram Van Kirk secretary. Any correspondence may be sent to these.

The demand for the school is universal, and I have already had letters from a number who are ready to enter upon its opening. Here are some of their namas: Lois A. White, Cayoga Falls, O.; J. A. Pine, Cincinnati, O.; P. H. Duncan, Ludlow, Ky.; W. C. Payne, Chicago, Ill.; A. W. Taylor, Chicago, Ill.; Louise Kelly, Emporia, Kan.; E. W. Darst, Chicago, Ill.; G. P. Coler, Ann Arbor, Mich.; F. D. Your plan appleals to me as in every way a worthy one. The pastor needs efficient helpers to insure success in church building. Trained and consecrated women will give a pastor the service he needs in attaining his ideals. The success of your work at the Central, by the assistance of Miss Nichol as a helper, proves the wisdom of the plan you propose. If we are to succeed in the future in our large city churches, we must not only have excellent pastors but skilled and paid helpers at the heads of departments.—J. H. PHILLIPS, Braddock, Pa.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

LITERATURE.

The Magazines For January.

The prospectus of the International Magazine, which the Macmillan Company will begin to publish this month, indicates that it will be an addition of the first importance to the short list of really great original reviews. It will deserve its name, not only by the fact that it is published simultaneously in New York and London, but by the more important fact that its corps of editorial advisors and contributors is selected from several countries and that its scope will include both hemispheres. It will be distinctly a magazine for thinking people. There will be twelve departments, as follows: History, philosophy, physchology, sociology, comparative religion, literature, fine art, physics, biology, medicine and hygiene, and geology and geography. Each department is in charge of an advisory committee composed of one American, one English, one German and one French member, and many of these advisors are men whose names are well known to the general public: Royce and Toy of Harvard. Natorp of Marburg, Titchener of Cornell, Ribot and Lanson of Paris, Kulpe of Leipsic, Alois Brandl of Berlin, Giddings of Columbia, Jevons of Durham, J. C. Van Dyke of Rutgers, Le Conte of California, to mention but a few among many. Each number will contain not less than five essays which will be scholarly but not technical. The publication of the International Magazine may safely be reckoned as one of the most important literary events of the year.

How Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson, the last installment of whose "Biography of a Grizzly" appears in the Century, could have learned so much about bears unless he has once been a bear himself is something which probably nobody knows but himself. It is not only a scientific knowledge of the facts of bear-nature and bear-life, but a sympathetic appreciation and interpretation of the grizzly's experiences. He looks at the whole situation from the standpoint of the bear. Though there is no particular plot or story to it, the whole narrative is as vivid and real as Kipling's Jungle Books, beyond which praise there is nothing that can be said. The prize story in the competition for college graduates in 1898 is printed in this number, a vigorous story of western life, with pictures by Frederic Remington. Even if the colleges do not make successful writers (which may be readily granted), here is evidence that they do not necessarily spoil the literary talents which come under their influence.

Scribner's begins the new year with the first installments of two notable serials: Theodore Roosevelt's Life of Oliver Cromwell, which will be the biography of a man of action, written by a man of action, who is also skillful with the pen; and J. M. Barrie's "Tommy and Grizel." It is a dangerous undertaking to attempt to follow the fortunes of a successful character beyond the book in which he achieved his fame, and the friends of "Sentimental Tommy" will follow his career in London and his collaboration with the Johnsonian Mr. Pym with some misgivings. But the opening chapters are distinctly reassuring and, though inherently improbable from the very nature of sequels, it is far from impossible that this may be the greatest of Mr. Barrie's novels.

The Atlantic Monthly is, as usual, thoughtful and thought-producing without austerity. Its admirably varied program for January includes the first installment of the autobiography of W. J. Stillman, a highly suggestive article on "Reform in Theological Education," by William DeWitt Hyde, the autobiography of an Indian girl of the Dakota tribe under the title, "Impressions of an Indian Childhood," and an excellent survey of English events and books of the year 1899, by R. Brimley Johnson, besides some excellent fiction in the serial, "To Have and to Hold," by Mary Johnston.

The Coming Age presents a diversified table of contents, including literary and social studies, biography, poetry, science and fiction. The "Conversations," a combination of biographical sketch and interview, which are a standing feature of the Coming Age, are an attractive feature. One doubts whether it is not throwing too much emphasis upon one class of uncertain phenomena to make a permanent department of "Dreams and Visions," co-ordinate with "Conversations," "Original Essays," "Editorial," etc.

The North American Review continues to devote a large amount of space to the war in South Africa. Not less than seven of its fourteen articles bear upon that topic and the standpoints represented are those of Great Britain, Germany, Russia and the Transvaal. Prof. Briggs writes of the crisis in the English Church. The letters of Robert Louis Stevenson have found a worthy editor in Mr. Sidney Colvin and the volume finds a worthy reviewer in Mr. Henry James, whose article in this number helps us to a better understanding of this rare letter-writer.

The Chautauquan for January gives, among other and more conspicuous features, a well-selected list of books and articles bearing on the higher criticism of the Old and New Testaments. Prof. Sparks' series on The Expansion of the American People and Prof. Pattee's Critical Studies of American Literature are part of the required reading for the C. L. S. C., but no less attractive to the general reader.

The Preacher's Helper continues to live up to its own description of itself as a journal "devoted to what is helpful to preachers." It is full of short and practical things. It does not aim to guide the preacher in his theological thought, leaves to other papers the discussion of doctrinal questions and has nothing to say about the authorship of the Pentateuch, but it tells the preacher many things which he wants to know.

Three articles on Paris, of a sort calculated to interest especially the prospective visitor to the Exposition, appear in the Ladies' Home Journal. Ian Maclaren's paper on "The Minister and the Organ" is not up to standard. A charming literary friendship is set forth in the letters between "Gail Hamilton" and John Greenleaf Whittier, which are well characterized as "A Merry Woman's Letters to a Quiet Poet."

Mrs. Humphrey Ward begins a new novel entitled "Eleanor," in the current number of Harper's. The story has the proud distinction of having among its characters an American girl who is a quiet, peaceable, unostentatious body, exhaling no odor of pork or oil, and otherwise quite different from the average English novelist's typical American girl.

Among the contents of the Cosmopolitan is an appreciative study of the Russian poet, Pushkin, who deserves a fuller acquaintance than he has ever yet received in the western world. Quiller-Couch, who writes always of Cornwell and the Cornish coast, and always well, contributes a short story of shipwreck, stolen treasure and sorcery in the year 1526.

The Treasury of Religious Thought is made up largely of sermons, sermon-outlines and homiletical suggestions. Most of them are good sermons, outlines and suggestions and will be useful to any preacher who knows how to use that sort of literature to advantage.

Besides its usual budget of missionary news, the Missionary Review of the World contains a brief historical survey of Protestant missions, in the form of a contrast between the missions of 1800 and 1900, and an article by Arthur T. Pierson on the Missions of the Nineteenth Century.

The Record of Christian Work was to have published a series of articles by D. L. Moody during the present year on The Most Useful Men I Have Known, but the loss does not leave the magazine without much excellent material.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews has for its special features this month a character-sketch of Secretary John Hay, an article on Our Interests in China and a discussion of the international arbitration treaty, together with the text of the Hague Agreement.

The Outlook is a weekly paper, but its magazine number, the first of each month, compares favorably with the other literary magazines. The chief feature of the January magazine number is the first installment of an illustrated life of Shakespeare, by Hamilton W. Mabie.

The Life of Moody.

The Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., of New York, is engaged in writing the life of D. L. Moody for John C. Winston & Co., Philadelphia. He is Vice President of the Bible Institute of Chicago, of which Mr. Moody was President, and desires that this Institution shall receive a share of the profite from the sale of this book. The publishers promise that the work shall be profusely illustrated. It will also contain an introduction by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, London, and personal reminiscences from others who were intimately associated with Mr. Moody in his work.

OBITUARIES.

BLANCHARD.

David Aaron Blanchard was born in Dark County, Ohio, June 9, 1836, and departed this life at his home near Enid, Oklahoma, Dec. 21, 1899, aged 63 years, six months and 12 days. His father died before he was born, and thus in early boyhood he was thrown upon his own resources and forced to fight the battle of life alone. At 14 years of age he turned his face Westward and located in Iowa, where he resided from 1850 to 1895, living in Lee, Van Buren and Wayne Counties. March 1, 1857, he was united in marriage to Cynthia A. Harlan. This union was blessed with eight children, six sons and two daughters, all of whom, with his companion of more than 42 years, survive to mourn their loss. He united with the church when about 22 years of age, and ever lived faithful to his profession and by the influence of his life all his children, except the youngest, and she only 13 years old, have been led to follow his example. In the fall of 1895 he removed from Wayne County, Iowa, to Garfield County, Oklahoma, where he resided to the time of his death. Funeral services were held at the home, conducted by the elders of the Enid church, after which the mortal remains of one we loved were laid to rest, and now await the resurrection of the just at the last day

F. E. B.

BRANT.

Mrs. Isabella Brant died at her home seven miles north of Hamilton, Ill., Dec. 3, 1899, aged 68 years, five months and 27 days. She was born in Edinburg, Scotland, June 6, 1831, and came to America when six years of age with her parents, settling near Vincennes, Ind. She married Hezekiah Brant, June 6, 1850, lived five years in Olney, Ill., then moved to Hancock County in 1855, where she has since resided. Her many charming traits won the love and esteem of every one that knew her. She leaves to mourn her departure her aged husband, six sons, two daughters, twelve grandchildren and two sisters. It is the first death that has ever occurred in Mr. Brant's family, and they all seem heart-broken, but do not mourn as those who have no hope.

H. Brant.

GIBSON.

Another old veteran of the cross fell asleep at his home in Burnside, December 4, 1899, James Gibson, aged 88 years. He was born in Ireland in 1811, and came to this country in 1814; came to Illinois in 1838 and settled in Hancock County, where he remained till he fell asleep in Jesus. Fifty years of his life he was a staunch defender of the old Jerusalem gospel and much of the toil of his hands went to build up the cause of Jesus. Many were the friends that came to say farewell and hear Bro. Scofield talk of the noble life.

C. G. Blakeslee.

IRELAND.

Sister Nina Mulkey Ireland, daughter of Bro. and Sister W. F. Mulkey, of Detroit, Mich., died Dec. 17. The statement, in its brief coldness, uncovers unutterable loneliness and longing among the saddened ones of the home and church, for she was one whose place cannot be filled, and whose unfinished work seems yet to demand her special fitness. The world needs such women, and sore is the need of such in the church, but most of all was she needed by her two children, a 16-year-old daughter and an eight-year-old son, who are left. Sister Ireland was one of a family of seven children who have been able to dwell and work together with a unity seldom found in so large a family circle, yet the death-shaft found the one who was the center of their love, the one upon whom they leaned, and whose wisdom, unselfishness and brave cheerfulness under all circumstances were sure and strong. The sunshine of life to her father and mother, now growing old, a willing worker in the church, a winsome teacher of the little ones in the Sunday-school, always finding time for ministry to the sick and needy—how can human pen picture such a life? She has builded her eternal memorial into the immortal souls she has touched with helpfulness. Other churches in the land will appreciate the depth of our loss, for in several of them Sister Ireland has wrought nobly. She was born in Nokomis, Christian county, Ill., where she early became a Christian, being baptized by Bro. Wm. Van Hoosier. The family then moved to Hutchinson, Kan., where the church members knew well the beauty of her Christian character. At the age of 25 she was married to W. M. Ireland. In the years that have intervened she has lived at Portland, Ore., Los Angeles, Cal., and Detroit, always to leave the impress of her lovely life upon those who knew her. The bitterness of the parting is softened in a measure to those who mourn by the thought that she and the sister, Addie, who died two years ago, are together now, and with the hope of the Christian growing ever brighter, they await the gladness of reunion when the waiting time is over. Words of comfort were spoken to family and friends at the funeral by Bro. C. B. Newman.

B. Sherrod DeTar.

McLAUGHLIN.

Isabella McLaughlin was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, 1819. She had been a member of the Church of Christ there. She came to Illinois in 1852 and was married to David McLaughlin in 1854. They moved to Muskegan, Ill., and there being no Disciple Church there she united with the Baptists. She was a steadfast worker in the Sunday-school and all other works of the church. She left us to visit her son in Park City, Utah, and got there well and happy. The next morning she awoke unwell and 10 days from the time she left us she was brought back to be laid by her husband, who had passed over in 1891, there to rest till he comes to call us.

Mrs. M. Rodgers.

REED.

Olive May, only daughter of Bro. and Sister Ellis Reed, died at her home Dec. 19, 1899. She leaves a father, mother, an only brother, Alva, and a host of school and classmates. She was born May 10, 1881. She was taken ill with typhoid fever four weeks ago and suffered intensely until she was called from life just as she was entering upon a sphere of usefulness. She was of the graduating class of 1899, member of C. E. and secretary of the Sunday-school. She was a member of the Christian Church in DeLand and was much loved for her work's sake. Funeral services were held at the Christian Church in DdLand, Ill., Dec. 20, 1899, conducted by the writer.

MISSIONARY.

Commerce and Missions.

Robert Moffat said that merchants and manufacturers owed missionaries a vote of thanks. Consuls say that wherever missionaries have gone and preached the gospel it is easier to sell goods. General Sickles said the United States could well afford to pay a salary to the missionaries for the secular advantages they secured to us.

It is claimed that for every missionary that goes out to a savage country a trade worth $50,000 a year is created with the home country. Savages may have the raw materials in great abundance; they do not know their value or how to profit by them. Less than a century ago the inhabitants of the Sandwich Islands had no exports or imports. Ships were afraid to go near them. Now their imports and exports are worth fifteen million dollars a year. The profits on this commerce in a single year would pay for all it has cost to evangelize these islands. The commerce of the South Sea Islands is worth twenty millions a year. These islands export sugar, coffee, arrowroot, timber, beef, hides. A savage is a being with few and simple wants; he creates little and consumes little. Prof. Drummond saw a savage buried: all his possessions were put into the grave with him. These consisted of a pipe, a rough knife, a mud bowl, his bow and arrows. He stated that one stick, pointed, makes the savage a spear, two sticks rubbed together make him a fire, fifty sticks tied together make him a house, the bark he peels from them makes his clothes, the fruits which hang on them form his food. Christianized natives build homes to live in; they purchase clothing, sewing machines, cabinet organs; they make roads, build bridges; they establish newspapers; they demand all the conveniences of civilized life.

When Moffat began his work South Africa had no commerce. In a few years the people among whom he labored imported goods worth a million dollars a year. They wanted books, watches, plows, wagons, reapers and flouring mills. An American firm sent five hundred plows in one consignment to Natal. When Uganda was opened the currency used was a kind of cloth made in the United States and known as mericani. Stanley estimates that the commerce of the Congo Valley will be worth $300,000,000 a year to the markets of the world.

Visitors in Tacoma, Seattle, Vancouver and San Francisco are astonished at the trade with the Orient. Ever ship is loaded to its utmost capacity. China and Japan take our flour, cotton goods, steel rails, locomotives, lamps, coal oil, butter, canned foods. The profit on this commerce would pay the salaries of all the missionaries in those lands. One who knew whereof he affirmed said that the missionary enterprise is incomparably the most effective agency that has ever been used to further the commercial interests of mankind. For every dollar we invest in missions two dollars come back to buy products for the support of the missionary and for the people among whom he lives. Our missionaries in the Far East live in houses built of timber grown on the Pacific Coast. They import much of the food that they use, they introduce improved machinery of various kinds, and teach the people better methods of carrying on their work. In the Orphanage in India only American tools are used. The missionaries say that a boy will do more work in half a day with American tools than he will with native tools in a week. The missionaries minister, not only to the spiritual needs of the people, but contribute largely to their material prosperity and well-being.

Two Hundred and Twenty-Nine.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has now 229 workers in foreign lands, or twenty-five more than one year ago.

A number of new missionaries will be sent out in the near future.

Cuba has just been entered, two missionaries will sail for the Hawaiian Islands soon, and a little later four missionaries will go out to Manila, Philippine Islands.

This is to be a real Silver Jubilee Year.

The March offering draws nigh. Now is the time for preparation. The Foreign Society will furnish, free of charge, Pastoral Letters, March Offerings and the Missionary Voice. These should be ordered at once.

The Cincinnati Convention coined the following new watchword: $200,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Silver Jubilee Year.

State Missions.

Next Sunday, the 14th inst., has been set apart as State Mission Day in Missouri. This must be made a great day in all our churches. The preachers must take up this matter and earnestly urge upon their congregations the absolute necessity of this great work. Immediate action is demanded. To allow this work to drag or to go unnoticed means to lose ground which will not be regained. We must do something worthy of our great numbers, our great wealth and our match less plea. Earnest appeals for help are canstantly coming in from destitute and needy fields, but the state mission board cannot do anything because it has no means. The helpless and needy of our great state are looking to the preachers and churches for help. And shall they look in vain? We cannot afford to neglect for a single day this most pressing and important matter. We dare not go backward; we cannot attempt to stand still; we must go forward. Hitherto great blessings have attended our labors, and the future is full of promise. The conditions that now confront us demand a strong pull, a long pull and a pull all together. Let next Sunday be made a red-letter day in all our churches in the interest of state missions.

M. M. GOODE.

St. Joseph, Mo.

The wonderful growth of our cause in Missouri, during the last twenty years, has been due in large degree to the vigorous prosecution of our state work. We have kept consecrated men in the field, who were constantly organizing new congregations, strengthening those already existing and drawing all into closer co-operation and fellowship. For the past few years, with the increase of our numbers has seemed to come a decrease in our zeal for mission work within our own borders. Whatever the cause, every Disciple in Missouri must acknowledgo this fact to be a deplorable one. We must resume the former generous and general support of our state work, or we shall find our churches receding in every kind of useful effort. Let us have an offering from every congregation for our state work, and our offerings for general Home and Foreign Missions will increase in due proportions. Let us have ten thousand dollars for state work this year, and we will bring up to the next convention a report that will gladden every heart. Let every preacher take this matter to heart and secure an offering from the churches to which he ministers. The people will give if we will tell them of the work and give them an opportunity. Will we be faithful to our sacred calling as leaders of the hosts of the Lord in taking Missouri for Christ?

At the state convention in Jefferson City there was but one sentiment, and that was that this work must be enlarged. Its present status is not worthy of our numbers, our intelligence, our wealth and our plea. From many a distant field comes the appeals for assistance. These have been investigated and many found to be worthy and they have been informed that if the means comes they shall be helped. This, then, is the situation in a nutshell. If we fail now it will be because "ye would not." I have written many personal letters in the last month calling attention to our needs. Some have sent happy answers; none have refused, but the great majority have been as silent as the grave. One answer especially is worthy of note: it was from Sister E. D. Harvey, of Meadville. Every year she sent $10 to our treasury. This year she increased it by $5, and her husband sent $5 besides. Such generosity needs to be mentioned, not that they be glorified, but that others be led to follow their example. Bro. C. A. Bennet and wife, of Greenville, also sent $5 each as a token of their interest. M. J. Nicoson, of Monroe City, and Emily T. Standiford, finished paying their life memberships. Dr. W. S. Holland, of Marshall, has paid Joe Gaylor for December and Bro. and Sister Allison, of Brookfield, subscribes for one month's pay. Brothers J. L. Hollowell, Simpson Ely and Sister Hickman send $1 each for the same purpose. May the Lord increase their kind.

Now then for a great rally to the pushing of "Missouri to the front." We cannot, we must not, fail; every interest, every motive inspires us to the greatest things. Let us pray for a glorious victory.

Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Mr. Beveridge, the new senator from Indiana, made his maiden speech last Tuesday on his Philippine resolution. It was a strong defense of the government's action in taking the islands from Spain and attempting to enforce its authority in them, and a plea for the establishment of a strong government, with no definite promise of autonomy. The senator's eloquent remarks on America's providential mission to the world, and especially to that portion of it which has thus suddenly been thrust upon our hands, were true enough, in our opinion, but contained little that had not already been as well said. The really interesting part of his speech was that in which he spoke of the character of the Filipinos and of the commercial importance of the islands. Here he gave the results of his personal observations during his visit to the Philippines last summer. These were the two sides of his argument for American control of the archipelago: First, the Filipinos are incapable of self-government; hence American control would be for their best interests. Second, the islands are commercially important and rich in natural resources; hence American control would be to our advantage.

Senator Hoar has introduced a resolution calling upon the President to furnish to Congress full information regarding all communications and dealings between Aguinaldo or other Filipino agents and the representatives of the United States Government, "if, in his judgment, it is not incompatible with public interests." This is well. It is a satisfaction to have Senator Hoar admit in that formal and public way that he needs information. Hitherto his position has indicated to the casual observer that he knew all about the situation, and we hailed with joy this apparent admission of his lack of complete omniscience. But alas, the leopard cannot change his spots nor the Ethiopian his skin. The very next day after making this public request for information Mr. Hoar sent to the Boston papers an open letter defining his position in regard to the Philippines. The interesting part of this letter is the list which it contains of a dozen "proved facts," as he calls them, some of which are as follows: (1) That Aguinaldo is an honest, patriotic and brave man. (2) That he is the chosen leader of the people of the Philippine Islands. (3) That that people have from the beginning desired independence. (4) That they had practically won it when the United States forces appeared on the scene. (5) That they are fit for independence and self-government. (6) That the outbreak of hostilities between the American troops and the Filipinos was not their fault, but ours.

When a United States senator can publicly make such statements as those and call them "proved facts," it is very apparent that the pressing need is, not for glittering generalities about America's mission to the nations that sit in darkness, but a little of the information which Mr. Hoar calls for so loudly and needs so badly. But while the gentleman from Massachusetts calls for information, he makes poor use of that which is already at hand. There is the report of the Philippine Commission, headed by Pres. Schurman, a body whose sagacity and integrity has never been impugned. The Commission says that all Filipino insurrections had aimed only to give relief from the petty tyranny of Spanish friars and civil governors and that the idea of political independence was first conceived when American forces came on the scene. But Mr. Hoar says that it is a "proved fact" that they have sought independence from the beginning. The Commission says that the present war with the natives was "absolutely unavoidable by any means except retreat." Mr. Hoar says it is a "proved fact" that it was "not their fault, but ours." The Commission says the natives, while they have good general intellectual capacities, "have so little education and experience as to be practically incapable of self government." Mr. Hoar says it is a "proved fact" that they are capable of self-government. We do not at the present moment profess to decide which is right: Schurman, Dewey, Denby and Worcester investigating in the Philippines, or Hoar sitting in his senatorial seat in Washington and calling for information. We merely wish to call attention to the circumstance that Hoar's "proved facts" are for the most part the opposite of the findings of the above-mentioned Commission.

It is to be regretted that so much of partisan acrimony and even personal abuse has been developed in the discussion of the relations between the Secretary of the Treasury and the National City Bank of New York. The circumstances are as follows: It has been customary for secretaries of the Treasury to avoid an undue reduction of the circulating medium by distributing among certain national banks, known for that purpose as depositories, so much of the government's receipts as are not needed to meet current expenses. In this way the surplus can be kept in circulation while technically it is still in the United States Treasury. In December there was a violent disturbance in the money market, a sudden rise in interest rates and a consequent general panic in the business world, in spite of the fact that general commercial conditions were good. There was a large surplus in the Treasury. Presumably the presence of this large amount of currency in the Treasury and its absence from the world of trade had much to do with the panic. To relieve the situation Secretary Gage adopted the recognized expedient of depositing part of the surplus in national banks. To the National City Bank, which qualified by depositing more bonds than any other institution, was given a larger deposit than to any of the others, about $13,000,000. It is charged that unwarrantable favoritism has thus been shown in favor of the National City Bank, and that political motives are at the bottom of it. Further, the same bank has bought from the government the New York Custom House building, for something over three millions. This amount was paid to the government in the form of a cheque from the bank, and the cheque was at once deposited in the same bank; so the government now pays rent for the building, but the bank has not actually paid out a dollar, since it has for the present the free use of the three millions.

The policy of depositing public money in banks without interest is as old as the national bank system itself. The discontinuance of the old United States Bank and the establishment of an independent treasury system under Van Buren was a recognition of the fact that the government cannot with propriety perform all the activities of a bank. For a time then the government kept its surplus in its own vaults. The beginning of the policy of depositing the surplus in national banks was a recognition of the fact that the country suffered through the withdrawal of so large an amount of currency from the channels of trade. As the matter stands now it is the prerogative of the Secretary of the Treasury to select the depositories. When there arises a stringency in the money market which he can relieve by depositing the surplus in the banks, it becomes his duty to do so. And how easy it is to change favoritism when one bank is selected rather than another. The reply which Secretary Gage has given to the request of the House of Represetatives for full information in regard to his dealings with the National City Bank seems to us fairly satisfactory. But the possibility of such a situation ought never to arise. It ought to be no part of the business of the Secretary of the Treasury to go to the relief of Wall Street. But it must be so, so long as a surplus in the Treasury means a stringency in the business world. Obviously the need is for a more elastic currency. One method of attaining this end would be to permit the national banks to issue bank notes in excess of the amount of bonds deposited by them; such notes to be based on commercial paper held by them and to be taxed to such a degree that they would not be issued in excess of actual requirements and would be taken up when the hour of need was past.

The arrival of Lord Roberts at Cape Town is the most encouraging event of the past week in South Africa. Most of the other news is fragmentary, garbled and untrustworthy, but this much is sure: "Bobs" is there and it will be a sore disappointment if his presence does not alter the course of events. Gen. Buller, for some unknown reason, failed to take advantage of the apparent opportunity to advance across the Tugela while Joubert's forces were busy at Ladysmith. After a delay of nearly a week he has, however, begun a flank movement which seems to have some prospect of a successful issue. If the Boer forces against which it is directed are kept as much in the dark regarding the plan of operations as the general public now is, it cannot well fail. The only certain point is that Gen. Buller has led at least a part of his troops west from Colenso to Potgieter's Drift, a ford of the Tugela River. The object is obviously to attempt to turn the right flank of the Boer position. Meanwhile it is reported that Gen. Warren has led another column east from Colenso by way of Weenen to cover the left flank, but Warren's column is reported at so many different places at once that it becomes highly doubtful whether it is at any of them. But, amid all the uncertainties, the significant fact is that, after a five weeks' rest by the Tugela River, Buller is actively attempting to do something.

In response to the request of Ambassador Choate for a declaration of British policy in regard to the seizure of contraband of war and a definition of what is contraband, Lord Salisbury has given a reply which, while not as definite in all respects as might be desired, is still satisfactory for the present. It is declared that foodstuffs shipped to a neutral port will be considered contraband of war only when it is proved that they are intended for the enemy, but Great Britain maintains the old common law right to seize such supplies as may be absolutely necessary for the maintenance of her own troops. The assurance that indemnity will be paid for anything that seized makes it impossible for any very violent misunderstanding to arise. But the exact status of flour, meal and other foodstuffs has not yet been defined and it will not be possible for Great Britain to go on indefinitely seizing supplies on the plea that they are needed for the support of British troops. The timely release of the greater part of the American goods that had been seized robbed Senator Hale of the opportunity of making a very foolish spectacle of himself in the support of an inflammatory resolution which he had introduced. There never was any reasonable possibility of serious trouble over the episode. The release of the American flour and the assurances from Lord Salisbury have removed any lingering excuse for acrimony or anxiety. What remains is merely a general interest in the question which Great Britain still has to decide.

REVIVALS—ARE THEY NECESSARY?

Let us answer the question in the affirmative at once. As long as the church remains the church militant, as long as it falls so far short of being the ideal church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, revivals will be necessary. The word signifies the existence of life, and therefore properly applies to Christians and to churches. If Christians always lived up to the full measure of their privileges and obligations, if churches abounded in spiritual power and activity, then, indeed, revivals would not be necessary; but unfortunately these ideal conditions do not exist. We must deal with the facts as they are.

Revivals have always been necessary. They were necessary under the Jewish dispensation, of which there are many notable instances in the Bible, and they have been equally necessary under the new. Nothing is needed to-day throughout the United States, and perhaps throughout all Christendom, so much as a revival of pure religion. In an article from Mr. Moody, printed since his death, in the Christian Endeavor World, he says: "I am not nearly so anxious for a revival of trade in this country as for a revival of righteousness. My constant prayer is that God will breathe upon the churches and quicken the spiritual life of our country."

Mr. Moody estimates that four-fifths of our church members were converted during revivals. He says he has tested this time and again in his audiences. Any preacher among us may do the same thing. He will be sure to find that a very large proportion of his congregation were converted during revivals. This might not have been so had the churches all been as continuously engaged in aggressive Christian work as they ought to have been. But they were not, and that is the fact with which we have to deal.

Let us admit at once that revivals are sometimes attended by a degree of excitement that is not healthful, and are carried on by methods which cannot be commended. These evils, however, ought not to neutralize in our minds the vast amount of good that is accomplished by them. We should seek to avoid these extremes and secure the beneficial results. This is the time of year when religious revivals are most successfully carried on in this country. It is pre-eminently the season of religious work. There ought to be a general revival among all the churches, and it should not only be general, but genuine. Here are some of the marks of a genuine revival:

1. It should be a revival of righteousness; that is to say, of right living. No church can expect a genuine revival whose members are living lives which are out of harmony with principles of truth and righteousness. A revival that is not accompanied or preceded by a putting away of evil practices—dishonesty, lying, deceit, hypocrisy, evil speaking, personal animosities, jealousies, grinding of the poor, etc.—lacks an essential mark of a true revival.

2. It should be a revival of Bible reading and Bible study. Not until the Word of God gets possession of our minds and hearts are we fitted to do aggressive work in the way of winning souls to Christ. Mr. Moody declares that it was not until his mind and heart were stored with the knowledge of the Scriptures that the Holy Spirit fitted him for service. A true revival should be and will be accompanied by a keen relish for the Word of God and the daily reading thereof.

3. It will be a revival of prayer. Family altars which have fallen down will be erected, and especially will there be a revival of private prayer. There is no truer sign of spiritual life than the habit of prayer. When the Lord said to Ananias concerning Saul of Tarsus, "Behold, he prayeth," He said more in those three words concerning the real spiritual condition of this erstwhile fierce persecutor than could have been expressed otherwise in equal space.

4. A genuine revival of brotherly love is needed in all the churches. A revival that does not embrace this feature is lacking in one very important element. All divisions, feuds, strifes, alienations among brethren, together with indifference to each other's condition and needs is contrary to the spirit of a genuine revival.

5. Another mark of a genuine revival will be the conversion of sinners to Christ, which always follows when the church puts itself right with God and becomes the channel of his divine power. Nor can we expect many genuine conversions while the spirit of worldliness and prayerlessness dominates the church.

6. Finally, the result of a true revival must be an enlargement of Christian activity in all the branches of church work. The Sunday-school, the Endeavor Society, the midweek prayer-meeting, the Ladies' Aid Society, the C. W. B. M.—all these will do more and better work as the result of a genuine revival. Church debts will be paid and missionary contributions will be larger than ever before.

If these be the signs of a genuine revival, it will be seen how very important such revivals are in the progress and development of our churches. The question then occurs, How can we have them? What legitimate means can be employed to secure them? This is an important question, and in answer to it we can only offer a few suggestions.

First of all, the church must desire a revival. It must feel the need of it. There must be dissatisfaction with existing conditions. There must be a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. There must be a feeling of obligation for the unconverted that are round about us and for vhose conversion the Lord will hold us responsible.

This desire for a revival must issue in a etermination to revive. The church must elieve in the possibility of accomplishing piritual results. It must not doubt the villingness of God to co-operate with it in ts efforts to advance His kingdom. The hurch must go at it whole-heartedly. This neans, of course, that it will be the object f much prayer, and that the individual hurch members will agree to do their parts respectively, to make the revival a success.

As already intimated, the church must ut itself right with God before it can exect te receive power from God to win men rom the fascinations of a sinful life to the ervice of Christ. Too much emphasis canot be laid on this point. Every evangelist nderstands the futility of all his efforts ntil the church itself is in order.

There must be, of course, intelligent planing for the success of the meeting, if a neeting be decided upon the best way of romoting the revival. It must be talked bout and advertised. Wise efforts should e made to secure the attendance of the eople. There must be earnest and forceful reaching of the Word of God. Specially nust the preacher deal with the nature of in and its consequences and call men to epentance. There is nothing but the gosel of Christ that will convert the people to im. Let that be preached faithfully, contantly and lovingly.

The singing must supplement the preachng. It should be marked by great earnestess. The gospel should be sung as well as reached. Get as many people to singing s possible. Let the songs be such as will each the heart and exalt Christ.

These public efforts and agencies must be ccompanied by individual work, personal isitations and conversations and invitaons. These methods and means, faithfully llowed for a sufficient length of time, can ardly fail to produce a genuine revival in ny church, with the results above indicatd.

We should be glad to know that every nurch among us had decided to have such a evival during this closing year of the cenury, and that among all the religious bodies ne spirit of a genuine revival of religion nould prevail until we should enter upon ne twentieth century with such a tide of eligious enthusiasm as to make it a memable epoch in the history of the church.

A few days ago this question was asked the editor: "If a young preacher has 100 to invest in books, what would you adse him to buy?" We would advise him to uy a certificate of deposit in some good ank, from which he can draw out about ree dollars a month, with which to buy ooks. Assuming, merely as a working ypothesis, that there really exists somehere a young preacher blessed with one ndred dollars in ready money for the purase of books, we can give him no better dvice than to avoid spending his money all once for anybody's list of fifty or a hunred best books. A minister must have books, but there is no one book which the minister must have, except the one which the fortunate young preacher is supposed to have secured before he became a preacher. There are a few books which may be considered as the best in their respective departments, but there are few cases—we had almost said there is no case—in which one book is the best in its class for all readers, or even for all ministerial readers. The book which is best for a man of trained mind and broad, general culture, may be hopelessly unintelligible to one of inferior training, and the best book for a beginner will probably not be of much value to the scholar. Accordingly, if you buy a hundred dollars' worth of books which fit you now, the reading of the first half dozen will cause you to outgrow the rest—at least it ought to. So let this opulent young preacher buy a book or two and put the rest of his hundred dollars in the bank. Let him master that book or two, and by the time he has finished he will probably have a suggestion for the next book he is to buy. Let him make sure that he grows as fast as his library grows, and his library will contain the best books for him.

Occasionally the question is raised in some of the non-ritualistic churches, whether the public worship of the church ought not to be enriched by the introduction of some sort of ritual. Many Congregational and Presbyterian Churches have taken steps in that direction; a few Baptist Churches have done likewise, and among our own churches the same need has been felt in many quarters. But the question ought to be stated differently. It is not a question of introducing a ritual, for we already have one, but of changing and improving it. Already we have in almost every congregation a fixed order of exercises, departure from which would be considered, if not a surrender of the faith, at least a serious breach of good order. Every pastor who has tried to change the place of the communion from the end to the beginning of the morning service, or to introduce some slight change in the form of it, knows with what tenacity the old ritual is maintained. The opening hymn is followed by the invocation and the Scripture reading precedes the "long prayer." The only ritualistic feature which is lacking is the prescribed form of prayer, and even here there is not such a complete absence of fixity as is commonly supposed. If the average pastor could read a stenographic report of his prayers for a dozen Sundays he would probably be surprised to find how little they varied in matter or words. Would not the public worship of the church be made more satisfactory if we should, first, recognize the fact that we have a ritual now and, second, try to improve it? Perhaps, too, it would help us to be more charitable in our judgments of other religious bodies which have a liturgical form of worship if we were to recognize that our own system has some points in common with theirs. Anyway, there is seldom anything lost by calling things by their right names, and sometimes there is a great deal gained.

Hour of Prayer.

BLESSINGS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

(Gal, 4:6; Rom. 8:15, 16, 26, 27; Jude 20:21; 1 Cor. 6;19, 20; Eph. 1:13, 14, 17; Rom. 15:13.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic for January 24.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The Holy Spirit, as Christ's representative, is the agent through whom He conveys to us the blessings and graces of Christian life and character, and completes the work of our sanctification and redemption.

The Holy Spirit and his work occupy a large place in the New Testament. Let us, in this meeting, seek to gain a clearer apprehension of some of the things He does for us.

1. It is through the Holy Spirit that we come to the consciousness of sonship. "Because ye are sons, God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Gal. 4:6). The cry of the soul, then, to God, as Father, with that freedom and boldness which that relationship confers, comes from the presence in our heart of the Holy Spirit. How desirable it is; how essential to true prayer!

2. The Holy Spirit within us bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God. There is a correlation between the divine and human spirit which gives the highest certitude to the soul of its acceptance with God. "For the Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God" (Rom. 8:16).

3. The Holy Spirit helps our infirmities, teaches us how to pray, and interprets our inarticulate groanings (Rom. 8:26). It is the presence of the Holy Spirit with in us that enables us to pray successfully, "because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God" (v. 27. See also Jude 20:21).

4. Bodies of Christians are temples of the Holy Spirit. "Or know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have from God?" (1 Cor. 6:19.) The Jewish temple was made holy by the Shekinah, or the presence of God. Under the Christian dispensation the human heart is the temple in which God dwells by His Spirit. To remember this fact would prevent us from doing any of those acts which defile either the body or the spirit. "If any man destroy the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (1 Cor. 3:17).

5. Christians are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. The official seal of any person or firm is to give authentication to the document thus sealed. God places His seal on the Christian by His Holy Spirit, and thereby marks him as His own. The Holy Spirit is also the earnest of our inheritance; that is, a prepayment, so to speak, of the full reward that is to be given hereafter (Eph. 1:13, 14). Whoever, therefore, possesses the Holy Spirit bears the mark of divine ownership, and has the earnest of a future glorious inheritance.

6. One of the best things about Christianity, one of the richest possessions of the Christian, is the hope which inspires the heart and paints bright visions of the future blessedness. Whence cometh this hope? "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 15:13). We can only abound in hope, therefore, "in the power of the Holy Spirit." Nothing is more needed to nerve us to endure the ills of this present life and to resist its allurements and temptations than a living hope which anticipates the blessedness of that life that is to be.

If these blessings, which are of such infinite value to the soul, come through the agency of the Holy Spirit, as these Scriptures declare, then how vastly important that Christians possess the Holy Spirit! Suppose there are heights and depths about the subject which we cannot understand. It is not necessary that we understand all the mysteries of the Spirit in order to be the recipients of His benefits. It is only necessary that we hunger and thirst after righteousness, that we desire to know more of God, to have more of His life in us and to seek the fulfillment of these desires through the possession of the divine Spirit, which is promised to every faithful believer. It is always comforting in this connection to remember the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, who said: "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

If this prayer-meeting shall result in causing those present to make a fresh study of the subject of the Holy Spirit in his relation to our spiritual life, and to seek the blessings which the Holy Spirit confers, they will have reason to thank God all their lives for their presence here to-night. The doctrine of the Holy Spirit has been too much neglected, or has been studied too much in a controversial way to be very profitable. Let us seek to possess the Spirit.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven: We thank Thee for Thy great gift to the world, even Jesus Christ, Thy Son, and we thank Thee for Thy great gift to the church, even Thy Holy Spirit. We thank Thee for the promise of our Lord, which has been fulfilled in Christian history and in Christian experience, that after He went away He would send "another Comforter, who would carry on His unfinished work." We thank Thee for these blessed promises concerning the Holy Spirit, and for the rich gifts and graces Thou hast conferred upon us through Him. May our hearts be wide open to receive this divine Guest who would come to enrich our lives, ennoble our characters and fit us for Thy service. If any of us have been barren and unfruitful in the past, if we have felt ourselves unfit for Thy service, may we seek the help Thou hast promised through Thy Spirit, to the end that we may be able to abound in joy, in hope and in every good word and work. Help us, we pray Thee, to cleanse our hearts from everything that would grieve the Holy Spirit, that He may dwell therein and make our lives a blessing to others. This we ask in the name Christ. Amen!

Sometimes a criticism which files objection to a paper is very complimentary. In a letter lying before us a brother who has been securing subscriptions for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST says he finds this objection to it: its articles are too thoughtful and pitched on too high a spiritual tone for the average reader. Many of the people, he says, prefer the ———— because of its newsy, gossipy style, which is better understood by them than the deeper thought and spirituality of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. "This," the writer adds, "is the penalty which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has to pay for being in advance of the Disciple hosts." We are glad to be able to say to our brother, while thanking him for his efforts, that a great host of Disciples are managing to keep up along with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and have no intention of allowing it to get beyond their reach. They have a mind to do a little growing themselves, both in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and they like a paper that helps them along in that direction. It is to this class that we make our appeal, and we are glad to know that it is an increasing class. We doubt if any paper in the brotherhood furnishes more news than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but in addition to that we are trying to give our readers each week something that is more important, even, than news, and that will help to build up moral and spiritual fibre.

One of the prayer-meeting topics for the Week of Prayer was "The Church Universal." It would be an interesting revelation to know how the subject was treated in the various churches throughout the country. It was a good thing to call the attention of the people to something broader and deeper than their respective denominations. What is the church universal? It is made up, we should say, of all who, in every land, have heard of Christ and have accepted Him as both Savior and Lord. Unfortunately, they are separated, not only by geographical distances and by different languages, but by denominational barriers, which too often are high enough to shut out from view other parts of the church universal. It is a goodly fellowship, however, in spite of its intellectual mistakes and of its divisions. It is very comforting to remember frequently that the Master has other sheep that are not of the particular fold, denominationally speaking, to which we belong, and that it is His purpose in His good time, to bring His sheep together so that there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. Yes, there is a church universal, and one day it is to be a church united and triumphant. Meanwhile, let us remember that we are not alone in our struggles to advance the kingdom of Christ and make His reign universal. There is a mighty, unnumbered host, who are seeking the same ends, though the methods and means employed may be very different. Let us try to be large enough and catholic-minded enough to rejoice in all the good that is being done for humanity and for the glory of God by any part of the church universal.

But how long must we wait for the church universal to put away its sectarianism, its divisions, its party creeds and shibboleths, its superstition and its tyranny, and become what the Master intended it to be—a mighty consecrated host, striving together for the overthrow of evil in the world and for the triumph of the kingdom of God? We ought not to overlook or fail to be thankful for the degree of unity which already exists among the professed followers of Christ, but neither ought we to be satisfied with it as meeting the demands of our Lord's prayer for the oneness of His disciples. There is no better way, however, of promoting this unity than by the generous recognition of that which exists and by taking an interest in the work that is being done by other religious bodies than our own. One of the chief obstacles now to a close union among Christians is nonacquaintance with each other on account of an undue absorption of each denomination in its own interests without regard to what the rest of the world is doing. It is a good thing to think of and pray for the church universal. It will broaden us, render us more charitable, and give us a much better idea of what God is doing in the world through His Church.

The Easy Chair editor has been taking a day off, looking at the world on his back under a tyrannous edict from his physician. This enforced idleness has its blessings as well as its inconveniences. It is a strange experience in the life of a busy man to lie in his bed all day, watching the weary hours go by, catching notes of the busy world's industry without, but himself taking no part in it. But it gives one an opportunity to do a good deal of quiet thinking and meditation. And then, one has an opportunity of seeing what a day is like. He sees the gray of the morning give way to the flood of sunlight, watches the day advance steadily toward the meridian and then gradually decline toward the evening. From our Rose Hill cottage it was pleasant to watch the western sky grow rosy in the evening as the sun sank to his rest. Soon the merry voices of children were heard in the neighborhood, returning from school and playing their evening games. Later when the shadows had deeper grown, we could hear the heavier footfalls of passers by, indicating that the men were returning from their daily toil down town to the bosom of their families. The houses are illuminated and present an appearance of welcome to the weary homecomers. What a fortress the home is to one engaged in fighting life's hard battles! These phases of life, which the busy man overlooks when he is himself in the midst of the busy toil of the day, he has time to observe when he is lying on his back, serving out a sentence from his physician. There are few things in this world so bad that they have no compensations. The window of a sick room often lets in more of God's light than a office window.

Questions and Answers.

. Can a person be in full fellowship and l standing among the Disciples and oppose societies for religious purposes but the rch?

. Which presents the teaching of the Dises on the "Actual and Formal Remission sins:" Mr. Jones or Mr. Briney? as per ars in CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST?

. Where can I find this "fact" recorded: t the fact that it (the first church in Jerum) continued to practice circumcision, to rve the Jewish Sabbath, and to keep the law Moses," etc.? You will find this statement rticle, "The Ideal Church," May 19, 1898. s has been so frequently denied that I doubt I want the authority for the statement.

. Please tell me where, in any translation, n find the term "Disciples" used to desige the followers of Christ. In issue, May '98, you say, after speaking of the fact that ital "D" is used when "disciple" is a proper n, and that this proper noun is used to disuish some Christians from others—"It is most frequently used term to designate the wers of Christ in the New Testament."

G. C. Hutchinson.

. It depends upon how much is put in word 'oppose.' If one should make his osition to Christian Endeavor, Ladies' and C. W. B. M. Societies, in the local rch, and the other missionary organizaıs, of such a character as to produce strife disorder, he would not long be in good nding. If, however, he simply held to opinion that these organizations were ıecessary and made his missionary offers in any way he might see proper, allow- others to do the same, this fact would interfere with his standing in the ırch.

2. The distinction between actual and mal remission of sins which is treated in discussion to which reference is made, hough presented first by Alexander Campl, has never received much emphasis ong us. We do not know, therefore, which he more prevalent view among us on the stion. All of us, however, accept Acts 8 without modification.

3. One can safely infer, we think, from 21st chapter of Acts that the members of church at Jerusalem observed the Jew- law for several years and probably up to time of the destruction of the temple.

4. If our querist refers to the term Disles with a capital "D," we do not know of occurrence in the New Tertament. What stated in the issue referred to was that term "Disciples," without reference to pitalization, "is the most frequently used m to designate the followers of Christ in New Testament. Whether we spell the rd with a capital "D," or a lower case "d" ıot a question of theology, but a question grammar or literary form.

According to Bro. Briney, one must repent l be baptized for the remission of sins, in er to be saved. I would like to ask if one not be saved if he were not baptized, as the ptists think? A. B.

Even the Baptists would hardly hold that any one refusing to obey the command to be baptized, knowing it to be his duty, would be saved, nor would they admit him into their fellowship. On the other hand, Bro. Briney would not hold that one, having no opportunity or ability to be baptized, would be condemned for disobedience to that command. There can be no disobedience and consequently no guilt, where there is no ability to obey. The man who stops to call in question the possibility of his being saved without obeying a positive command of Christ is far from being in a safe condition, however much he may congratulate himself on his spiritual illumination.

Have you permanently discontinued the Christian Endeavor lessons? A. P.

We decided at the beginning of the present volume to omit the article on the Christian Endeavor topic, thinking perhaps there was not sufficient demand for it to justify its publication, as the topics are treated in all the Endeavor papers, including our own Young Folks. We have had a number of expressions of regret at the discontinuance of the articles, but not enough to justify their resumption, unless those who have written on the subject represent a great many others. For our guidance in the matter we would be glad to have a more general expression of sentiment on the subject. A word or two on a postal card will be sufficient.

Current Religious Thought.

In summarizing events and conditions in England in the past ten years, Mr. R. Brimley Johnson, in the Atlantic Monthly, gives this excellent statement of the situation in the Church of England. Realizing that the controversy between High Church and Low Church, ritualist and anti-ritualist, is in large part an historical controversy, and that it is curiously complicated by the difference of opinions in regard to the original significance of the Reformation in England, he gives the following analysis:

> The interpretations offered for the motives inspiring the men responsible for our Prayer Book, by which the churc must stand or fall, are very various, but they may be provisionally grouped under four main heads: (1) A desire to avoid the sanction of any authority except the Word of God. (2) A determination to approximate as nearly as possible to the model of the early Christian Church. (3) A resolution to revive the English Catholic Church, which, by this contention, claims to have existed for many centuries in communion with the whole Western Church, but acknowledging no canonical submission to the See of Rome. (4) An attempt to maintain the unity of the Catholic Church hitherto centered at Rome, without treason to the civil authority of England, and to take the opportunity of removing certain doctrines and practices which many earnest and loyal sons of the church had already reviled as abuses. Speaking roughly, the first and second positions repr sent the Low Church view, while High Churchmen adopt the third or fourth.

The crisis of the Church of England is such an indubitable reality that it is worth while to note opinions on the situation from the various points of view. The following from an article in the Catholic World Magazine expresses forcibly enough the savage glee with which the Romanists look forward to the dissolution of the Anglican Church and the return of the Ritualists to the Roman communion. The Ritualists, he says, possess practically all the "supernatural faith" that there is in England, and a reconciliation between the two factions in the English Church is impossible. The particularly ominous feature of the case in the view of this Catholic writer is the diversity of religious opinion which has found room within the Anglican fold:

> The Anglican Church and its own children shall stand up to give testimony, the accredted servants of her sanctuary shall bear witness that it not only lacks all homogeneity, but is a seething cauldron of heterogeneous, irreconcilable, unassimilative elements. It is the refuge of every color and shade of religious thought—the harbor that loosely anchors every ecclesiastical derelict that cannot find a mooring elsewhere, the inviting beach where all the flotsam and jetsam tossed on the sea of doubt, dissent and negation is washed ashore. "It has remained open," says Prof. Allen, its leading American historian, "to all tides of religious thought which have swept over the nation; it has been able to retain in its fold those whom no other form of organized Christianity could t lerate."

A writer in the New York Observer, an excellent Presbyterian journal, discusses in no very confident tone "the future of Presbyterianism." The statistics which he quotes show that the net numerical increase of the denomination is falling off year by year. In 1895 it amounted to three per cent.; in 1899, less than one per cent. In the Synods of New York and Pennsylvania, which are supposed to be strongholds of Presbyterianism, there was an actual decrease in membership. The writer diagnoses the case, rightly we believe, as too great reliance on the past achievements and heroic history of the denomination and recommends more zeal and a wiser adaptation of the means of work to changed conditions. He says:

> The eyes of Presbyterians turn too easily toward the past. We love our noble history, and rightly, but perhaps too well. Let us be gathered together in anniversary, or reunion, or upon the occasion of any celebration, and what are the topics upon which we will be fed? "Presbyterianism and Republicanism;" "Presbyterianism and Education," which will prove to be a philosophical explanation of the fact that Presbyterianism has always been a foremost champion of education, and has enjoyed the marks of her special favor; or it will be "The Scriptural Authority of the Presbyterian System," or "The Westminster Confession as a Paragon of Symbolic Perfection." We take down the glorious old Presbyterian trumpet and blow it till the air shivers with the brazen sound. We trot out the old war-horses, and burnish up the swords and shields, and shout the old battle-cries, and go through a pantomime of battle, and the world looks on, and is only kept by its high respect for us, personally, from wondering irreverently what all this fuss is about.

Certain Catholic leaders are projecting a plan for a grand national assembly and celebration "under the auspices of the hierarchy" sometime during the present year to exhibit the progress of Catholicism during the nineteenth century, and to present "to the world of irreligion the spectacle of a united, progressive and aggressive church which speaks with authority, which settles the perplexing difficulties of belief, and which claims to be and is the ark of salvation to all the world." To usher in the twentieth century with a grand Roman demonstration seems a painful anachronism.

SOME OF OUR PRESSING NEEDS.

Our Need of Men.

W. T. MOORE.

Things are the servants of men; men are the servants of God. In the order of creation man was last in execution, though he was doubtless first in design; all things were made for him, but he himself was made for the honor and glory of God. Personality is, therefore, the end of all creative power, and the highest development of this personality is the purpose of divine wisdom in the scheme of redemption.

This is the age of machinery. But this fact, when properly understood, only emphasizes the importance of personality. Behind all this machinery there is the creative, regulative and executive force of mind. Plans are well enough, but they must be properly constructed and effectively worked, or else they are useless lumber and will retard, instead of speed, the wheels of progress.

As a religious people the Disciples have been working through a period which may be not inappropriately called their organic period. For awhile all their work was more or less in chaos. But the spirit of organization brooded over this chaos and the result was, confusion was changed into order and a wild individualism into a reasonably compact and workable system.

Now that this has been accomplished, it is to be feared that some are trusting too much to the system to work itself. The time was when few of our churches had any regular pastors, in the sense in which they now serve. But within the last twenty years this has all been changed, and now most of our efficient churches are superintended by men who are supposed to be reasonably equipped for their special work.

But what are the facts of the case? Doubtless many of these pastors have a better academical education than had the same class of men twenty-five or thirty years ago. But will academic training make men? That is the question we are called upon to face in this closing year of the nineteenth century. Our educational institutions are certainly useful auxiliaries in the development of true men and women; but they must not be estimated above their real value. They must not be regarded as manufacturing institutions where men and women are made to order. Indeed, it is quite possible for a man to take the whole course at any of our universities and graduate with distinction without ever becoming an efficient pastor or evangelist. The mistake which has been made, in some cases at least, is in assuming that a college or university diploma, and especially a postgraduate diploma, actually assures a man's fitness for efficient work in the Master's vineyard. This mistake has been almost fatal in not a few instances. At present our cause in Missouri is suffering from a disease not remotely connected with a reaction from this mistake. I fear that in some places, at least, we are smitten with smallness. I am looking at this matter from a purely unprejudiced point of view. I have not been a resident of the state very long, and have no personal associations or complications to serve. But I think I see the real situation.

Our trouble has come about in two ways. Many of our strongest men have practically been driven from the state for the want of an adequate support. The churches have failed to understand this matter, or else they have been indifferent to the demands made upon them. In either case the result has been the same. The men have sought and found more appreciative fields of labor.

Then there is another cause for this hegira. The uneducated ministers, being in a large majority, have been able to practically hold back all progress among the churches by holding on to the methods and habits of the early days of our movement, many of which are at present obsolete and cannot be used with effectiveness in pushing our cause to the front.

The result is the churches have not grown. Many of them are spiritually dead. This is specially true of our country and village churches. In the early days of our movement these were the churches wherein our greatest strength was to be found. But the times have changed and we have not changed with them. Our people are trying to run their spiritual business by machinery that has been out of date fully thirty or forty years. Just as well try to go back to the old keelboat system of navigation on our Missouri River, or to the wagon system of land travel of the olden times.

I blame the preachers largely for this state of things. If we had a few earnest, active, big-hearted, consecrated, thoroughly intellectual men in our state who would at once take this matter in hand they might be able to lead a movement that would change the whole face of the disagreeable aspect which at present is manifesting itself. Indeed, we have a class of men who could do this very work. But they hesitate. They do not seem to have the courage to either strike or speak, consequently the cause has actually fallen into the hands of small men; good men, but men of no commanding influence and of no leading power. If we could put into the field one thoroughly wide-awake, strong, consecrated man with good executive ability, with definite aim and unselfish devotion to the great interests of the work which he undertakes, he could and would soon make Missouri the banner state in everything else, as she is now in the number of her Disciples. We need a great guiding hand in our co-operative work. Can such a man be found, and will he lead our Missouri forces?

Let no one misunderstand me. We have some noble men among our Missouri ministers, but these are half paralyzed by their present environment. This environment must be improved, and this improvement cannot be brought about until we redeem ourselves from the sway of littleness and enter upon a work large enough to inspire in us nobler and better aims.

We have plenty of money and no lack of machinery. Our need now is men; men of the right stamp; men who will give themselves unreservedly to the work of saving souls and educating them in all that is for the new life.

In looking over this matter, it is imp ble not to contrast the present sta things with the former days. When men as T. M. Allen, Lard, Procter, W Jones, the Haleys and many others might be mentioned were in their prime cause in Missouri moved forward with and bounds. Several of these real men crossed the river and the others have practically shot; for old men are no lo of any use in the ministry. Indeed, it lamentable fact that nowadays, just as as a preacher is old enough to do the efficient work of his life, he is at onc garded as out of the procession, and c quently there is no longer any really effi place for him. After he passes his fif birthday it would be better for him were shot, for this would save him fro ing denominated a fossil or a mere cumb of the ground. Doubtless there are a old men who deserve this fate, but my conviction is that a man can scarce equipped to preach at all until he is f and from that time until he is seventy at least he ought to be more useful tha any other period of his life.

But no matter how this may be, it be apparent to every thinking person is at all acquainted with the facts of case, that for some reason or other our istry in Missouri (as a whole) is extre weak as compared with what it was th years ago. Nor is there much prospec things now stand, that there will be any cided improvement for the future. T certainly cannot be much improvemen our work until we have the right kin men to do it.

This brings me back again to the p from which I started. Men, consecra earnest, unselfish, God-fearing men, is need of our cause in Missouri, as well as need everywhere in this noisy, restless, bulent age. Hence I conclude my pre article by concentrating in some verses w my conception of our need is:

What is our need? The answer's clear—
Strong men of faith, brave men and
With these to lead we shall not fear,
No matter what our foes may do.

What is our need? Not simply mind,
Though this o'er matter surely reigns;
Who looks for truth will always find
True men have hearts as well as brain

What is our need? Not honor great,
Nor brightest culture, wealth or fame,
But consecrated men who hate
All shams, called by whatever name.

What is our need? Not e'en the pen,
So mighty in its power to bless;
Our need not things, but valiant men—
Men who will stand for righteousness.

What is our need? Cathedrals dim,
Where ritual takes the the place of pra
If in such spots we seek for Him
Who saves—we shall not find Him the

What is our need? Once more I say
It is not form or human creeds;
But what the world most needs to-day
Is men, though not of words, but deeds

When God shall give us men like these,
Truth's banner soon will be unfurled,
And proudly wave o'er lands and seas,
The emblem of a conquered world!

USES OF THE RELIGIOUS PAPER.—I.

The Larger Communion.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

Every man is saved or ruined by society. s the tremendous force which holds in its sp human destiny. Christ saw this and posed, accordingly, to save men by bring- them into a new society. So important he regard this to be that he made an rance into this new society a condition of ration. "He that believeth and is bap- d shall be saved." "Repent and be bap- d every one of you . . . for the remis- n of sins." Baptism is an act of entering a new society, heavenly and earthly; it baptism into Christ and into his body. tism for the remission of sins is the en- nce into a new society for the remission sins. The design of baptism, as stated Christ and the apostles, has been a mblingblock to modern theology; but s is because it has been wont to be view- solely in its ethical aspect. This is the t of most modern discussion on the sub- t. But to discuss the design of tism in its ethical light alone is to mit a great oversight. There are tre- ndous reasons beyond this why baptism uld be a condition of salvation. If we ld stand where Christ did and grasp his on of the difficulties of human salvation, would lay to rest this controversy for- r.

f baptism saves us primarily by intro- ing us into a new society, the Lord's per carries forward that salvation by ociation—communion—in that society. at one begins the other advances. They h teach that we must be saved by society, communion; and these two great ordi- nces bring this truth to the front and e it its overmastering emphasis. Of rse, the Lord's Supper is not all of com- nion, but it is its highest act and repre- ts the rest. Men are to be saved by the iety of Christ and his church. They are be saved by communion.

The world recognizes this principle, and lares that "a man is known by the com- y he keeps." It goes further and claims t a man will become like those with om he associates.

> Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
> That to be hated needs but to be seen;
> Yet, seen too oft, familiar with its face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Virtue bodied in society is equally power- . This is the master law of all charac- -forming, and dominates every other. It in the social universe what gravita- n is to the physical; and it is, as it should the mighty principle on which Chris- nity, as a system, is founded. Salvation communion is the broadest Christian neralization. Christianity has been true the tallest science and we have not yet rtaken her wisdom.

But we have to note that something seri- has befallen communion in our century. may regret it, but we cannot help it. nmunion can never be just what it once s except in form. When I was a boy, ng to church was an epoch in our family life. We drove away several miles, heard the sermon, received the fraternal greetings of brethren, and talked it over for a whole week. Our society was in the church. We had no other, except the occasional meeting of a neighbor. The church folded us round in her own arms, and she was our social world. We were plastic in her hand, and she molded us unmarred by rival influences. In the cities and towns the counter attractions were more numerous, but they were for the most part of such a nature—at least a century ago—that Christian morality could exclude them. It is not now as it was then. We live in the midst of the babblings of the entire world. Journalism, re-enforced by the telegraph and the railroad, has revolutionized the conditions of society. By a semi-spiritual link we are brought into daily communication with all nations and all communities. You rise on Sunday morning and take your Sunday paper (do not read it, brethren!) and are attracted by glaring headlines to the latest prize fight or society scandal. Familiarity has dulled your disgust and given you a sensational liking for such things, and you read on with increasing interest. Then you go to church and sit at the Lord's table. You say you have been at communion. You have—at the prize ring! It is certain you have not communed at the Lord's house, for your thoughts have been elsewhere. Even if the character of your reading has not been morally objectionable it has been secular, and your communion has been with the world, not with Christ and his people. Even though you do not read the Sunday paper, you have been in this whole-world society all the week and the social appetite has been more than satisfied, even changed, by the most sensational feeding; so that what the church has to offer seems tame and uninviting, and you receive it not with relish, but attend upon it as a duty. We cannot help this. Let us face the fact as it is. Church communion is not what it once was, and the church can no longer fold us round with all-enveloping arms, as of old. And yet it remains that we must be saved by communion, heavenly and earthly. Modern inventions have vastly weakened the social power of the local church. When I was in Ft. Wayne the Lutheran churches swarmed with their thousands, while the American were sparsely attended. Those German people did not read English and were not whelmed in the seething sea of our popular literature. The church was society to them, not to us. It was with them communion; it was with us duty.

What can be done? We must be saved by society; but if society has lost its savor, wherewithal shall it save us? A meeting should be a meeting, a family reunion, a glad greeting of brothers. It is now too often the simple going to a place where we may hear a religious address. Often not a hand is shaken; still, we hold to old forms and think it has been a meeting, and that we have been at communion. The truth is, that the social power of the local church is no longer a match for the multitudinous rival influences let loose by the press. The secular influence has multiplied a thousandfold and that of the local church, despite all efforts, has vastly weakened. What shall be done? How shall we prevent the complete secularization of our people?

If fifty war-ships should appear before Boston and begin to shell the city, would we be content to answer them with simply our local battery there? Red-winged lightning would fly over land and under seas to all our war-ships, and, swift as the eagle flieth, they would plow the seas for Boston. Giant would meet giant in deadly conflict and we should expect to conquer. This is the duty of the church to-day; the local church must have help. We must meet literature with literature, secular numbers with spiritual numbers. In the phantom war of the papers we must be present in force. The press is the mightiest force of the age. Shall its tremendous energies be all against us? On your table in your family lie the secular magazine and the daily newspaper. Help! Help! But there is no help, unless you put a religious paper there too. The enemy must be met where he attacks, or we are lost. Shall we go to war with bows and arrows while our foe thunders with every modern appliance?

Part of the force of Niagara is harnessed by machinery and, borne along by wires, flashes into light in a thousand homes or groans with the trundle of the wheels of toil; the inspiration of a million brethren is harnessed by the religious press and flashes its light and heat into ten thousand homes. Who made the Cincinnati Convention? Without our religious papers there would have been scarce a hundred there. As I sat in my room during the approaching days, the very atmosphere seemed surcharged with the momentous event. I saw the living rivers flowing to the Queen of cities and heard their songs mingling with the thunder of travel. I looked into their jubilant faces and caught the flashes of their joy. And all this through our papers. Bro. Lamar "got there;" so did I; he got there by the lightning express; I got there by the miracle of the press. He wept with the great convention in its sorrow; so did I. He heard its eloquent speeches; so did I. He received the baptism of its mighty inspiration; so did I. As he came down from that Mount of Transfiguration his face did shine; but some of its glory fell also on me. And this sweet privilege was mine through our papers. Its inspiration, its thought, its fraternity, were borne to me in my humble home. More than this; every paper, as it comes to me fifty-two times a year is itself a convention. I go to my local church and enjoy for a season its fellowship;but when I read my paper, I go to a larger church and enjoy a larger fellowship. What the divine miracle was to the five loaves and two fishes, the religious paper is to fellowship. It multiplies it a thousandfold. There are men whom I have never seen that I know better than I do some of my neighbors. They may not know my name, but I know them, I love them, and they are mine in all most splendid service. I am rich; I own a million brothers, and I can speak with them and they can bless me. The religious paper is the miracle of fellowship. Like the spirits in heaven, we can talk without tongues, and walk without feet and hear each other's thoughts far away. It is a miraculous life.

For the same reason that I go to church, I need to read my religious paper. What one is to the smaller fellowship the other is to the larger; and in this day of in-storming worldliness we sorely need this mighty fellowship. With thousands of souls it is nothing less than a question of life and death. The neighborhood world is gone, and the neighborhood church is no longer sufficient. Would not the apostle who once said, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," now say also, "Drop not the link of your larger fellowship?" It is all one question and in it are the issues of life.

When the children of the Beecher family were all grown and had left home, they used to write what was called "a circular letter." A letter would be started from home and go to Henry, then to Charles, to Catharine, to Hattie, to Tom, each adding a message to all and passing it on, until at last it reached home with its load of love and chit-chat; and the old father would sit down and read and weep and weep and read till it was finished. It was like a family reunion; it was communion. The religious paper is the circular letter of a great brotherhood. Woe to the day when it becomes so stately as to be unsocial!

WHAT CONSTITUTES A CHURCH?

A Baptist View.

S. H. FORD.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST inserted, with courtesy and kind expressions, my protest of Dr. Whitsett's unfounded charge against J. R. Graves and the Baptists of the South. The charge is that he and they held and still hold that there is no salvation outside of a Baptist Church. The editor subjoined this remark:

> After all, however, the important question is whether Southern Baptists hold the doctrine of "succession" in a sense that involves the denial that any other than a Baptist Church is a church of Christ. Even the quotation that Dr. Ford gives from Dr. Graves shows that he regards all other churches as "human societies." We are sorry that Dr. Ford did not disclaim any sympathy with this narrow position, for the fact of his quoting it without such disapproval leaves the impression that he also, and presumably the Baptists for whom he speaks, hold with Dr. Graves on this subject. If this be true there is still room for Dr. Whitsitt's pity.

It is well that we understand each other's position in regard to this—well that the great "movement," called in my young days the "Current Reformation," should, know what the general view of Baptists is in regard to succession, and also what are the essential characteristics of a gospel church.

I hope I shall not be accused of egotism when I presume to know what that position is after sixty or more years of ministry with that people.

In 1854, having delivered an address before an association on this subject, I was invited by the Christian Church, corner of Fourth and Walnut Streets, Louisville, Ky., to deliver it to that congregation. I did, to a crowded house. My theme was "GOSPEL IMMERSIONISTS THROUGH THE DARK AGES." I endeavored to show from authentic historic data that there were those in every age who held to and practiced the immersion of believers only; and that these immersed believers formed themselves into ecclesias, united in faith and fellowship, whenever there was opportunity.

At the close of my address Dr. T. S. Bell, a member of that congregation (one of the best informed men I have ever known), rose in the audience and moved a vote of thanks for the discourse and a request that I put it in permanent form. I did so in a little work entitled "Historic Milestones," now out of print.

Well, the substance of that address may be summed up in these words of mine, which have been copied in several Baptist histories, as expressing what Baptists hold in regard to succession.

"Succession among Baptists is not a linked chain of churches or ministers uninterrupted and traceable at this distant day. The true and defensible doctrine is that baptized believers have existed in every age since John baptized in the Jordan, and have met as baptized congregations in covenant and fellowship where an opportunity permitted."

Let me add that there is a general agreement in this explanation.

Permit me to illustrate it by analogy. A Church of Christ is like a day. There has been a succession of days, and yet each day is a new day and independent of any other day, and as near the sun and as completely a day as the first that ever blessed the earth. So the Scriptures teach us is the character of a church. Such churches, lit up by the Sun of Righteousness, have as I believe existed in every age since Christ, though no records or monuments of their existence may remain. God has never left himself without a witness.

Now as to the denial that "any other than a Baptist Church is a church of Christ," I consider that to be a church of Christ which holds the essential doctrine that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of law, which buries by baptism those seeking admission into membership, those and those only who confess and profess this justifying, saving faith, which has Christ for its Lawgiver, hope and trust, which takes the record in God's Word of the formation of the first churches and ministry as the guide and example of its walk and work, which preaches the gospel, administers the ordinances and seeks to save souls and extend Christ's kingdom at home and abroad, which with liberal and lofty aims strives after holiness. Call it Anabaptist, Katabaptist, Baptist, or Baptized Church, or any other name, if it has these gospel attributes it is a church of Jesus Christ and a lighthouse in the winter of this world's night.

But before I close let me refer to the carefully worded statement of J. B. Briney, in a very recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in which my pr test app Elder Briney says:

"There are but two spiritual kingdor this world, the kingdom of God and kingdom of Satan, and every man mu in one or the other. One actually forg is in the kingdom of God, but into kingdom one cannot go without bapt And again: "All sectarian papers an sectarian pulpits agree that the belie sins are actually pardoned before he is tized." If we believe this statement of Briney, then justification by faith on simply sectarian, and those who hold advocate it are sects and not a chur churches.

He claims to represent the general "n ment" of the Disciples. "If this be tru use Dr. Garrison's words] there is still r for Dr. Whitsitt's pity"—but not fo Southern Baptists.

[We have no objection to Dr. F working in a sermon in reply to our que as to whether Baptists regard any c than Baptist Churches as churches of Cl His reply proper, however, is that he siders "that to be a church of Christ w holds the essential doctrine that a m justified by faith without the deeds of which buries by baptism those seekin mission into membership," etc., to the e the sentence. That takes in the church this Reformation. True, on the questic name the Doctor mentions "Anabap Katabaptist, Baptist, or Baptized Chu as possible names for such a church, bu adds, "or any other name if it has t gospel attributes." We are justified i ferring from that phrase that the n "Church of Christ" or "Christian Chu would not be an insuperable barrie Baptists in recognizing a congregation true church of Christ. The "esse doctrine" with us, however, if we we so designate any one doctrine, would be Messiahship and Divinity of Jesus Nazareth; but all our churches hold tha are "justified by faith without the dee law," as Paul declares. We do not bel however, that any act which faith insp as repentance, confession or baptism, "deed of law," but the "obedience of fa seeking salvation by grace, and no meritorious works. And yet Sout Baptists do not recognize the chur known distinctively as Christian Chur as genuine churches of Christ. Is there cause for pity here?

As to the quotation from Bro. Briney alone is responsible for the form of statement. We are sure, however, tha too, accepts the Pauline doctrine of justi tion by faith. If Dr. Ford thinks he pre too heavily upon baptism, as an unalter condition of remission, to be consistent w the doctrine of justification by faith him address Briney's Monthly, Paris, for explanation, and we assure him he find the editor ready to give it. We sh say the penitent believer is justified by f and that he has the scriptural assur thereof when his faith has reached the cisive point that compels him to surre to Christ in the confessional act of bapt —EDITOR.]

LIBERAL OR CHARITABLE?

FRANK G. TYRRELL.

Nobody wants to be hidebound. There is only one thing meaner than a bigoted sectary, and that is more of them. But there is a constant danger to the broad-minded man, the danger that his tolerance and sympathy with men will lead him into lax views of truth and tolerance of error. Progress is exhilarating, but when the march is sounded we have no right to ask, "Whither?" Not when the command is clearly the voice of God dare we hesitate, but in these days of restless and eager search, when the old is sometimes challenged merely because it is old and the new is frantically accepted merely because it is new, and the commands issue from coteries of men here and there, uninspired and fallible, we are unwise unless we stop to prove them.

Let us go forward. But what if the next step is over a precipice or into a bog? The so-called "liberal" churches illustrate the folly of unthinking and orbitless courses. Some of them in their biginning were the natural and wholesome expressions of dissatisfaction with the policy of marking time; but they drifted, until now they are like rudderless, unpiloted ships, with neither cargo nor destination. In this matter we cannot do better than study the apostles and the Master.

In his work on Horace Bushnell, T. T. Munger quotes the great theologian and preacher, on Christ's attitude, as follows:

"Christ is no liberal, never takes the ground or boasts the distinction of a liberal among his countrymen, because it is not a part of his infirmity, in discovering an error here, to fly to an excess there. His ground is charity, not liberality; and the two are as wide apart in their practical implications as adhering to all truth and being loose in all. Charity holds fast the minutest atoms of truth as precious and divine, offended by even so much as a thought of laxity. Liberality loosens the terms of truth; permitting easily and with careless magnanimity variations from it; consenting as it were in its own sovereignty to overlook or allow them, and subsiding thus, ere long, into a licentious indifference to all truth and a general defect of responsibility in regard to it. Charity extends allowance to men; liberality to falsities themselves. Charity takes the truth to be sacred and immovable; liberality allows it to be marred and maimed at pleasure."

The mental and moral deterioration here indicated is silent and slow. It is not the result of stormy assault, but the insidious undermining of the tides. The believer in Christ's gospel who begins to be "liberal" with false and pernicious gospels will invariably end in the repudiation of the gospel of Christ and the acceptance of the false gospel. This is particularly sad when the apostate is a minister of Christ and a leader of loving people.

To quote again: "How different the manner of Jesus in this respect from that unreverent, feeble laxity that lets the errors be as good as the truths and takes it for a sign of intellectual eminence that one can be floated comfortably in the abysses of liberalism. 'Judge not,' he says in holy charity, 'that ye be not judged;' and again: 'Whosoever shall break or teach men to break one of these least commandments, shall be least in the kingdom of God.'"

[An admirable point, admirably stated. Article just the right length. Here is an example we would like to have a hundred preachers and other readers of good books follow during the coming year. When you have read a helpful, inspiring book, send us one good point it makes in a short article.—EDITOR.]

THE LOVE OF GOD.

W. A. OLDHAM.

"The love of God shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom. 5:5). The phrase "love of God" is ambiguous. It sometimes means God's love for us, sometimes our love for God. Any one who will take the trouble to examine the passages where it occurs will see this. The context generally leaves no doubt as to the meaning in any given passage. What does it mean in the text? It has generally been assumed that it means our love for God. This, because our love for God is more in harmony with the views generally prevalent as to regeneration. Man cannot love God, therefore the Holy Spirit must "shed" that love abroad in his heart. I give the passage in full, that the reader may be able to see the teaching of the context: "And not only so, but let us also rejoice in our tribulations, knowing that the tribulation worketh patience; and patience, probation; and probation, hope; and hope putteth not to shame, because the love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Spirit which was given unto us. For while we were yet weak, in due season Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; for peradventure for the good man some one would even dare to die. But God commendeth his own love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." The context clearly shows that it is God's love for us, not ours for God, which the Holy Spirit sheds abroad in our hearts. In the last verse of the eighth chapter, the phrase "love of God" is so used that there can be no possibility of doubt that it is God's love, not ours. Meyer says: "The divine love effectually present in the heart through the Holy Spirit is to the Christian consciousness of faith the sure pledge that we do not hope in vain and so as to put to shame at last, but that God will on the contrary fulfill our hope. Theou is the genitive of the subject; the love of God to us (so most expositors following Origen, Chrysostom and Luther), not of the object." Meyer here affirms that most expositors hold the same view as himself, though he quotes a number who hold the other view. Alford says: "Not the love of God, i. e., man's love for God, as Theodoret and even Augustine misled by the Latin."

"By 'the love of God' is meant rather God's love to us than ours to God."—Pulpit Commentary. Every homilist in that commentary who expresses himself takes the same view.

"'Because God's love,' 'the love of God, while more literal, is ambiguous; the apostle means the love God has toward us."—Schaff. I believe that most modern expositors hold the same view. Those who have relied upon this passage to prove that the Holy Spirit makes us love God whether we will or not, must hunt some other passage.

A. B. JONES.

A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., an excellent picture of whom appears on the first page of this issue, was born January 5, 1832, near the village of Middletown, Montgomery County, Mo. His father, Sandy E. Jones, and his father's father, John Jones, were Christian preachers, the latter coming into the Reformation from the Baptists. His ancestors came from Wales to Virginia, and later, during the last century, emigrated to Kentucky, whence Sandy E. Jones went to Missouri in 1831 and was widely known as one of the pioneer preachers in the state. He also did evangelistic work in Kentucky and Tennessee. A. B. Jones was educated at Franklin College, near Nashville, Tenn., where he graduated in 1852. Afterward he spent a few years in teaching, from which he glided imperceptibly into the ministry, to which he was ordained by Logan Williams in Lincoln County, Kentucky. His first pastorate after this was the Main Street Church, Lexington, Ky., where the Campbell and Rice debate was held. After a year's service there he returned to his native state, Missouri, and served the churches at Fulton and Liberty, after which he accepted a call to Richmond, Ky., as president of the Female College and pastor of the church. After three years of arduous service there he returned to Liberty, Mo., and preached several years. In 1871 he was again induced to return to Richmond, Ky., to serve in the double capacity of preacher and teacher. After three years more of service there he returned again to Liberty, which he has always considered his home. From 1874 to 1878 he conducted a Female Seminary at that place and preached for the church part of the time in addition. His school building being destroyed by fire, he abandoned the profession of teaching and for the next six years acted in the double capacity of pastor of the Liberty Church and corresponding secretary of the State Missionary Board of Missouri. Our missionary work in the state was in a very chaotic condition, and Bro. Jones' service to our cause during this period of his labor will never be fully known. It served to start us on an upward grade in an era of marvelous growth and activity.

Owing to nervous prostration and other physical infirmities, Bro. Jones was forced to retire from all regular and active labor in 1884, since which time he has attended to his private business, preached occasionally and has written more or less for our religious papers. He is at present temporarily filling the pulpit at Liberty, his permanent home, until the church can secure a pastor. He has been married twice, his present wife being one of the most active C. W. B. M. workers in the state. He has two sons and three daughters living, having buried two children and his first wife. Concerning these losses he writes: "This heart-experience I count among my priceless treasures. Somehow I feel richer for what I have suffered."

We are glad to be able to present our readers so excellent a likeness—taken, however, several years ago—of one who has filled so prominent a place in our work in Missouri and has filled it so honorably.

OUR BUDGET.

—The word "clubs" is now in the air.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST hosts are moving.

—Promises of clubs come in from every direction.

—This is not surprising, for no such offer, for such a paper, has ever been made to the Christian brotherhood before.

—We have decided to make the year 1900 a year for gaining recruits, in preparation for the twentieth century.

—Notices should be sent at once, where clubs are being raised, and names forwarded as fast as secured, so the readers may have the benefit of the paper for the entire year.

—See elsewhere our full-page advertisement of books at half price. No wonder our book trade is quite lively now. It is our purpose to push this department of our business more vigorously in the future than in the past.

—In this number will be found an article on "Some of our Special Needs," by W. T. Moore, which has special interest for the brethren in Missouri. He is talking to us very plainly, and it is due to him to give a candid hearing to what he says.

—Bro. Moore's brief appeal entitled, "To the Brethren in Missouri," in reference to the Bible College enterprise at Columbia, should receive the careful attention of all who are interested in our cause in this state. Deprived, by a painful accident, of the privilege of visiting the brethren in person, he makes this appeal from his sick-chamber to his brethren in the state. Shall it be in vain?

—Last Sunday was collection day for Missouri state work. It is hoped that the day was so observed by the churches throughout the state. But if for any reason your congregation failed to make an offering on last Sunday for this work, see that such offering is made before the close of the month. See, also, Bro. Abbott's appeal in this paper. You know the needs of the state, and this should inspire liberal action. Let this be a record-breaking month in offerings in Missouri for Missouri state work.

Bro. Tyler's humorous reference in his Colorado Letter, this paper, to the transformation of Grant K. Lewis into Grant K. Seivers, in his letter of Jan. 4th, is enjoyable, especially at this end of the line. It is so unusual for a writer to admit that he is fallible in his composition that this instance is worthy of remark. However, the transformation of the name, if not of the man, in this instance, was a feat of the type instead of Bro. Tyler, and due to attitude instead of altitude. The effect of the error, however, was very perceptible upon the chirography of the Colorado Letter.

—The Foreign Society has just received a gift of $1,000 on the Annuity Plan. This makes $7,600 recently received in this way. The Annuity Fund of the Foreign Society now amounts to $70,000. It will be an altogether proper thing to increase this special fund to at least $100,000 this Silver Jubilee Year.

—The church at Niagara Falls was badly damaged by fire at 8:30 Sunday morning, January 7. The interior of the new auditorium is a complete wreck. Loss, nearly $4,000 on building and furnishings. It is hoped the church will suffer little financially after insurance is adjusted. Fire started from furnace, but how cannot be explained. F. W. Norton, who ministers there, intended beginning evangelistic services that day, assisted by Miss Effie Wright, of Ohio. They will be able to begin Sunday, Jan. 14, in the Sunday-school rooms, which were damaged only by smoke and water.

—At an all-day union missionary prayer-meeting, held at the Delmar Avenue Baptist Church, in this city, on last Friday, the hour from two to three in the afternoon was given to the Christian Church sisters, and we learn that they acquitted themselves nobly. The attendance and addresses were commendable. Mrs. D. W. Harrison, of the Mt. Cabanne Church, was chairman of the meeting —The Moffett Church Register, devised by Robert Moffett and published and sold by the Christian Publishing Company, has been reduced in price from $3.00 to $2.00. This register is first-class in every respect. No congregation can afford to be without it. It is so well known that a detailed description of it is unnecessary. It will be sent prapaid on receipt of the price, $2.00.

—The religious discussion related in "The Lost Emigrants" story this week clearly states the danger in the use of human names for designating the people of God. If you have any neighbors troubled about the isms of the day it might be well to lend them your papers to read this story; or better still, get them to join a club of 25 and get it for $1.00 each for a year.

—The C. W. B. M. calendar for 1900 is an elaborate, artistic affair. It is made up of 32 sheets heavy paper, 8x11 in size, printed on both sides and supported by cord at the top in a way convenient for turning. On the first cover page is a beautiful poem on the year 1900 by Persis L. Christian. On each page following the cover are the days of the week named, and days of the month in figures with suggested prayer theme and noted remark or saying from some one for each day. When half through the year the calendar may be turned over for the other half. The calendar is illuminated by frequent beautiful half tone pictures of persons and places associated with the C. W. B. M. work. This beautiful calendar would ornament any home and we should regard it a suggestive token wherever found.

—C. A. Holmgren, evangelist for the Scandinavians of St. Paul, Minneapolis and the Northwest, resides at 1412 Twenty-seventh Ave., North Minneapolis, Minn. Sometime ago we published a statement of the arduous work he was doing and the success attending. Brother Holmgren is endorsed by the state secretary of Minnesota and is doing an important work, but the state board is not able to support him financially. He is, therefore, compelled to appeal to the public for the support he must have to do his work. Anything that any one can give, therefore, may be sent to him at the above address and the same will be duly acknowledged and properly applied. We trust that there may be a liberal response to his appeal, as the work among the Swedes and Norwegians of Minnesota is an important one. They are industrious, intelligent people, and make excellent workers and givers in the church. We speak from experience.

—The National Temperance Almanac and Teetotaler's Yearbook for 1900 is a valuable compendium of facts bearing upon the cause of temperance. It was compiled by J. B. Dunn, D. D., and published by the National Temperance Society and Publication House, 3 and 5 West 18th Street, New York City. While it contains as usual a calendar, it is a calendar with some unique features, as on each day of the year it notes some important historical events in the history of the reform or in the lives of some of its advocates, some text of Scripture or pivotal word or utterance on temperance. Then in addition is a vast amount of tabulated information on the liquor traffic, liquor dealers, liquor receipts, the canteen, license fees, and a summary of the liquor laws of the several states. It is tract size, 72 pages, and may be had for ten cents per copy.

—It seems no uncommon thing, of late, to hea of a church being paid for in full before dedic tion. W. T. Stevenson, of Searing, Ia., writ that an addition to their church has just bee completed at a cost of $995, and dedicated witho an appeal to the public for help. We are glad t hear of such things. They bespeak an ind pendence that will have influence on the worl Bro. Stevenson began a protracted meeting i Searing on the 7th inst.

—In closing out our old year's work and pr paring for our new dress, new plans, etc., etc some of our regular correspondents were crowde out along with a number of other writers. Amon these were the New York and the Texas L tter and it is due to Brother Willis and to Brothe Davis that this explanation be made. But the were in company with W. T. Moore, Bro. Aylsworth the editor of this paper and others whom w could name. There was an unusual rush of urgen copy during the last month of the old year, an the omission of some of our regulars was unavoid able. They will, however, soon be in their plac again.

—And now, here comes Biblica Sacra, a rathe conservative journal, and says of "The Teachings," by Willett and Campbell, that "the literar structure and historical background of the severa books by Mr. Willett is from a conservativ point of view, yet with a full recognition of al legitimate lines of criticism, and is remarkably well balanced and clearly written." By the way the Christian Standard writes an editorial criticism of this book on the supposition that it was issue under the auspices of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses for the use of Endeavorers. Wake up neighbor!

—Two churches in this city, the Central and Mt. Cabanne, raised over $8,000 for all purposes during 1899. They will probably go to $10,000 this year. The collection at the Mt. Cabanne Church last Sunday morning was $196. At the preachers' meeting on Monday all of the churches reported large audiences. Protracted meetings are in progress at the Fourth Church, conducted by E. T. McFarland, pastor, and A. J. Marshall, city evangelist, with good results, and in East St. Louis, Ill., W. A. Meloan, pastor, with good results. Good audiences at the former place and crowded houses at the latter. The pulse in all of the city Churches of Christ in St. Louis is stronger.

—A notable enterprise has been undertaken by the Christian forces of Philadelphia. It is nothing less than a complete census of the city's homes, all to be taken in a single day, Feb. 22nd. The army of Christian workers who will be engaged will come from all churches. There is complete co-operation of denominations and organizations for this purpose—Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Universalists, Salvation Army, Y. M. C. A., W. C. T. U., besides the regular denominations. The city has been divided, and district leaders secured, so that the census will be taken with all the system and accuracy of a government census. The statistics gathered will be placed in the hands of the pastors and Sunday-schools. William T. Ellis is president of the committee, under whose auspices this work is to be done. St. Louis was the first city, to our knowledge, undertaking such a canvass. It began this work some years ago and followed it up for several years, and much good came of it, but for some reason it has been abandoned. Like many other things tried it is necessarily attended with a large per cent. of wasted energy. In St. Louis, however, we did not have the co-operation of the Roman Catholics and others, which greatly neutralized the efficiency of the canvass each year.

—Our readers will be delighted with our Kansas ty Letter. The writer is almost a new name in ir list of correspondents, but by no means unıown as a writer and preacher of ability in the otherhood. We believe his suggestion as to a octrinal propaganda for our larger cities is one ıat we as a people ought to have established ng ago, but it is not too late yet and we should e glad to see it established. It is a kind of gher order of home mission work that is sorely eeded if our plea is to be realized.

—Nothing in romance is of more thrilling interest ıan our true story in our Family Circle this week Alva W. Taylor. It is entitled "A Tale of laska" and should be read by every one who eams of wealth in unseen lands.

—The Worker, Pittsburg, Pa., says that the Alleıeny County Christian Endeavor Union is making worthy effort to secure the International C. E. onvention for Pittsburg in 1901. A strong comittee is to go to London in July to present the aims of Pittsburg to the trustees of the United ociety.

—The Anti-Cigarette League with headquarters Chicago have begun the publication of a paper illed THE BOY. On the first inside page of this ew journal is a fine half tone picture of Col. erriam, president of the Anti-Cigarette League idhis greeting to the public. THE BOY is to be e organ of this League.

—The World's Conference on Missions, to be eld in New York City in April promises to be one the most remarkable meetings of the closing ar of the 19th century. All missionary organiıtions and all mission fields of the globe are to be presented in that conference, the third of its nd in the history of Protestant Christianity. me of the most noteworthy missionaries and vetans of the different mission fields will be present that meeting to contribute information and enusiasm to the conference. It will be a conferıce of vital interest to every Protestant church the land and to every Christian. Do not fail to ep posted on its development and sessions and ntribute what you can to its success. The urch News Association, 111 Fifth Ave., New ork City, will be glad to contribute any informaon desired concerning this conference.

—The difference between the study of the Christ the Gospels and other historic persons is well ated by the Sunday School Times as follows:

The only way to know any historical person is means of historical study, but there is a very portant difference between this Person and all hers, which furnishes a special reason for care- l and exact apprehension of the gospel narraves. When we read the lives of noted men, it is discover what they were; at most, we hope to arn something from their experience, to profit their example. But in studying this life we are eking to know what this Person is, not merely at he was; we ought to be coming, through the spels, into present and real fellowship with him.

"You Never Miss the Water Till the Well Runs Dry."

So it is with health; we never realize its value until it is gone. When old time strength and vigor are wanting it is the best to look at once to the blood. Purify it by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and restored appetite, perfect digestion, steady nerves and even temper will prove that it is bringing back the glow of perfect health.

PERSONAL MENTION.

R. R. Bulgin will assist Bro. Fisher in a meeting at Delta, Iowa, begining Jan. 15.

G. W. Hamilton, of Plad, Mo., has four preaching points, visiting each place once per month.

Eugene Clarkson closed a successful ministry with the Citronville church, and has accepted the church work at Anniston, Ala., beginning Jan. 15, 1900.

D. H. Bays, author of Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, is now located in Greeley, Iowa, and will preach for the church in that city during the present year.

A writer from the city named says: "If 'Anxious Seeker,' Forest Grove, Oregon, will address Lock Box 311, Eminence, Ky., he may receive some helpful suggestions.

The Clarion, edited by Mrs. Jennie Conway in the interest of the Central Church, this city, has about completed its first year, fifty-one numbers having appeared to date. Mrs. Jennie Conway is assistant pastor to Baxter Waters.

T. W. McDonald, of Jefferson, Iowa, reports the anniversary services held there as a grand success. A large audience greeted Chancellor Craig, of Des Moines. The small indebtedness of the church was lifted. The Sunday-school collection that day was $6.70.

J. W. Allen, formerly of Cleveland, O., is now conducting special meetings in Central Church, Spokane, Wash., while visiting his brother, Dr. J. M. Allen, of that city. B. E. Utz is the pastor of that church and editor of The Pastor's Visitor, now in its fourth volume.

Mrs. Little died at her home near Dorchester, Ill., Jan. 9, 1900, in the 26th year of her age. She was baptized snd united with the Christian Church there, Oct. 9, 1887. The funeral discourse was preached by J. E. Masters at the church Jan. 11. A large audience was present.

ONWARD, the organ of the church in North Tonawanda, N. Y., of which C. M. Kreidler is pastor, extols in the most praiseworthy language the lectures delivered there by Dr. H. L. Willett, of Chicago. They were a blessing to those that heard them, in many ways.

Bruce Brown, in an article in the Christian Index of recent date, argues that we shall know each other in heaven. As the article was written in Denver it is reasonable to suppose that the altitude attained caused him to feel better qualified to write on this theme than ever before.

Through the Christian Index we learn that H. O. Breeden, pastor Central Church, Des Moines, Iowa, has the typhoid fever in light form. The brethren are anxious for his recovery, not in Des Moines only, but in other cities, and it is hoped that he will soon be declared convalescent by his physician.

O. D. Maple, of Springfield, Ill., says: "Diptheria in Scottville, Ill., has compelled the authorities to forbid any public meetings. Inasmuch as I preach there on half time, I can give this time—temporarily—to some other church. I can supply or hold a meeting or give some lectures. Can come with or without a singer.

According to the Ledger, Mexico, Mo., the church there, S. D. Dutcher, pastor, has had a prosperous year, just closed. According to annual report the church during 1899, for all purposes, raised $3,294.22 and had 80 additions to its membership, but lost 27. Each of the activities of the church gave a good report.

J. H. Carter, formerly a professor in Christian University, Canton, Mo., is now located in St Louis and attends our preachers' meetings. He expects to work for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in Illinois at first, and will assist such churches in his travels as he may visit or arrange with beforehand. We welcome Prof. Carter to the fellowship of our city and Preachers' Associatlon.

Mrs. Mary Wisdom Grant, who came from St. Louis to deliver the address before the open session of the C. W. B. M., at the Christian Church, Sunday night, Dec. 10th, was entertained during her stay in Columbia at the college. She is a graduate and former teacher of C. C., and in her happy chapel talk to the girls Wecnesday morning touched upon many thoughts of practical value in student life.—Christian Chronicle.

"A Bright Little Boy"

Would be sure of a welcome in almost any home. But what a welcome he would have in a home where the hope of children had been extinguished. What a welcome this particular "bright little boy" did have in such a home, may be judged by the closing paragraph of his mother's letter, given below. There is no room for the whole letter, which recounts a story of fifteen years of suffering and a perfect cure by the use of "three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, two bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and some of the 'Pellets.'"

In many instances childlessness is the result of conditions which are curable. It has often happened that when "Favorite Prescription" has cured a woman of female weakness and the nervous condition attending it, her return to health is signalized by the birth of her first child. "Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"I cannot tell half that Dr. Pierce's medicine has done for me," writes Mrs. T. A. Ragan, of Norris, Watauga Co., N. C. "It will do all that is claimed for it—prevent miscarriage and render childbirth easy. It has given me a bright little boy, and I would not have had him had it not been for your wonderful medicine. I cannot say too much in praise of it; I think it is worth its weight in gold. I thank God for my life, and Dr. Pierce for my health."

"Pleasant Pellets" clear the complexion.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH NEWS is the name of a new local leaflet published in this city in the interest of the church whose name it bears. The First Church has long needed a paper to help the pastor, F. O. Fannon, and his assistant, G. L. Cook, in their work.

According to the annual report of the Central Christain Church in Indianapolis, Ind., Allan B. Philputt, pastor, as it appeared in THE CHURCH LEAFLET, now in its 4th vol., that church had a prosperous voyage throughout 1899. C. H. Hilton has been informed by the church of Christ in Olathe, Kan., that he has been unanimously retained in the pastorate of that church indefinitely. The church also claims to be in the best condition in its history. All of the churches of Olathe are now in a union meeting. Brother Hilton was kindly remembered at Christmas by the church.

January 7th was the second anniversary of J. B. Sweeney's pastorate in Gainseville, Texas, and also annual meeting of the church at which there were interesting reports and fitting services. The church clerk reported 155 additiitions during 1899 with a loss of 31. Each of the activities made a report which was in each instance highly commendable.

The annual report of the Delphi, Ind. Church, as given by the pastor, Wm. Grant Smith, is said by the church to be the best in its history. The outlook for the new year is hopeful. A short meeting will be held at the mission conducted by the church in one of the suburbs.

Clara Hazelrigg, evangelist, began a meeting with the church at Kensington, Kan., Jan. 2nd.

Southern Evangelist, edited by Marion F. Harmon, Atlanta, Ga., has entered upon its fourth volume. It is published weekly in the interest of the cause of Christ in Georgia and South Carolina.

Oscar Kelley will preach for the church at Clinton, Ind., during 1900. Last year he preached for this congregation one-half time, but will give it his entire attention this year.

Churches desiring private and personal commendations for a good evangelist to hold a meet, ing, upon very reasonable terms, can get such information by addressing E. A. Cole, Tipton, Ind. at once.

Daniel Trundell has been unanimously called to Florence, Colorado, by the Church of Christ in that city. He was at Springdale, Ark. He is in the new field and favorably impressed with the surroundings.

S. S. Lappin, evangelist for the fourth Illinois missionary district, now lives in Standford, the headquarters of J. Fred Jones, the state secretary of Illinois.

Barton Riggs reports balance of a debt of $800 of eight years' standing lifted by the church of 100 members in Dallas, Ore. It took heroic action to raise it, but the church is now happy.

R. H. Johnson, the author of "The Lost Emigrants," an interesting story now running in this paper, has removed from Springdale, Ark., to Corpus Christi, Tex.

Leon V. Shaw and Jas. G. Warren, superintendents of the Bible-school of the Church of Christ in Los Angeles, Cal., are making good use of the postal card to make new members and increase their attendance.

C. H. White, of Galesburg, Ill., has been retained by the church for another year at an increased salary and all this, too, is done three months before the expiration of his first year. The debt of $4,000 on the building has also been lifted.

D. Y. Donaldson, who went from Butler, Ky., to Hutchinson, Kan., was royally greeted at the latter place at the home of Dr. H. S. Justice. The services beginning his ministry in Hutchinson were well attended and crowned with four additions.

Wm. C. Thompson, of Plattsburg, Mo., has been retained at each of his three churches for the year 1900. At Grayson, second year, for one-half time. "Log Church," near Plattsburg, third year, one-fourth time, and New Market, Platte county, for third year, one fourth time.

F. C. Aldinger, who served Beulah congregation in this city as supply pastor during the summer and fall, has accepted the work at Cherokee, Ia. His many friends here wish him and his new charge great success. Bro. Aldinger is a young man of promise.

B. B. Tyler is preaching a series of sermons in the First Church, Kansas City, Mo. This is the second time that he has been called to hold a meeting for that church. His method of conducting a protracted meeting, however, is not the ordinary one. His is a school of the prophets rather than an ordinary revival.

A. A. Hibner, of Alma, Ill., reports the continuous arrival of new students at Christian College. The fourth annual commencement of this college, by President Clark Braden, sets forth its efficiency and prospects and the anxiety of the brethren in Southern Illinois for such an institution as they hope to make this one.

Open Letter to I. N. White.

APOSTLE I. N. WHITE.

You are hereby defied to answer, with an unequivocal "yes" or "no," as they can and should be answered, these questions. That will settle the question whether you have backed out.

Will you debate in the meeting house of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," in Independence Missouri, strictly on the identical terms of your blustering braggadocio challenge, read before a large audience, Sunday afternoon, September 17, 1899, in Waller's Grove, near Orchardville, Wayne county, Illinois; and of which you have circulated, as widely as you can hundreds of copies?

If you will not, have you not backed square out of that challenge? Now, Apostle I. N. White, I defy you to answer these questions with an explicit and unequivocal "yes" or "no".

CLARK BRADEN.

Count on me for a loyal supporter of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I shall try to bring the list up to fifty in this congregation.—BEN F. HILL, Nevada, Mo.

I am much pleased with the liberal spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Will try to send you some new subscribers.—J, W. ROGERS, Walton, Ky.

I sincerely believe that the character and spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is doing more toward unifying the religious bodies of this country than all other human agencies combined.—J. M. SPRINGER, Carthage, Ill.

I think sometimes our ministers fail to urge upon the members the necessity of reading one or more of our church papers. I united with the church in 1884. There was nothing said about our papers, as there should always be to new converts.—MATTIE D. DEVER, Hume, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is, as it has always been, one of the most helpful and welcome visitors that comes to my study. I always feel better after I have read it and I wish to add my humble and sincere wishes that its career of usefulness may be greatly increased during the coming years. —ROBERT G. FRANK, Fulton, Mo.

Enclosed find $1.50 to renew my subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for the coming year. We, our family, have been much pleased with the spirit of the paper during the past year. Twice glad that Brother Garrison is still its editor. Pleased that he does not "say naughty things back." God bless him richly. (Num. 6: 24-26.)—L. S. BROWN, Denver, Colo.

I rejoice in the ever-increasing influence of the greatest and best paper of the Disciples—the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, notwithstanding the efforts of some to throttle its usefulness and sectarianize the great Plea of the Disciples of Christ. May it continue to live and weild its mighty influence for unfettered New Testament Christianity. —T. J. RICHARDSON, Havensville, Kansas.

Enclosed you will find order for $1.50 for a renewal of my subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I was brought up under the good influence of that paper, and when I launched into the world to do business for myself, I thought no better counselor and guide could be secured than it. It is to a young man what a rudder is to a ship; it holds him true to his course.—THOMAS E. HIGGINS, Principal of Schools, Rochester, Ill.

I am delighted that Brother Garrison is to go on with the editorial management of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I may not agree with all his opinions, but I believe in him, and we believe in the same Lord and Master. His work is admirable, both in power and spirit. It would have been a calamity to have lost him from his present field. God bless him in his work and keep all our forces facing the common foe.—B. S. DEAN, Hiram, Ohio.

I have taken the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the first. It has grown better each year. Don't think strange that your brethren (some of them) misrepresent, yea, slander you. You remember the beloved and true Christian man, George W. Longan, suffered the same treatment. I am glad that you keep the same sweet Christian spirit that he did. Continue as you have and you will assuredly meet the beloved Longan where there is no misrepresenting.—GEORGE W. DAWSON, Plattsburg, Mo.

I am very much pleased with your paper, especially the position you take with reference to the Holy Spirit. What the churches need more than anything else, is a deeper spirituality. I believe in a heart-religion as well as of the head, the love and Spirit of God ruling and reigning within us, prompting every word and act. May your paper be a means in the hands of God of perfecting his will, is my prayer. Will try and secure you a few new subscribers. Wishing you a happy New Year, I am your brother.—E. C. MURPHY, Lyndon, Kansas.

Yes, indeed, you can have my hearty co-operation in increasing the circulation of the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and thereby pushing forward the great work we have in hand for the coming new century. The special offer to the churches is certainly a practicable measure and one that every church should avail themselves of; but I find so many who have no church paper nor any religious reading in their homes at all, and it is hard work to get them to subscribe. I rejoice to know that Brother Garrison is to remain editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and further let me say that after reading from his pen for more than thirty years, I can say with truth I have never read a line or word from his writings but what I could give them my hearty amen. May God bless him and keep him many years to guide the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on to a yet higher plane, and make it what his ambition so much desires—a more useful servant of Jesus Christ and his Church than it has been in the past.—J. D. NANCE, New Albany, Ind.

While I think our other religious journals have their points of superiority, to my mind none of them can approach the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in literary excellence, breadth of views and spiritual insight into the present day problems and life. It will not hurt any of us to have our shells loosened a little that there may be room to think and open spaces through which truth can enter. Indeed, many of us are like the drunken sailor who got his wooden leg into a hole in the sidewalk and walked round himself all night. We are walking around our intellectual holes so faithfully that the unadulterated truth has small chance of finding its way into our circles. If your "heresy" is never greater than that said to be in your Jubilee Address, it will but bless those of us who are wont to walk around holes. Go on, giving us food for thought, in the "Queen's English," on good paper, in attractive form, and you shall not want for support.—THEO. A. JOHNSON, Wadsworth, Ohio.

Enclosed find draft for $1.50 in payment for my subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for next year. Let me say in what appears to have been a crisis in the history of the paper, that for one I am very much pleased that the policy of the paper is to remain unchanged. The methods of the higher criticism are so commonly understood and used by all thinkers that it seems strange that any one should object to applying them to the Scriptures. On the other hand, the problems raised by this method of studying the Word are many, and are frequently presented to Christian people everywhere for solution. The only open question is, What shall we do with them? for we cannot avoid them. It seems to me that the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST towards such questions is quite satisfactory. For myself, I believe the more truth we learn, the more reverence we will have for the Christ. Only let us "prove all things." While writing on the subject, I would be glad to say that the breadth of the editorials, the helpfulness of the contributed articles, and especially the spiritual tone pervading the whole are all matters for commendation.—JOHN C. RICE, Caldwell, Idaho.

OVER-WORK WEAKENS YOUR KIDNEYS.

Unhealthy Kidneys Makes Impure Blood.

The Prompt Way to Cure Yourself when Symptoms Show That Your Kidneys are out of Order.

The way to be well is to pay attention to your kidneys.

They are the most important organs of the body —the blood filters.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys strain or filter out the impurities in the blood—that is their work.

Purifying your blood is not a question of taking a laxative or physic.

Does your blood run through your bowels?

What the bowel-cleaner does is to throw out the poisons confined in your bowels ready for absorption into your blood, but the poisons which are already in your blood, causing your present sickness, it leaves there.

There is no other way of purifying your blood except by means of your kidneys.

That is why bowel-cleaners fail to do their work—they fail to help the kidneys.

When you are sick, then, no matter what you think the name of your disease is, the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney Remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Dr. Kilmer, the eminent physician and specialist, has attained a far-famed reputation through the discovery and marvelous success of Swamp-Root in purifying the blood, and thereby curing chronic and dangerous diseases, caused by sick kidneys, of which some of the symptoms are given below.

Pain or dull ache in back or head, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, dizziness, irregular heart, sleeplessness, sallow complexion, dropsy, irritability, loss of ambition, obliged to pass water often during the day, and to get up many times at night, and all forms of kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghampton, N. Y.

To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be sent free by mail, prepaid, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book about Health, Diet and Disease as Related to Your Kidneys. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and wowen cured.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a sample bottle and to kindly mentian the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Kansas City Letter.

It is with hesitancy the writer accepts the editorial invitation to furnish the hitherto ever-welcome and newsy Kansas City Letter—a hesitancy accentuated by the recognized inability to fill the place worthily occupied by W. F. Richardson, whose facile pen has been so eagerly followed by the great CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. Better, then, at the very outset, to frankly confess the loss, to state that this scribe has not the hardihood to attempt to occupy the large room filled by his predecessor, and will try only to fill his own place as best he can.

And, first, a greeting warm to all and the word of fellowship and brotherliness. May the "Happy New Year" voices be singing in our hearts through all these months that follow; may our new resolutions come to no untimely end; may our new-found aspirations know no broken wings, and may the work to which we set ourselves be done. This forever notable year should be notable to all our churches, to all our homes, to all our lives a better, sweeter, more fruitful year than all the traveled past. We ought to be further along the way to the city without a temple, in the beauty of white lives, before this year be done. It was good at the beginning day to take a fresh start in life; it is better to hold to these aims and high endeavors through the year whose threshold we are crossing and with the grip that knows no relaxing.

Our churches are all entering upon a vigorous work. B. B. Tyler is to preach the gospel at the First Church throughout all the month of January. The West Side Church, under the leadership of B. M. Easter, is reaching the young people in its folds as never before. The Springfield Ave. Church is contemplating a removal to a more eligible site and its pastor, T. P. Haley, is talking of the future with all the ardor of youth and forwarding the work by magnificent preaching. The South Side Church is happy in the memory of its great meeting, held by J. V. Coombs, and in the expected arrival of its new pastor, O. P. Shrout. The Forest Ave. Church is busy, as usual, and Pastor Kokendoffer, is as ever, an active and beloved pastor. The Westport Church is pastorless, but has its eye on "the right man," of course. The Sixth and Prospect Church has recently paid off all its debts and begins the new year without financial encumbrance.

If Brother Dungan will not call the writer a heretic he would venture to say that he has had an "inspiration." At least it looks like one. It is this: Set apart three or four of our most gifted men to a doctrinal propaganda in our larger towns and cities. The "inspiration," though, to be quite frank, is secondhand. It was suggested by the Christian Scientists. These vigorous champions of an unblest nostrum can teach us many things we ought to know, and in some ways we can imitate them to our profit. How wisdom is shown by them in their creation of a lecture bureau, which sends out the strongest representatives of this ism to towns and cities where, in the best and largest halls obtainable, with the enthusiastic co-operation of the local Eddyites, they expound their peculiar doctrines. This brings their plea to the front. The newspapers take it up. The advertising is on the largest scale. The very magnitude of the preparation makes it respectable and commanding. Suppose that men, a half dozen say, like D. R. Dungan, B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power—the list could be extended indefinitely—were set apart to this work, should visit our towns and cities to deliver a series of addresses on "Our Plea," and with largest preparation made by our local forces: would not the public be reached thereby as it is not reached by our present methods? At best our work now is local. Our churches have to do only with a restricted field. Our towns and cities as wholes are hardly aware of our presence, certainly do not know of us as they know of the fantastical creations of the Boston prophetess. Is it not a sad comment on our present methods that the world at large knows more about the distinctive teachings of Mrs. Eddy than of the Christian Church? Either we have a distinctive and God-given plea, which the world needs sorely in its present great unrest, or we have not. If the latter end of the sentence is taken, then let us have done forever with our "doctrinal" preaching and bid the "fathers" a long farewell; but if the former, let us bestir ourselves as never before to get this plea before the world. And might not this propaganda serve us in this the hour of crisis and of opportunity?

The writer had recently the pleasure of a day's outing down in Oklahoma, and found the Christian ministers of the territory assembled at Chandler, and over head in institute work. The discussions of living, present-day questions was pronounced most intelligent and helpful, and reflected great credit upon the participants. Probably the most animated discussoin was on Mr. Markham's famous poem, "The Man With the Hoe." The opinion prevailed that, although of high merit as a piece of literature, it is inexcusably pessimistic in tone and misrepresents the present situation. This seems to be an eminently sane conclusion. It is a little queer to see a man go into hysterics at the sight of a man at the end of a hoe handle. We respect Mr. Markham's evident earnestness and sympathy with the toilers, but we can but deplore his labor-phobia. It is good to toil. "Bless God for work," said the great Carlyle. Sings Mrs. Browning:

> "God be thanked that the dead have left, too, > Something undone for the living to do."

The Christ wrought with his own hands. Work is salvational. Why this rain of bitter and passionate curses on toil? Mr. Markham's is a distempered vision. His work is morbid. His "Wail of the Wandering Dead" is even more saddening and unforgettable than his "The Man With the Hoe." The Californian has lilt to his song, and it goes far, but it neither invigorates nor cheers. These lines are wondrous delicate in their chiseled grace, but they forward no man on his way. It is funeral music the new bard gives us, and of the highest order, only, only—we want to live—and do.

Illinois Notes.

The church at Sidney, J. F. Hollingsworth, minister, is building a new chapel.

The Springfield Church sends another handsome gift through the treasurer, B. R. Hieronymus, and also a kind word of assurance for the future. In order to do a creditable work it is necessary that other churches follow this example. Just when we should go forward we are under necessity of retrenchment from lack of means. Our opportunity is in the winter months, but indifference will cut short our ability to take a proper advantage of it. Last year additions made by our board cost $2.17, while the additions made by the second largest body in the state were made at an expense of $52.66, and yet only one-fourth of our churches and one-third of the ministry give us any brotherly support. Which side are you on?

The Bureau County rally at Princeton was well attended and full of inspiration, and the brethren will organize a church at Tampico. Since the coming of J. G. Waggoner to Princeton the brethren feel sure of victory. Reports from country churches showed a gain of twenty per cent. in conversions.

Calling at Kankakee I found the pastor, W. D. Deweese, just out to service the first time since taking typhoid fever. Sickness and the loss of the little one has lain heavily upon him and his family, but they are having the victory of faith. The church is happy in its new house.

How Every Reader Of This Paper Can Make Money.

For several months I have noticed advertisements in different religious papers describing an improved Dish Washer. As I had grown so tired of washing the dishes the old way, I sent for information to Iron City Dish Washer Co., 168 Station A., Pittsburg, Pa., regarding their Washer. They sent me one and I have found it to do just as they said it would. It washes and dries the dishes in less than one-half the time it usually takes, and I never have to put my hands in the greasy dish water. My little girl, aged 8 years, thinks it lots of fun to wash the dishes, and she can do it as well as myself. Several of my neighbors came in to see it work, and they all wanted one. I wrote the company and they allowed me a commission. They also wrote and told me how to become their agent. I am now making $10 a week and still attend to my housework. The Dish Washer sells everywhere. I show it and make the work easy. I understand they still want a few good agents, and any one desiring to make money easy should write them.

Chicago Letter.

The National Building Trades Council and the ederation of Labor both stand for woman suf-:age. At its convention in Milwaukee, on Jan. th, the former passed a resolution, sent in by usan B. Anthony, calling upon Congress "to omit he word 'male' from the suffrage clause of the onstitutions to be framed for" the new depend-ncies. The argument that turned the tide in avor of the resolutions was made by Delegate pohn, of Washington, who declared that women re crowding the men in many trades, and that if hey organized, and could back their organization ith the ballott, they could get higher wages; hus the cause of labor would be helped in addi-ion to the benefit derived by the women them-elves. Is this a trace of selfishness in an act of allantry?

Last summer I clipped the following lines from Chicago paper: "Only 5,000 bushels of corn ere delivered in St. Louis yesterday on July con-racts, but the amount of 'wrung-out' or settled ontracts was 180,000 bushels." That is, one-hirty-sixth of the business of the eminently re-pectable board of trade was legitimate, and hirty-five thirty-sixths was gambling, pure and imple. The contracts call for actual delivery of he produce; but this is about the usual propor-ion of "wind" to grain. In this city the con-ervative element triumphed in the recent elec-ion of members of the Exchange. There is talk f reform; honest, legitimate traders should see hat the talk does not outweigh the reality, as 'wind" outweighs wheat.

The Butchers' and Retail Clerks' Association of he Stockyards neighborhood in Chicago started a novement in favor of Sunday closing the first of he year, which is becoming epidemic. On Jan. th not a business house in the eastern portion of hat district was open. The district, bounded by 9th, 47th, Halstead and State Streets, is admitted o be one of the hardest in the city to move on uch a question. The promoters of the good vork, in making their round of inspection last unday, found one recalcitrant. They stationed ickets on each street leading to his store and very passer-by was handed a printed copy of the esolutions for Sunday closing and requested not o purchase. The merchant soon closed up and otified the committee that he would not open gain on Sunday. These efforts are being sup-orted by labor organizations, ministers and hurch members. In addressing a mass meeting t the University Social Settlement, Alderman ussell said he had three stores, two being in the losed district, and testified that his customers ere notified during the week of the intended losing; as a consequence the sale on Saturday qualed the combined business of an average aturday and Sunday. He challenged any dealer o show that Sunday closing would diminish re-eipts. We ought to be good if it costs nothing!

A bureau has been formed in this enterprising ity to furnish every town in the valley Sunday ermons in theatre buildings and halls down town, f an "independent" character. The papers give he names of H. W. Thomas, of the People's hurch — McVicker's Theatre — Jenkin Lloyd ones, F. W. Gunsaulus and Emil G. Hirsch, the atter a Jewish rabbi, as promoters of the under-aking. It remains to be seen whether the cities f the surrounding country are hungering and hirsting for such colorlesss preaching. In the pinion of your scribe, they already have enough f their own, without importing any from Chicago.

On January 1st the preachers or our churches gave a farewell luncheon to Bruce Brown at the almer House. Bro. Brown leaves the West Side hurch, after more than two years of very efficient ervice, to stand under the shade of Pike's Peak. everal bright speeches were made, notably the one by Mrs. J. H. O. Smith on "Chicago Church-es." A resolution of high esteem and earnest good wishes was unanimously adopted. The Englewood Church gave a reception to its new pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Kindred, Jan. 4th. We believe Bro. Kindred has a mes-sage and a program, and that this fine church will co-operate with him in a vigorous forward movement.

The five weeks of noonday evangelistic meet-ings at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, 157 La Salle Street, conducted by the Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Christians, closed with a splendid service Jan. 5th. The denominations took charge week about. The total attendance for 20 days was 8,356; average per day, 418. Fifty-eight men expressed a desire to live the Christian life. The secretary reported that several of these were personally dealt with and professed conversion. None were reported as having joined a church.

The Week of Prayer was observed by noonday services at the same place, each of the denomina-tions named above taking one day. The First Church held meetings every night during this week. The foreclosure suit against the old Central is making progress slowly. W. B. Taylor is still with his wife at Asheville, N. C., his pulpit being supplied by different men in turn.

To the Brethren of Missouri.

Will my brethren of this great state hear me with patience while I speak to them from my sick room? I had planned an active personal canvass for the Bible College at Columbia, during which I hoped to complete the endowment fund, so that the success of the enterprise could be absolutely assured. But while man proposes, God disposes. Four weeks ago last Sunday evening, on my return from church, I fell over an obstruction on the sidewalk and broke my leg, while at the same time the ligaments of my ankle were ruptured. Since then I have been confined to my bed most of the time and to my room all the time, and if my physi-cian is to be trusted the prospect is not very flat-tering for my speedy appearance upon the streets again. It now looks as if I shall be compelled to stop at home for a considerable period.

Now this makes the Bible College problem very serious. But I have been thinking about the mat-ter, and I have reached certain conclusions, which ought to be correct, whether they are or not. I have said to myself, "Why is it necessary to visit members of the Church of Christ and plead with them to provide liberally for such a noble work as that of the Bible College? Will they not be glad to spontaneously, without anything more than a mere prompting, rally to its support?" Any way, I have decided to write this brief address to my brethren, asking them to lay this matter before the Lord and upon their own consciences, and then decide what they will do, and send me an intima-tion of their willingness to help, and I will then furnish them with all the necessary papers and in-formation with respect to the matter.

Now, brethren, do not treat this appeal as an idle thing. The result of it may decide the des-tiny of the Bible College. If there is not a liberal response it will be evident that you do not want a Bible College; that is, you do not want it enough to contribute to its support. As I cannot see you personally, I beg you to hear and heed this earnest appeal for the greatest educational enterprise which the Disciples of Missouri have yet under-taken. Faithfully, in the Master's service,

"The Case of Brigham H. Roberts."

Such is the caption under which Bro. Vernon J. Rose writes for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Dec. 21, 1899. The editor's reply is good, and perhaps is all that ought to be said upon this subject, but there are a few things I would like to say for the benefit of those who read your excellent paper. A residence of over seven years in Salt Lake City, and a careful study of the whole Mormon question, enables me to speak with some certainty as to the effect the seating or unseating of Mr. Roberts may have upon Utah and other Western states.

Two years ago Judge King, who was at the time representing Congress, said in a speech made in New York City, that Mormonism challenged the orthodox churches of our day. I believe this is true, and I believe that the election of Mr. Roberts to Congsess is a part of this challenge. Judge King might just as well have represented Utah another term in Congress. He was able, a Mormon, a Democrat, but not a polygamist. But he did not make the race. He tried for the Senate, but failed of election, with George Q. Cannon, a polygamist and a Republican, as his strongest competitor. No one was elected to the Senate last winter. Cannon became a candidate for the Senate after Roberts' election to Congress had stirred up the people all over the United States. This was a part of the challenge referred to by Judge King.

Mrs. Dr. Mattie Hughes Cannon, State Senator and the fourth plural wife of Angus M. Cannon, said last winter, in an interview, that they would learn from the Roberts case what Utah was to expect from Congress in regard to polygamy. There is no room for doubting that the ground upon which he was selected for Congress was because he is the ablest advocate of polygamy in the entire Mormon Church. Yet, this man Roberts accepted the amnesty of President Harrison upon the promise of the Mormon Church authorities that any one pardoned at that time would abandon polygamy. He has by continuing to live in polygamy violated that pledge. I, for one, do not believe such a man worthy of a seat in Congress.

Mr. Roberts said the other day in Congress, that "polygamy is dead." It is just as dead (and no more so) as it was ten years ago. It is being practiced by every man who has for years been the husband of more than one wife. The Mormons assert that no new wives have been taken since 1890. But no Gentile knows that such is the truth, from the fact that the record of all plural marriages are kept in the Temples, where such marriages take place; and as Gentiles are not allowed in these buildings no one can tell whether these statements are true or false. It is the opinion of many of the best informed men of Utah that if Mr. Roberts is seated polygamy will be reinstated, and that the Mormons will openly advocate and practice it. So that it will make a great deal of difference as to whether he is seated. If your readers could see for themselves the blighting effect of polygamy upon the morals of the people who practice it, or come from the families of polygamists, I am sure they would say that for Utah's sake Congress ought to punish this practice as a crime. That may necessitate the enactment of a constitutional amendment; but it is worth while doing it for the sake of the Mormon people themselves. Not only would it affect Utah, but Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and Nevada are all interested in this issue. A very considerable portion of America is, therefore, directly interested in this case; for while these states and territories are not to-day thickly populated, it will only be a few years until we shall see them teeming with people as do now the states further east. It appears to me to be very American and patriotic for Congress to settle this question at this particular time.

When any state shall elect a man who has outraged the moral sense of the nation after their attention has been called to his criminal record I believe Congress will do with such an one just what it will do with the Roberts case. It may be that there are men in Congress to-day who are just as bad as Mr. Roberts, but they have not had specific crimes charged and proven against them; and until such is the case it is not proper for us to assume that Congress has taken its stand against Mr. Roberts upon the ground that he is a Mormon. It has not disturbed other Mormons who have been elected to Congress and the United States Senate, nor is it at all likely that it will ever do so. But this action on the part of Congress—if Roberts is rejected—will serve notice upon Utah that it will be useless for her to send her criminal sons to Congress, as the American people will not tolerate this crime against the home.

Truly yours,

B. F. CLAY.

Colorado Letter.

Three times the name Grank K. Seivers is found in the "Colorado Letter" of Jan. 4. It will be a surprise to the Highlands Church, in Denver, to learn that the name of their late pastor was Seivers. It will be a surprise to the congregation of Disciples in Pomona to receive information that the name of their new pastor is Seivers. When he left the Highlands congregation it then thought that his name was Lewis—Grant K. Lewis. The the same man went to Pasadena, California, as Lewis—Grant K. Lewis. The writer of the "Colorado Letter" believs now that this is his true name. The young man who served the Highlands congregation, in the pastoral office, and who is now in Pomona, as an undershepard of the Christian Church, is Grant K. Lewis.

How did this singular transformation in his name take place? I did it! I cannot tell a lie!! I did it! This confession is made without constraint. It is full, frank, free. I called Grant K. Lewis, Grant K. Seivers. I beg pardon. Forgive me this one time. I will not do so again!!!

How do I account for it? To account for it is not difficult. It is the altitude of Colorado! This fact—the altitude—accounts for all the strange things in the state. Altitude is the talismanic word.

Have you seen the Independent (New York) of Jan. 4? It is the annual issue devoted to the work and progress of the churches. It is an interesting number.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, writing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says:

The Missionary Society got the largest income in its history—upward of $1,375,000; the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society had a similar notable increase; also the Church Extension Society. The financial condition of the church is very satisfactory. The Twentieth Century Thaksgiving Fund, of "$20,000,000," will be raised long before the expiration of the three years' limit.

Here now is a curious fact. In the midst of this abounding financial prosperity the church is hardly holding its own in the way of numbers. Here is what Dr. Carroll says on this point:

In the midst of its financial and general prosperity the church is called to consider the indubitable and uncomfortable fact that there is not only no increase in the membership, but an actual loss, at least for the first half of the year. A year ago attention was directed to the small increase, too small to give occasion to any feeling but regret, if not dismay. There was but little comfort in the thought that other denominations had just a little cause for satisfaction. For some unexplained reason the year, 1899, was a poor one.

E. E. Hoss, D. D., LL. D., writing of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, says:

Stomach Troubles

arise from many causes and often without any apparent reason. The stomach is a delicate and wonderfully important machine in the human factory, and needs the greatest care. The one cure that never fails in all stomach ailments, and that should be employed at the first symptom of digestive derangement is discovered by an old Swiss-German physician and in use over 100 years, though not extensively advertised. It regulates and strengthens the digestive organs while it purifies the blood and invigorates the system. It seldom fails to cure all diseases caused by impoverished or impure blood or from disordered stomach.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer

—The olden time remedy

No Drug-Store Medicine; is sold only by regular Vitalizer agents.

Persons living where there are no agents for Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer can, by sending $2.00, obtain twelve 35-cent trial bottles direct from the proprietor. This offer can be obtained only once by the same person.

The increase in the membership has been very small, the considerable advances in some of the conferences being offset by a retrograde in the other."

Dr. Dunning, editor of the Congregationalist, says of his denomination:

The latest statistics are for the year 1898. They show that the denomination is making little progress temporarily, and even in some respects is retrograding. The church numbers 628,234. The additions by confession, 25,189, were the smallest since 1885, though the number is larger than is recorded in any year previous to that one. The net gain, 2,370, was the largest since 1882. The membership of the Christian Endeavor Societies, 203,215, is less by 13,728 than in the previous year. The benevolent contributions, $1,892,919, fell off $552,405, and are the smallest since 1886. The net gain of churches was only six, less than in any year but one since statistics of the denomination have been gathered.

Dr. H. K. Carroll says:

The net gain of most of the churches, even the Roman Catholics, approached, in 1899, the vanishing point. They did little more than hold their own.

Statistics printed in this issue of the Independent show a loss 3,101 Roman Catholic Churches during the year. There must be an error at this point.

The sectarian will find comfort in the facts here stated, if his label happens not to be "Methodist," or "Congregationalist," or "Roman Catholic"—the Christian will be suprised, if not grieved, since with all their errors in doctrine and in practice these great denominations are tremendous forces in behalf of righteousness. Their comparative failure means a lowering, by so much, of the moral standard in our country.

Upon the whole the church population is gaining upon the aggregate population of the country.

The editor says:

Even should there prove to be as great a gain in population in this decade as in the last, it would not exceed twenty per cent., and still the churches would be fourteen per cent. ahead.

The Twentieth Century at Beanville.

Beanville, mo., jan. the 10, 1900.

The wunce happy and plezzent villidge ov Beanville iz rent with strife and dissenshun. Peese and quite haz giv way to diskord and termoil. Nabers wich haz lived together soshybel and harmonyus fer yeres and yeres iz not now on speekin terms with eech uther. Beanville iz divided into 2 fackshuns. The hole trubble iz over the queschun: When does the 20th senchury begin? The discushun ov this matter haz caused moar hard feelins and moar ginral trubbel than enny protracktid meetin ever held in the town.

The trubbel begun wun day in Desember. A number ov the leedin sittyzens ov Beanville wuz gatherd in the post offis, waitin fer the afternoon male to be distribbytid. Evvryboddy wuz talkin soshybel and frendly, when Kernel Bates chansed to remark to Jedge Jacksun that what with the Bore war in south Africky and the fite in the Fillypeens and the way Rushy and Jappan wuz spittin at eech uther, the nineteenth senchury wuz goin out rather tempeschus. Jedge Jacksun smiled at theze werds, and sez he, "Yoor a littel mite mixt on yore dates, Kernel," he sez. "The 19th senchury iz not goin out fer sumthing over twelve munths yet," he sez. "Nonsents," sez Kernel Bates, "we are now in the clozin daze ov the senchury," he sez, "wich will cloze presicely at mid-nite ov desember therty-ferst, ateen-ninety-nine," he sez. "Ime serprized at heerin you talk sich loonasy," sez the Jedge, hiz voise gettin louder and louder. "Dont you know thare iz 100 sents in a doller?" he sez. "That's got nuthin to do with it," sez the Kernel, viggerusly. "Enny fool awt to see that when you say 'nineteen-hundred,' you are beginnin a new hundred, or a new senchury," he sez.

By this time the crowd in the post offiis was gettin interested, and cum up close round the Jedge and the Kernel, to lissen to the argymint.

"I spoze," yelled the Jedge, "that if you owed me a doller and wuz payin me in coppers, you wood count out ninety-nine and want me to take 'em az a doller."

"Dont talk like a drivvlin idyit," howled the Kernel, waivin hiz arms in the air. "Coppers and dollers haz nuthin whatevver to do with it," he sez. "Cant you see that at the end ov the yere 1 they said 'wun' and then begun datin their letters 'jan 1, A D 1'?"

"How long sinse they let you luce from the Fultun assylum," sneered Jedge Jacksun. "Lissen a minnit," he sez. "The ferst yere of the Chrischun era wuz the yere 1, wuzzent it?"

"No, it wuzzent," he anserd. "The yere 1 begun when wun yere had past, wich maid the seckund yere the yere 1."

"Sich idyotick bosh I nevver herd," sez the Jedge. "If you wuz owin me 2 dollers, and by sum meerakel took a noshun to pay me, I spoze you wood hand me a doller and say it wuz 0; hand me anuther and say it wuz 1; hand me a therd doller and say that maid the 2 dollers."

"I hait to talk to sich a block-hed," sez the Kernel, "but it iz my dooty to enliten yore darkened intelleck," he sez. "When a man iz just over 19 yeres old, he iz in hiz twentieth yere, aint he?" he scz.

"What's that got to do with the queschun," sez Jedge Jacksun."

"A hole lot," sez Kernel Bates. "Then when nineteen hundred yeres hav past the twentieth senchury begins, dont it?"

"Ov course," sez the Jedge, "but," he sez, shakin hiz finger in the fase ov the Kurnel, "nineteen hundred yeres will not be past until mid-nite ov Desember therty-ferst, 1900."

"Idyot."

"Lunk-head."

"Fool."

"Igneramus."

Muchuel frends sepperated them befoar enny seeryus dammage wuz dun, and evryboddy spozed that wood be the end ov it. After the Jedge and the Kernel had left the post offis, thoze who were left remarked how fulish it wuz fer grone men to fuss and fite like children over a diffrunce ov opinyun. "They will both be ashaimed ov themselves," sez Josh Whitney, "when they git kooled oph."

"DON'T TALK LIKE A DRIVVLIN IDYIT," HOWLED THE KERNEL.

"I shood think they wood," anserd Si Andrews, "speshully Kernel Bates. I wu zserprized," he sez, "to here a man like him talkin sich nonsents," he sez.

"I gess you meen that Jedge Jacksun was talkin noncents," replied Josh. "This here idee that the new senchury dont begin till 1901 iz the foolishest thing I evver heard," he sez.

"Are you crazy?" hollered Si. "Ennyboddy but a non compus mentus knows that the new senchury will begin at mid-nite ov Desember 31, 1900."

Pritty sune their frends was sepperatin Josh and Si, who wuz nabers and had alwaze got on nisely together. Befoar the crowd dispersed thare had to be moar sepperatin dun. That nite at the debatin sosiety thare wuz moar trubbel. The ladys sewin sosiety ov the methydist cherch got to argyin the matter, and most ov the members went home in teers, breethin forth thretnin and slawter.

So it haz bin evver sinse. When the papers annownsed that Emprer William, ov Jermenny, had sellybrated the new senchury, wun fackshun sed that settled the matter in their faver, while the other fackshun sed they awlwaze had regarded the Emprer az week-minded. Wun man wood prodoos a copy ov the Checawgo Times Herald to pruve that the new senchury had begun, and a man on the uther side wood pull out a coppy ov the Saint Luey Globe Demmokrat to prove that it haddent.

I bleeve the peeple are gettin sick ov fussin, and am in hoaps that the subjeck will grajuelly be dropt. But I trembul to think ov the probabel trubbel that iz in stoar for us at the cloze ov the prezzent yere.

Persunelly, I hav taken no part in the diskushun. It seems to me sich a wun-sided queschun that thare iz nuthin to argu about. I look at it this way: In theery, at leest, we recken time from the berth ov Christ. Akkordin to this theery, the berth of Christ wuz january 1, A D 1. The ferst yere ov our era wuz not dun until 12 munths from that time, wich wuz Desember 31, A D 1. In the saim manner, the ferst deckade did not cloze till Desember 31, A D 10, and the ferst senchury wuz not compleetid until Desember 31, A D 100. It follers, ov corse, that the ninteenth senchury will not cloze till Desember 31, 1900. Thare iz lots ov things wich can be sed, wich will puzzel sum peepel and get them mixt up on this matter, but if a man will jest awlwaze bare in mind the undenyabel fact that the ferst yere wuz the yere A D 1, he iz awl rite. My boy Zeke, who haz bin to kolledge, sez that "A D" is short for "Anno domini," a Lattin fraze wich meens "in the yere ov our Lord." Tharefoar "A D 1900" meens "in the nineteen hundredth yere ov our Lord." It duzzent meen that nineteen hundred yeres have past sinse Christ wuz born.

I am pritty ferm sot in the noshun that I am rite on this matter, but I dont know that it will hert me enny if uther folks think differunt, and so I havvent bin makin trubbel by talkin mutch on the subjeck. It duz beet awl how sum folks cant talk about enny trifflin littel thing for 2 minnits without bein reddy to fite, and genrelly the moar trifflin the matter bein argued, the quicker they want to fite. Wat fules these mortels be, ennyhow.

EGGS AND GRAPE-NUTS.

"I would like to give you my experience since using Grape-Nuts ten weeks. I began weighing 175 pounds with a big stomach owing to improper digestion.

I now weigh 199 pounds, and the flesh is on the right places, i. e., the entire muscular anatomy.

Before trying Grape-Nuts I looked upon the food as a Yankee dodge to fleece the public. (I am Scotch.) I am glad to admit my mistake. I stir two raw eggs in one-half cup Grape-Nuts, sugar to taste, beat all together two minutes, add boiling water one-half cup; let stand two minutes, and you have a dish that would satisfy the Prince of Wales for once in his life anyhow. I have a delicate sister in Edinburgh, Scotland, who wants Grape Nuts. Can she get them there?" John W. Hunter, Oakland, California.

New York Letter.

New York has just lost by death two of the best men in the Roman Catholic priesthood in the country in the persons of Father Malone, of Brooklyn, and Father McGlynn, of Newberg. The Rev. Sylvester Malone was an Irishman by birth, and was trained in his native country by a Protestant teacher, whose influence had much to do in the shaping of his career and maturing of his character. He always stood for goodness, and freedom, and merit in whomsoever found. Such was his salutary influence in his Brooklyn parish that on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, a jubilee demonstration was held in his honor in the Academy of Music in which strong men in all the walks of life gladly did him honor. He was a strong and independent thinker, and a fearless advocate of moral, political and educational reforms. Six years ago he was elected by the Legislature a Regent of the State University and has filled the position with distinguished ability.

The Rev.Dr.Edward McGlynn had not only a state but a national and international reputation as a strong and a good man. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1866. After serving as military chaplain in the Central Park Hospital during the Civil War, he became priest of St. Stephen's in 28th St., New York, where his eloquence, heartiness and quick sympathy with the people won their warmest affection. Dr. McGlynn's unwillingness to establish a parochial school in connection with his church, and his claim that the public schools were safe for the children of Roman Catholics, brought him into disfavor with the authorities of his church in New York. For advocating this policy he was accused both in New York and Rome of opposing Catholic education, but he lived to see his views virtually approved by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of his church.

When Henry George made the race for Mayor in 1886, on the United Labor ticket the platform of which party contained a clause favoring the abolition of taxes upon industry and its products, and other radical measures, Dr. McGlynn heartily endorsed the proposed reform. Having been advertised to speak upon these measures at the Chickering Hall, Archbishop Corrigan wrote instructing him not do so. Dr. McGlynn replied that as he had been publicly announced to speak, and as the questions appealed to his conscience and reason, he felt he must do so; he added, however, that if taking part in the movemnnt was distasteful to the Archbishop he would not speak in other similar meetings. He spoke at Chickering Hall and for it was suspended from his priestly office ten days. During his suspension the election took place and he drove about with Mr. George in a carriage visiting polling-places.

This angered the Archbishop so that he deposed him entirely and laid his case before the Propaganda at Rome, which tribunal decided that he must go to Rome to stand trial. He received a letter ordering him to recant the doctrines he had preached and proceed at once to Rome. To the astonishment of all good Catholics, this he refused to do, saying his conscience would not allow him to recant, and further he did not consider himself under any moral or ecclesiastical obligations to go to Rome or anywhere else at the beck and call of any one. As a proof of his faithfulness he showed that he had built up the largest Roman Catholic parish in the world, and that his people loved him with the tenderest affection. He was excommunicated, however, in July, 1887. Then he organized the Anti-Poverty Society, embracing Henry George's theories and for five years spoke every Sunday to great crowds of people. He also attacked the church authorities for their unholy alliance with Tammany Hall. Finally, in 1892, the Pope commissioned Cardinal Satolli to dispose of the case as seemed to him best. The w affair was laid before a committee of five theologians of the University of America who decided that there was nothing in his teachings contrary to the doctrines of the Church of Rome. Consequently he was absolved from excommunication and restored to his priestly office. For a time he said mass in Brooklyn churches, but demanding reinstatement in a New York parish, Archbishop Corrigan sent him to Newberg with the understanding that he should have the first desirable vacancy in this city. Throughout his whole fight with the ecclesiastics he showed himself a strong and fearless man.

Prof. Chas. A. Briggs preached a few days since in the Church of the Holy Communion, this city, on "The Pre-existence of Christ," as the first of a series of six discourses in what are called incarnation services. His text was, "But when the fullness of the time came, God sent forth his Son, born of woman, born under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." He said the incarnation of Christ is one of the original facts of the Christian religion. Those people are mistaken who think we are to find the last and highest revelations in the teachings of Jesus as recorded in the Gospels. Jesus himself tells us that we are rather to find it in the teaching of the disciples, as they were guided by the Divine Spirit to understand the great facts of the life of Jesus.

In his discourse he also said Paul tells us that the Son of God was in the plan and purposes of God in all the preparatory dispensations, but this does not necessarily imply that the Son of God was a real being, existing in heaven before he was born of woman on this earth. I wonder what the professor has to say about the statement of Christ himself, "Before Abraham was I am"? Is not this conclusive? or can apostles or other disciples reveal a clearer, higher truth concerning the question of the personal pre-existence of Christ?

The resignation of the Rev. John E. Bushnell, copastor with the Rev. H. A. Johnson, of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church of this city, is another evidence that a bi-headed pastorate does not work well to say the least. It has been tried so many times in this city and always attended with failure. Men in the ministry have like passions with other men, and beside there are so many delicate and sacred relationships between a true shepherd and his flock that it is exceedingly difficult to maintain the proper balance of the relationships with more than one minister when they are officially co-ordainate. The associatete, or assistant, or helper in the pastoral service is well and good; but the co-pastoral system is a failure. The best of men and the best of people in the church have not been able to make the plan practicable. About six months ago the Philips Church on Madison Ave. and 27th St., was merged with the Madison Ave Church, corner of 53rd St. Dr. Bushnell, the pastor, became co-ordinate with Dr. Johnson, who had recently come to the church at 53rd St., from Chicago. Financial inability is given as the reason for the dissolution. It is sad to note that this in reality is another step in the retreat of the church forces in many parts of Manhattan. The coming great churches of the city of New York will not be in that borough, but in the Borough of the Bronx, and this is the day of our opportunity. We ought to plant strong Sunday-schools in every section of this borough.

The church on 169th street started a Branch Sunday-school almost a mile east of the church four years ago, and now it is housed in a neat, nice little chapel, and has an enrollment of something like 275 with an attendance last Lord's day of 217. Only last Easter we dedicated our chapel and now it is too small. It looks as if we will be compelled to enlarge it this year. We hope to plant other such schools in the near future. But our great need now is money that we may properly care for the people that we could easily win in this work. We very much need assistance in order to build a new church house for the main work of this great and growing field. The building we should have to properly equip this work would cost something like $30,000. We wish to have free reading rooms, circulating libraries, guild rooms, kindergarten, industrial and other apartments, that a broad, humane and educational work might be carried on. Are there not some good, liberal hearted friends of this kind of work whom the Lord has richly blessed in material things who would like to help us in this gigantic work? We should be pleased to correspond with any one who may desire to help us in this enterprise.

Before this letter is read the Disciples of Newark and vicinity will have opened their work at the Corner of Parke Ave., and 14th St. in that city, looking toward the ultimate organization of a church of Christ. Bro. E. L. Kelland, 24 North 7th St., Newark, N. J., is chairman of the executive committee and will be glad to hear of the name and address of any Disciple in that community.

Preparation for the March Offering.

If no careful preparation is made for the March Offering for Foreign Missions, little will be accomplished.

1. From now until March 4th let there be much earaest prayer for the success of the work.

2. It will be well to make repeated announcements from the pulpit. The time of the Offering and its purpose should be clearly understood.

3. A copy of the Missionary Voice should be placed in each family represented in the church. Special attention should be called to its contents. It is loaded with the freshest missionary facts. It will help to generate missionary enthusiasm.

4. A March Offering Envelope may be placed in the hands of each member of the church, with the request to give a definite amount. We hope the church will undertake to average at least $1.00 per member.

5. The work should be explained from the pulpit. The people want to know what fields are being cultivated, and the kind of work being done. They want to know the number of workers and where they are at work. It will be of great interest to tell the churches of the new fields. Cuba, Hawaiian Islands and the Philippine Islands, the character of the fields, the difficulties and the open doors.

6. The new watchword: $200,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Silver Jubilee Year, may be explained most effectively with a few words touching the history of the Society, its growth, etc.

Remember, we furnish March Offering Envelopes and the March Offering Number of the Missionary Voice free of charge. Please let us have your order at once. We count upon every missionary church among us, in this Silver Jubilee Year.

A New Work for the Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M.

A new work is given to the young people in the organization under the fostering care of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Hitherto their offerings have been given almost exclusively for the erection of needed buildings at the mission stations, and for the care of the orphan children in the orphanages in India. In addition to these things the young people are now asked to provide, as far as possible, for the support of native helpers, and the salaries of missionaries in foreign fields. It requires from $30 to $100 a year to pay the salary of a native helper, the amount needed varying on different fields, and in accordance with the ability of the helper.

The sum of $1.65 will pay the salary of any missionary of the C. W. B. M. in the foreign field for one day. Every young person is urged to become a missionary by proxy for at least one day. If he cannot "go" he should certainly provide a substitute for that length of time at the least. Thirty young people in an organization, each paying for one day's missionary work of some favorite missionary, will almost provide the amount of $50, needed for the salary of one month. Young people's organizations are urged to pledge to pay the the salary of their favorite missionary for one month,

Francis E. Clark, president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, proposes this new pledge for Endeavorers: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will make money for him. I will at the earliest possible moment support, through my own denominational board, one or more workers for Christ in the home or foreign field."

Not only Endeavorers, but all young Christians should strive to do so good and holy a work. Paying for one day's work will be a good beginning. This good work need not be confined to the members of organizations belonging to the Young People's Department. These members will be doing their Master's will by inducing others to join them in this sacred service—other young people, many of whom are leading thoughtless lives tending to frivolity and worldliness, and older Christians who are not doing all they should do for the extending of the Redeemer's kingdom.

We want the names of all those paying for one day's missionary work, whether the money is sent with the regular remittances of the Society or Band. We desire to send to every one of them a certificate on one side of which is a portrait of the missionary he is helping to support.

ANNUAL REPORTS.

ALBANY, OREGON.

At our annual meeting we decided to erect the much-needed house of worship. While no definite plans are formed as yet, the new building will be a credit to the cause in this state. We are pleased to report everything in good condition and that sixteen have united with us since our last report.

J. B. HOLMES, Pastor.

THORNTOWN, IND.

The report for the Christian Church for the year 1899: At the beginning of the year there were 168 members. Increase in membership during the year, 57. This is more than 33 per cent. gain. Loss during the year, five by letter and three by death. The present memberphip is 217. For all purposes the church has raised $1,513.93. All the financial obligations have been met and there is money in the treasury of each department for the New Year. LEE TINSLEY, Pastor.

DECATUR, ILL.

January 4 was our Annual Day. Receipts for local expenses, $1,627.35. All paid and small balance on hand. Mortgage with interest, $4,560; subscribed for payment of same, $2,423; will pay mortgage debt this year; $1,370 subscribed in new church fund; net increase in membership, 53; present membership, 353; raised for missions, $146.25; C. W. B. M., $109.70; Social Helper, $843.58; expended, $422.25; cash on hand, $421.33. No deaths in congregation during the year.

MARION STEVENSON,
Pastor Edward St. Church of Christ.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Our annual meeting, held on January 3rd, was most encouraging. Every department had a full report of work done, without a single failure. The total amount of money raised from every society was a little over $3,000. While conditions have not been the most favorable, yet a constant growth has marked the year's work. Twenty.seven have been added since my pastorate commenced in May and a healthy condition now prevails in the church, so we have reason to expect larger things this coming year.

The cordial sympathy and earnest purpose of all the brethren here cannot fail to produce results. We expect to open a new work Jan. 7th.

F. P. ARTHUR.

DECATUR, ILL.

This morning we had our annual reports in lieu of regular sermon. The year 1899 has been a good one for the Tabernacle congregation. About 165 added, making present membership 801. Something over $5,000 raised from all sources and expended in furthering the work of the Lord. Of this amount our Ladies' Aid Society raised nearly $1,200. What similar organization can beat it? The Senior Endeavor raised nearly $200. Every department of the church is in good working order, peace reigns and prosperity is attending us. We praise God and take courage.

The undersigned was unanimously called to remain another year as pastor, making his seventh in Decatur. Bro. C. C. Redgrave will also be continued as associate pastor. He is doing excellent work. Bro. J. W. Robbins, late of Mexico, Mo., preaches for us to-night. He has located here, and we expect valuable assistance from him during the coming months.

I start for California and the Pacific Northwest to-night on a month's lecture tour. On the way home, February 3-5, I am to be chief speaker at a tri-county meeting of our people at Mankato, Minn. During my trip I will speak at Oakland, Cal., Portland, Oregon, Snohomish and Colfax, Wash., Sioux City, Iowa, Craig, Mo., and several other points, arriving home Feb. 14, in time to introduce Mayor S. M. Jones, of Toledo, who is to speak at the Tabernacle in our regular lyceum course. February 18 we begin a short meeting here. I am to do the preaching and Peter Bilhorn, of Chicago, the singing. Pray for us, brethren, that the Father in heaven may continue his rich blessings.

GEO. F. HALL.

EVANGELISTIC.

I wish the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and all Christian evangelists a Happy New Year. We closed at Akron, O., Wednesday, Dec. 20, with 112 added; 23 the last Sunday and 17 the previous Sunday. This closed the year 1899, with 1,045 additions in all; 1,007 in six meetings. Worked for Hiram College two and one-half months, dedicated two fine churches and had one month's vacation.

Our largest day was at Evansville, Ind., with 57 added, and our largest meeting was in March, at Springfield, Ill., with 244 added. I see by last week's paper that Bro. Lynn has had 30 added in the last four Sundays. We bless the Lord for all this year and can only say, "Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever." Will begin at Allegheny, Pa., Jan. 5, with Bro. W. J. Lhamon. Prof. C. L. Fillmore and wife will lead the music. Will go to Pittsburg, Central Church in February.

We beg for the "effectual fervent prayers" of all the righteous.

Truly yours in Jesus for his glory,
CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

Chicago, Ill.

ATCHISON, KANSAS.

The church at Atchison, Kan., has closed one of the most successful year's work in its history. The pastor preached 131 sermons, 24 of which were at the Orphans' Home, of which he is chaplain. Baptized 33 persons, received 12 others into fellowship, married 21 couples, conducted 31 funeral services. The church paid another $500 on its mortgage debt, making $1,200 of debts paid in the year and nine months we have been here; reduced the interest on the mortgage from eight to six per cent.; greatly improved the church house, and best of all contributed liberally to all our missionary enterprises. We gave to Home and Foreign Missions, to Church Extension, to Ministerial Relief, to the Benevolent Association, to county, district and state work, to Bible Chair work at Lawrence and to several other objects beyond our local work. We have not allowed our own burdens to hinder liberal offerings for the work in regions beyond. The missionary offerings were the largest in the history of the church. The church has been characterized by unity, spirituality and liberality. The outlook for 1900 is most encouraging. WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

From reports given at the annual meeting of the University Place Church of Christ, held on New Year's day, it was shown that we have enjoyed a most prosperous year in many respects.

The pastor, Brother I. N. McCash, is loved by all, and his services are appreciated and due credit given. The best of harmony exists between pastor, the official board and the membership. We are engaged in a series of meetings, Bro. A. M. Haggard as preacher, assisting Bro. McCash. Two hundred and sixty-two were added to our membership the past year. The church and the different departments raised for all purposes the past year, $10,222. Of this amount $2,027.43 was for missions.

The church proper has a missionary committee whose duty it is to look after this part of the work, and we remember and contribute to every missionary fund and interest recommended by our national convention. As an example to the brotherhood of our state, we expect to add Drake University to our list and give it 10 per cent. of our offerings.

We paid to the different missionary funds during the year 1899 as follows: Ministerial Relief Fund, $46.65; Church Extension Fund, $93.30; A. C. M. S., $152.71; State Missions, $111.88; City Missions, $244; National Christian Orphan Home $13.08; and to Foreign Missions, $474.02.

Other departments of the church paid for missions as follows: Sunday-school, $100.14; Y. P. S. C. E., $50; Junior Y. P. S. C. E., $22.61; C. W. B. M., $300; Young Woman's C. W. B. M.; $148.08; Ladies' Aid, $10, and miscellaneous, $222.

It is the earnest intention of both the official board and the missionary committee to teach our membership the importance of remembering systematically all of the missionary boards and interests of the brotherhood. We are now led to believe that we have nearly the ideal plan.

J. M. LUCAS,
Sec. Missions for University Place Church of Christ.

ST. LOUIS.

Under the auspices of the Mission Board of St. Louis, Mo., there was raised and disbursed for mission purposes, during the year 1899, the sum of $1,726.92. Of this sum $599 was paid by the American Christian Missionary Society, which is co-operating with our City Mission Board in this work. The balance, $1,117.07, was raised by our churches in St. Louis. The total resources of our City Mission Board, at the first of the year 1900, was $5,221.79, consisting of unpaid pledges of $871.79 and real estate holdings. The net resources of our board, less liabilities, are $3,184.79. Comparative statements show that quite double the amount of money has been collected and disbursed for city missions for 1899 over that of the year 1898. The increase, of course, came most largely from the A. C. M. S., without whose aid what was done in 1899 would not now be.

As you know, we have a city evangelist, A. J. Marshall, who is at work under the City Board, and since his employment, last May, he has given his time to Carondelet chiefly. However, he has assisted in a protracted meeting in the West End, Fifth, Compton Heights and Fourth churches, with good results.

The work, therefore, is of an encouraging character, but greater results are hoped for this year. The City Mission Board held its annual election Jan. 6th, as follows: F. M. Call, president, O. A. Bartholomew, vice-president, W. D. Cree, treasurer, and the writer secretary.

She Quit Coffee

AND GOT WELL WITH THE HELP OF POSTUM FOOD COFFEE.

"I am a school girl and want to tell you what Postum Food Coffee has done for me and several of my relatives.

"The old-fashioned coffee always made me heavy and dull and gave me heartburn, with dyspepsia. When we tried Postum Food Coffee, it did not taste good, but I begged for another trial, when the directions were followed, and we found it delicious. Since that time, we have used it regularly, and I never have any trouble with the heavy feeling or dyspepsia.

"Dr. Lowrie prescribed Postum for my uncle, Mr. ————, property man of the Boston Theatre, and it worked a marvelous change in him. He quit the common coffee, and has been using Postum Food Coffee ever since. He looks better than he ever did before. His family also use it. THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

Mt. Ayr, Jan. 8.—Two additions at regular services yesterday; six in all since Nov. 1st, 1889. We have lately improved our church with a new furnace. All departments of work growing and all are hopeful.—L. C. SWAN.

Bagley, Jan. 11.—Meeting three weeks old with 21 additions. Intense interest prevails. Meeting still continues. Five confessions last night.—J. S. COFFIN AND E. M. PARDEE.

Arlington, Jan. 8.—Forty-five to date; a great interest, house packed at almost every service. We expect a great ingathering. Wm. Hollett is pastor, song leader and baptist, and is first-class in every particular.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Villisca, Jan. 9.—We have just closed a five weeks' meeting at Corydon, county seat of Wayne county. The writer did the preaching and Bro. J. W. Laudrum led the music. This was unlike any meeting I have ever held, in several ways. There was no organization, but they (the believers and their friends) had just dedicated a fine new church building, costing $6,753. We followed the dedication with the meeting, and left an organized congregation of 87 substantial members, and a pastor on the ground to take up the work. The whole community is profoundly stirred and the cause we plead has been received into the hearts of the people.—W. P. SHAMHART.

Swan, Jan. 12.—The faithfulness of the evangelistic field in Iowa and the ability of the Bible students at Drake University to occupy it are illustrated by a four weeks' meeting just closed at Swan, a village of 400 people, on the C. B. & Q. R. R., nineteen miles east of DesMoines, conducted by J. W. Babcock. The meeting resulted in 121 accessions; 80 of them confessions, and all but five of them adults, mostly people of middle age, and four past sventy. They came as many as 17 at a time, and ten at the last service. Bro. Babcock had no assistant but his home forces, the singing being ably led by Bro. Dell Gates, of Swan. The Sunday-school at once went from 45 to 140, and an Endeavor Society of 75 was organized. Bro. Babcock has been in the University one year, and besides carrying his school work and preaching regularly has added over 200 to the church, in meetings at small places like Swan.—S. C. SLAYTON.

"There's no Place Like Home."

What a delightful place is the family circle! There is nothing this side of the throne of God more sacred. The family is a divine institution.

All things exist for the family; labor to support it, the state to protect it, education to enlighten it and religion to purify it.

The family is the mold of character, the corner stone of society, the pillar of government and the basis of all true progress. Destroy the family and all is anarchy.

The highest, purest and strongest ties of life—fatherhood, motherhood, sisterhood, childhood and companionhood—are to be found in the family. All other forms of society are but modifications of one or more of the family ties.

Governments, moral progress, regard for the rights of others, sympathy and all of the higher and nobler traits of character find their roots in the family. No man can compute the power of the family circle in the formation of character, no man can weigh its influence in the affairs of the world, and not even an angel from heaven can attune sweeter chords of love. No, "there is no place like home." It is the holiest of holies in the temple of earthly life, the one thing for which there is no substitute.

The family is a primary institution; all others are secondary and subservient. Any religion, government, industry or social order that does not contribute to the peace, purity, prosperity and perpetuity of the home is dangerous and to be avoided. And the man who places the family in secondary position to anything makes the mistake of his life.

God's smiles and benedictions rest upon the home. It is his own thought, his own work. For ages his messages were to heads of families, and the law given by Moses clustered about the family. Even the church is modeled after the family, which it was ordained to supplement, and it is under the Christian religion that the family has attained in its highest and purest form. The curse of the pagan world is that it has no homelife, no family circle.

It is well, then, that John Howard Payne gave us that immortal song, "Home, Sweet, Home." God bless our homes. Husbands, love your wives and be not bitter against them, for there can be no home without a mother. Parents, provoke not your children to wrath. Lonely indeed would be your fireside without their happy faces and their cheerful smiles. Remember that when you cast out your children you are destroying God's purpose in the home. Children, obey your parents in the Lord, and through their tender care learn of the love of God. Honor your father and mother and God will honor you.

Home, Sweet Home.

BY JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.*

[As originally sung by Miss M. Tree, in Payne's operatic play, "Clari the Maid of Milan." 1823.]

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home,
A charm from the sky seems to hallow us there,
Which, seek through the world, is ne'er met with elsewhere.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
There's no place like home!
There's no place like home!

An exile from home, splendor dazzles in vain.
O, give me my lowly thached cottage again!
The birds singing gayly, that came at my call—
Give me them—and the peace of mind, dearer than all!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
There's no place like home!
There's no place like home!

Bro. Garrison's Sleep Remedy.

C. MCPHERSON.

I read with a good deal of interest the remedy offered by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for sleeplessness. To recall the time of childhood and to bring to memory some of the happenings of those happy hours did indeed seem to be an effective and pleasant method of driving away the perplexing cares that banish sleep from the eyes. And then, too, there was a delightfully poetical tinge to the suggestion. What could be more inviting to blissful repose than the sweet innocence of childhood hours? The suggestion lingered with me as a pleasant dream and I determined to put it into practice. The opportunity was not long waiting. "In the still watchings of the night" sleep refused to come to my relief. I rolled and tossed and thought, and thought and tossed and rolled. Then a still voice seemed to say, "Why not try the editor's remedy?" At once my mind reverted to the little town of Keene, Ky., and suddenly I was on my way from the home place to the Mt. Pleasant schoolhouse. I pulled down the bars that admitted me to the pasture which lay between the village and the school. The same old path was traveled, the same horses and cows and sheep were grazing that were there over thirty years ago, the same sun was overhead, the same grass beneath my feet, and there was the same hollow log that I knew so well and the same old inclination to deposit within its most secret place the slate and books and say to them, "Goodbye forever." I reached the old playground and felt again the pang I knew so well, when the teacher stood in the doorway and called aloud, "Books!" With the boys and girls of those well-remembered days I sat on the same long bench and swung my feet for hours—hours long and weary. I broke the awful monotony by "May I get a drink?" "May I speak?" and "May I go out?" I went to the teacher twenty times with my finger on a word—just any word—and forgot it before I reached my seat. It was exercise that I was after—not learning. I stood up in the old spelling class, still at the foot, and helped my companions there to form the line of pupils into the letter J, when we tried to see what the children near the head were doing. The old familiar order, "Toe the mark!" rung in my ears and we shuffled our feet back until our bare toes exactly touched the crack in the floor. The same Charlie Hendricks pinched me until I cried with pain, and then I received a whipping because I made a noise.

At last the teacher said "Dinner!" and that was music, because it meant something to eat and two hours of solid fun during "play time." We gave the same old yell that only the schoolboys of those days could give and rushed for hats and lunches. Pell-mell, helter-skelter, over benches and desks and girls and smaller boys we rushed. After dinner the fox chase. This time I was the fox and the other boys were either hunters or dogs. My! horns blowing, dogs barking, hunters yelling, fox running! And thus the two hours passed. I jumped fences, fell over logs, got tangled in blackberry patches and reached the schoolhouse sore and bruised and breathless, just in time to hear the teacher shout, "Books!" Sleep? Well, the remedy didn't work. I'll never try the "childhood days" prescription again!

A Prayer.

R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

God of our fathers, who hast been
Our dwelling-place in years agone,
May thy pure spirit dwell within
And guide us as we journey on.

In days past by we oft have strayed
Far from the way of righteousness,
Yet vengeance thou hast ever stayed
And mercies sent our lives to bless.

Blot out from thy remembrance, Lord,
Our sins 'gainst fellowman and heaven.
As thou hast written in thy Word,
"Forgive, and thou shalt be forgiven."

Teach us within our hearts to hide
Thy Word of truth, and light, and cheer,
That whatsoe'er may us betide,
We'll trust thy goodness still, nor fear.

Help us in coming days to heed
The cries of those in heathen night,
And haste to meet their direful need
By speeding forth the gospel light.

Keep us, O Lord, in days to be,
Within the bounds of truth and right,
Nor let us stray aside from thee
Into sin's paths of cruel blight.

May we so live that all who know
Our hearts and lives may be content
To honor thee, while here below,
By following Him whom thou hast sent.

And when on earth our life is done,
In mercy, Lord, wilt thou receive
Us into thine eternal home,
That we in bliss may ever live. Amen!

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER VIII.

Our summer season was now advanced. January was at hand. Our supply of food was diminishing. It was not yet too late to grow something if we set to work. Of seeds and agricultural implements we fortunately had a fair supply.

Accordingly, every man that could be spared was set to work clearing and—for want of animals—spading a thinly wooded tract upon the plateau above. And soon the women and children were aiding in the planting and other garden work.

By diligent toil we soon had a few acres in cultivation, and the warm, new soil, with a northern, sunward exposure, soon gave promise of an abundant harvest.

The planting over, there was now time for other necessary matters. To Captain Wolcott, under whose supervision we had so long been placed, there readily fell the duty of chief executive of our little republic. Four sailors were made a committee to look after the supply of sea food, such as fish, oysters, turtles, etc. Four from the passengers were made gamekeepers. They were to look after the supply of meats, to preserve the animals from wanton destruction, to correl and look after the goats that supplied us with milk. Others were to secure eggs of the seafowl that were abundantly found in the crags in the southern part of the island. Others were to look after the chickens and turkeys we had rescued from the ship and to provide them shelter. And a much larger number were to cultivate the soil and to clear away the timber for a much larger planting in the following spring.

During these busy days we were not forgetful of the recurring Sunday with its peaceful, quiet and uplifting worship. Nor did we fail on Saturday afternoon to meet and unite our prayers and efforts to secure a complete and effective unity of the faith. At one of these meetings the question arose as to what name should be applied to our island church.

Various names were offered, mostly suggestive of the idea so prevalent among us of unity. Mr. White thought we were proceeding so methodically that no better name could be selected than Methodist. This, however, as was to be expected, produced a dissent at once from Presbyterians, Baptists and Lutherans. Prof. Fergus then said: "We have before us a very practical proof, not only of the inefficacy of these suggested names to unite, but also of their efficiency in producing division. Without personally occupying your time, let us hear the views of Miss Winston." Thus invited, I said: "I know not why I am asked to discuss this subject, unless it is that my father was a minister. A most illogical reason; for it does not follow that because my father was well versed in theology I have inherited it. My father was a Lutheran. I revere the name of the great reformer, Martin Luther, but I can call myself a Lutheran no longer. I have been reading Paul, 1 Cor. 1-12, 13, and his solemn meaning has been impressed on me as never before. Listen: 'Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or, were you baptized into the name of Paul?' Dare any Christian call himself for Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas after this rebuke? Is the sin lessened if instead of the name of these great inspired teachers we substitute the names of great uninspired teachers, and call ourselves Lutherans, or Wesleyans, or Campbellites? Again, is the sin lessened if, discarding the names of men, we exalt denominational distinctions and call ourselves Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians? By no means. The inexorable logic that would rebuke our calling ourselves after Paul would condemn the use of the best name of person or idea on earth. Was Paul, or Luther, or Methodism, or Campbellism, or any ism on earth crucified for you, or were you baptized in the name of any of these? Can Paul, or Luther, or any ism on earth save you? No, a thousand times no!

"There is, however, one of whom it is said: 'God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth.' He was crucified for us. We were baptized in his name. To him belongs all the honor. Let us glory in his name."

Prof. Fergus followed, saying: "I was hardly prepared to hear Miss Winston, who has long honored the great German reformer in calling herself a Lutheran, take such high grounds on this subject. But, sincerely searching the Scriptures for the truth, she has come to the only logical conclusion. In the Bible Christians are called disciples, believers, brethren, saints, Christians. All these names give the honor where it belongs. They were disciples of Christ, believers in Christ, brethren in Christ, saints in Christ Jesus, Christians. Let us sit at his feet and be his disciples. Let us follow him and be Christians. On these names inspiration has set the seal of divine approval."

On the following Monday Mr. Smithson, an ingenious mechanic, came to the Captain and said: "We will need better houses before winter. These should be made of good material."

"Yes," said the Captain, "they ought to be of stone, or brick, or lumber, but where are these?"

"Stone of good quality I have found," replied Smithson, "near the top of the ledge above us."

"But the lumber?"

"In the trees."

"Yes; about as impossible to use as the Captain's gig when it was in the bottom of the sea."

"There's nothing impossible to him that wills—according to Bonaparte."

"Then we'll do some willing,"

"Yes; and some working, too. I have found millsaws among our stores. Up yonder are the trees. The brook will furnish the power."

"But where are your oxen or horses to tow the logs to the mill?"

"The brook will carry them."

"Well, you've figured the thing all out. And now all that's needed is for the magician, Smithson, to say, 'Presto, change!' and the thing is done."

Accordingly, Smithson with several efficient aids set to work. At the top of the ledge on the level plateau, convenient to the stone, it was decided to build our village. Here, at the very edge of the precipice, a dam was built across the brook, producing slack water for about a half-mile above of depth sufficient to float the logs to the mill, which was to be built at the dam.

Here by vigorous work the men soon had a rude but effective sawmill in operation. The logs cut from the land to be used for cultivation were rolled by the men and dumped into the stream and floated to the mill.

Upon this beautiful site, with its magnificent sea view and convenient to the arable land, the colonists erected their cottages, either of stone with wooden roofs, or of lumber throughout, and also a building of some magnitude for a depository of the stores that had been saved from the ship. These were to be carefully looked after and sparingly drawn upon as emergency might require.

During the work of building there was one source of worry and dissatisfaction. The men were saying: "How are we going to get all our stores up the face of a well-nigh perpendicular bluff a hundred feet high?"

"If we jist had the blasted ilevation down here at the cove, we could do the worruk nicely at wanst," was the sage observation of Pat O'Callaghan.

Several were outspoken in condemning the folly of putting the village on the bluff.

But Smithson said: "We'll find a way out of this difficulty."

Accordingly, a large force under his direction was set to work with pick and spade along the channel cut by the brook down the bluff. And soon a road, at an inclination of about forty degrees, was cut smooth and straight from the cove to the mill. A rope was attached to the water power by windlass, so that it could be drawn up or let down at pleasure. This was fastened to a loaded wagon at the foot of the hill, the power turned on, and up went the wagon with its heavy freight, much to the delight of many and to the discomfiture of the growlers!

Sewing Machines of the Present are very different from those of the past. Very few users of sewing machines know the technical differences; patents have expired on generic features, but "the world moves," and radical improvements have been made in sewing machines, so that the one of to-day shows a tremendous improvement on its predecessor. Women who have used both kinds quickly realize the difference between a cheaply made imitation of some ancient type and the modern light-running machine which is easily adjusted, does all kinds of work, and is always ready to go. The Silent Singer of to-day is the latest result of constant improvement in mechanical excellence. For practical use it compares with the old-time sewing machines sold at department stores much as a modern railway train surpasses a stage-coach of the last century.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care, from the best materials, fitted in its place with the utmost exactness, and tested and re-tested so many times before leaving the factory, that it never gets the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty. Singer machines are sold directly from maker to user; they are guaranteed by the maker, always ready to furnish parts and supplies in any part of the world, and not by a middleman totally unable to render this service. Buy a sewing machine of the Present, and not one of the Past.

"Judge Not."

T. H. BLENUS.

When Christ, in Matt. 7:1, prohibits judgments, he is without doubt condemning two crimes, both aggravated and extremely common. The first is that disposition of the human mind and heart which inclines so many to judge the actions of those around them, with precipitance, with malignity and with undue severity. Secondly, the habit of communicating to others the rash and severe judgments we have found, when no real necessity demands it. It is a common teaching of law that to be guilty of crime, the guilt of a person must be established. Exact investigations are entered into, a defense is heard in which all favorable circumstances are received, and witnesses for and against the accused are heard, and complete proofs are required in order to condemnation. We believe it would be well in the ordinary intercourse of life to be just as circumspect before condemning our neighbor. No man, and certainly no Christian, has any right to judge a fellow Christian on vague reports. Judgment should at least be suspended until there is before us the undoubted assurance of facts, and there is a good acquaintance with the principal circumstances. It should be remembered that appearances are often deceitful, and that many actions seem censurable which cannot be blamed when we know the circumstances and the motives impelling them. Much of this precipitant judging springs from the evil spirit of malignity. Envy, pride, hatred, jealousy and innumerable foul impulses daily lead persons to convert the appearances of evil into reality, and perhaps the dimmest and feeblest presumption into a full and absolute certainty. It is an evil temperament which animates any one to be greedy of every report, and then to round out the least form of rumor with all the circumstances that are wanting, and to fil up what is actually absent in action by suggested motives and intentions. Such characters show their true spirit in the fact that if an action is susceptible of two explanations they always select that which is most disadvantageous. In presenting their unfavorable judgment it is touching to see their manifestations of pain and grief. It is an awful compulsion which has forced them to publicly deal with things so repugnant to them, and so distasteful to their highly sensitive Christian (?) principles. We shall have something to say on another phase of this subject.

A Tale of Alaska.

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR.

(A True Story.)

It was early in the Klondike excitement. Syndicates grew like mushrooms. The wonders of Aladdin's lamp were to be repeated. Thousands were caught in the contagion.

Now this gold fever is mesmeric. Its subjects dream most delightful things. It first afflicts the victim with hallucination. The hills become mountains of gold and the world is turned into paradise. Then it causes him to do things that puzzle his saner moments, once he is restored to health. Finally, when the poor victim is well in hand the plague fiend shows his real face and the terrors begin. There are chills and emaciation and despondency and loss of moral temper, etc. However, here is the story:

It was a Windy City syndicate. The names behind it were those of well-known pork-packers. It represented millions, yet that was but a bagatelle to the fabulous things in store for those enterprising enough to accept their offers.

Now our Chicago friend had a good business. He also had a fine family, to which he was passionately devoted. He was a thoroughgoing Christian man and well respected. His friends were going, and he concluded to go also. The syndicate promised sure things. There was transportation, and it was first-class. Of course, good provisions would be furnished, plenty of company, any amount of capital necessary to develop things, and a sure "stake" to work in the fields. Any honest man could accept the proposition.

The party went to Seattle, then crossed to Victoria, where the steamer was supposed to be in waiting. "It was not in yet, but would be in a day or two." This was a daily story for three weeks; meanwhile, each man paid his own hotel bill and paced the hall, which daily grew bluer with profanity. But one morning about daylight there came a long, hoarse growl from out at sea, and some one divined it. All rushed to the wharf to meet the belated steamer. In dismay they beheld a cattle freighter. But dismay did not express much when they were told that this was indeed the ship that would take them to the Bonanza land. Inside little change had been effected since the last unloading; the perfumes of Araby had not wafted that way. The cabins were stalls. The human cattle were to be "transported." The "fever" could be trusted to send them aboard.

Finally, all were aboard. There were young men of good repute and intelligence; young men of adventurous spirit. There were men who worked the world for what there was in it, who claimed no home—professional "fleecers." There were men of all professions and walks of life, but the larger number were from Western mining camps; men whose morals were as earthy as the ground in which they delved. They all came aboard, of course, but amidst the most awful Babel of imprecations this side of Inferno. Our Chicago friend felt smothered in such an atmosphere, but he was determined.

They weighed anchor and swung out to sea and toward the land of the Midnight Sun. The hold of the vessel steamed with living beasts, which would be turned into frozen meats and large profits on the Yukon. Deck and masts swung with dressed beeves and other provisions for the winter living. Between were the Klondikers. The syndicate managers were in an elegant office in Chicago, figuring margins and advertising for the next trip.

Day after day went by at sea, all too slowly for the crowd jammed in the ship, who half forgot surroundings in the anxiety to reach the end. One night a terrible storm swept down upon them. They were driven toward the coast. There were terrors within and without. All knew that if it came to the worst the tragedy of the Burgoyne would be re-enacted. Now curses turned to prayers and rough men became crying children. The storm over, a sadly damaged ship drew into shore and shelter. The following day some canoes came out. They were rowed by the Indian Esquimaux of that coast. Our Chicago friend hired one of them to take him ashore. A village of a few score of people greeted him. They lived in squalid huts of walrus hide.

In their midst he was surprised to see an English chapel. It was Sunday morning and about church time. He heard an Englishman preach in most kindly tones to a score of natives in their own tongue. He felt he was on holy ground in the presence of a man who would live in such a country and among such a people.

The missionary's story was a simple one. He had come from London eighteen years before. He had never been able to visit home. He received no pay, but lived with his people. In the summer white men occasionally stopped with them. In the long, cold winter there was plenty to do.

Our Chicago friend felt a benediction in such a man's presence. "Would he come out to the ship in the afternoon and talk a few minutes?" He would be glad if it would be acceptable. In the afternoon he came. The news was spread through the ship. A room was cleaned up and the men crowded in. They packed themselves together until no man could turn, then stood on tables and hung on ladders. Our Chicago friend introduced the missionary by telling what he saw in the village. The good man stepped forward and asked for a moment's prayer. Every hat went off. Then he preached for a few minutes in a simple, unpretentious way, but many a rough fellow's face streamed with tears. After it all our Chicago friend said: "Boys, there is one thing we can do," and picked up his hat with one hand while the other went into his pocket. Every face grew happy, and as that hat went round there were fewer jingling answers to the call than is usual, for big bills do not jingle.

It came back to our Chicago friend half full. He would not commit the sacrilege of counting it. The missionary received it with tears, and his parting benediction was: "None of it will be used for myself, all for the mission boys." They felt it was time to "clear out." They were really a little embarrassed in the presence of such a man. They began crowding out, but without even speaking, and there were many who cleared up their throats for the want of something to do.

The missionary returned to his flock and the vessel returned to Victoria, but of that motley crowd of gold seekers never will one forget that Sunday afternoon.—The Christian Messenger.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

When Frank retired that night her mind was troubled. Since she had been with the Clarmonts, she had often been worried by wondering if it were right to leave them in ignorance as to her parentage. She told herself it was neither necessary nor important to tell everybody with whom she came in contact that she had been left when an infant on a strange doorstep and that her parents were unknown. Yet Mrs. Clarmont had been impressed with the idea that both of Frank's parents were dead. Was it Frank's duty to undeceive the lady? "No," Frank often said to herself, "I have not deceived her, and perhaps they are dead, and besides, she has employed me to take care of Vega; it is not her affair. Yet I know Mrs. Clarmont—if she knew I was that kind of a lost child—well, she would send me away." So Frank had kept the secret; but although she told herself the secret was her own, it made her unhappy. And now here was a deeper secret, an enterprise which might even be wrong; she and Ronald would steal from the house at four in the morning and go to the Covered Bridge to meet a woman claiming to be her mother. It is easy enough to tell when some things are wrong. But when they are all mixed up with good and bad and you have no wise friend to help you, what can you do? There was one thing Frank could not do—sleep. She lay very still, wondering if the wild looking woman would try to do her an injury, and if so, how Ronald would protect her; and would Nance be furious when she learned that Frank had told her secret?

Frank heard the clock strike ten and eleven, and after that she heard the door of the atticroom open. Mrs. Dew, who slept in a bed on the other side of the apartment, called out sharply, "What is that?" and Frank lay very still, dreadfully frightened. A man's voice said, "Hush!" Mrs. Dew gave a startled exclamation, and Frank heard her feet upon the floor. Presently the lamp was lit—the trembling child could tell that, although she dared not open her eyes. "Is the girl asleep?" the man asked. Mrs. Dew answered shortly, "Yes; she always sleeps soundly. You need not be afraid of her." Then the man said, "Kate, I would give ten years of my life for the innocent sleep of that child." Mrs. Dew answered almost in a whisper, but with bitter emphasis: "Yes! it's easy to say that after you have made such sleep impossible. I wonder you condescend to come to me. Am I better to-night than I was yesterday? Suppose your wife misses you: what falsehood will you invent?"

Now all this was very unpleasant to Frank. She did not know much about the regulations of society, but it did not seem proper for this gentleman to be in this place at such an hour. The man was Mr. Clarmont. Frank wondered that the housekeeper dared speak to him as she did. She would have liked to have made some motion to warn them that she was not asleep, but the very thought of doing so made her blood thrill with fear. Then Mr. Clarmont said, "No, you are no better than you were yesterday, but I am better. That is why I am here. And you have the child to thank for it. If you had overheard her with Vega as I have—and they thought I did not hear a word! It was the girl's face, at first, that roused me to take an interest in her. There is something so different there, so unusual, what is it? Purity? Well, it stirred up recollections of my own childhood, and of our dear old mother, and of you, Kate, when you were a little girl. And while Frank and Vega were studying the Bible together I made it convenient to be in some corner; they supposed me engrossed in my book or my business. Frank doesn't know how she brought the truth back to my heart. But she has. In the short time she has been here she has made a better man of me. And Kate, I have come here to tell you so, and ask you to forgive."

There was a long pause, and then Mrs. Dew answered, "I have forgiven you, brother. And I owe that to Frank, for she taught me my duty, young as she is. I have forgiven you, although the wrong you did me can never be made right."

"I know it cannot, sister, but I will search for the girl; she must be about Frank's age now. In the wicked pride of my heart I kept from you her whereabouts. But every month I send money to the woman that supports her. I will go at once to this woman and learn the truth; perhaps bring the girl to you."

"Ah, yes, brother, but you cannot give back the years when she would have learned to love me. Now, I would be a stranger to her. And who can tell what her character is. Is the woman that supports her a good woman?"

"I know nothing about her," said Mr. Clarmont. "In my selfish pride I did not care. I will make right what I can. I will tell Mrs. Clarmont in the morning that you are my sister."

"No!" said Mrs. Dew. "Why tell her now? Why shame her with the knowledge that her housekeeper is her husband's sister? Why shame yourself?"

"Kate, if you have forgiven me, you will help me do what I ought to do. You will not advise me to hide my dishonor. It is no dishonor that you are my sister, but it is my dishonor that I have been ashamed of your position."

"Wait till the girl is found," said Mrs. Dew. "Then you can tell everything. Now I have but one sorrow: that my little one was taken from me, and that she may have grown up with an evil heart. Brother, if you find her, and if she is bad, don't bring her to me. Let me love her as she was, when last I held her to my heart."

There was another pause, and then Mr. Clarmont said, "I didn't suppose you would care much. I thought you'd get over it in a month or so." Now that sounded stranger to Frank than anything else that had been said! Yet it was all strange enough. But one thing seemed clear: she could not be the girl they were talking about. Evidently Mrs. Dew's child had been put in the care of a woman who was paid every month for her board; they lived together even now. Mr. Clarmont and Mrs. Dew talked together a good while longer, but they lowered their voices and Frank did not hear. At last Mr. Clarmont went away.

BAPTISM AND TEMPTATION OF JESUS.*

Multitudes were thronging to the Jordan valley to hear the new preacher of righteousness, whose message burned its way into the heart and conscience of an evil generation. The nation was aroused and all men were inquiring if this might not be the hour set for Israel's deliverance; if the Messiah might not himself be at hand, about to establish his glorious kingdom. Many, indeed, thought to find in the Baptist himself the promised Redeemer. But this he at once dismissed from their minds by the explicit assertion that one mightier than he was soon to appear; who should baptize in the Holy Spirit those who chose the way of righteousness, and in fire those who persisted in sin.

One day, as John was administering baptism to some of his converts, there approached him one whose countenance and bearing commanded his attention and overwhelmed him with sudden awe. It is doubtful whether John had ever seen Jesus before. Indeed, he twice asserts that he did not know him; but this may mean that he had not yet recognized him as the Messiah. They were cousins, through their mothers, and John may have heard from his mother, Elizabeth, the story of her cousin Mary's wonderful Son. It is possible they had met during some visit to Jerusalem, or at the home of John. But we are told that the Baptist made his home in the wilderness until the time for beginning his public ministry, and it was probably at an early age that he chose this this solitary retreat. But the soul of John was on the alert with expectation, and he daily looked for the Messiah to appear. When, therefore, amid the throng the majestic face of Jesus looked into his, he felt instinctively that the supreme moment of his ministry had come. His stern spirit, fearless before kings and rabbis, bowed humbly before the silent majesty of the young man from Nazareth. He had demanded from all others coming to his baptism a confession of their sins; to this One, whose pure countenance bespoke the holiness within, John felt impelled to confess his own unworthiness. "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" The reply of Jesus was the second recorded utterance of our Lord, and breathes the same obedient sentiment as the first: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

Why was Jesus baptized? Many have been the answers to this question, but we need not go beyond what is written to find ample reason for his submission to this ordinance. The Messiah came, not only to make atonement for our sins, but to be an example for our imitation. "If, when we we were sinners, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." At the very threshold of the new life to which the gospel of Christ should call men was to be placed this same ordinance of baptism. It would vastly enforce the command of the Master if his own submission to this rite could be pointed to by the preacher of the message. Then, too, it would prove a fit sign of the parting of the ways between the old life and the new, as with Jesus it signified his entrance upon his public ministry. Though he had no sins to be forgiven, and needed not the "baptism of repentance," yet he doubtless came to this ordinance with the glow of his divine life-purpose shining from his face. "His past life was closed; a new era had opened. Hitherto the humble villager, veiled from the world, he was henceforth the Messiah, openly working amongst men."

Luke tells us that Jesus was praying as he ascended from the baptismal waters, and we may believe that his petition was for that spirit promised by the evangelical prophet, which should fit him for his life-work of healing and salvation—"the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of fear of the Lord." The answer came swiftly, in visible token to at least himself and the Baptist. Like the gentle descent of a pure, white dove there came from the skies a strange form that seemed instinct with life, and resting on the brow of Jesus, did not depart, but probably grew gradually fainter till it disappeared. At the same time came a voice from the cloven heavens, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased!" The heaven-attested Messiah is now ready for his life-work.

God called Moses from the wilderness of Sinai to deliver Israel from Egypt. The Baptist had found the silence of the desolate region around the lower Jordan a necessity in preparing for his mission. The Apostle Paul dared not enter upon his great missionary enterprise until he had spent a season in quiet meditation in Arabia, if the common interpretation of his story be correct. Jesus plunged at once into the wilds where he could be alone with God. For forty days he saw no human face. Mark says that "he was with wild beasts." Did he here begin to exercise that mastery over nature which characterized his after life? For almost seven weeks Jesus seems to have taken no food, perhaps in his exalted state of mind not feeling the ordinary pangs of hunger. But at last the body craved its ordinary food, and this hour of supreme exhaustion was chosen by the Adversary for his most strenuous effort to defeat the declared purpose of the Messiah. Whether the appearance of Satan to Jesus was subjective or objective matters little. That the temptation came from his suggestion, and was recognized and repelled as such by the Savior, is certain. It was no mere spectacular performance, either, gone through with for effect. Jesus was the Son of man and his redeeming work demanded that he should be tempted in all points like as we are, or he could not deliver us from sin. That he shrank from sin as the ermine is said to shrink from all defilement, that he refused to cherish any thought of evil, made the near approach of sin the more painful to his soul. His human nature was approached from every side. He was tempted through every channel by which other men have been reached. Luke tells us, at the close of this scene, that "when the devil had completed every temptation he departed." Through the appetites of the body, the vanity of the heart, the ambition of the mind, the threefold temptation came. The answer of Jesus was ever the same: "It is written." God's will must be the rule of life. His newly given powers shall not be used for himself. He will trust God for bread. Nor will he let his trust become presumption, and wantonly undergo peril, only to gain glory for himself. Much less will he consent to do homage to "the Prince of this world," even though it may promise a shorter road to the world's rulership. The way of duty, though the way of the cross, is the only one for his feet. The last suggestion is so blasphemous as to bring from his lips the angry retort, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" The decisive struggle is ended. The adversary leaves him for a season. He returns again, often, to tempt the Master, but never again finds such opportunity for repeated approach. He who would not do homage to Satan finds the angels coming to serve him, and fed by angels' food he gathers new strength for victory.

LITERATURE.

RICHARD CARVEL.*

Have you read "Richard Carvel"? It is a charming story. Here is the history of Maryland from the romantic standpoint. Romance pure and undefiled. None of your photographic realism!

Here you catch a glimpse of that free baronial hospitality of men who are courteous as they are brave, and of women who are as gentle as they are fair, so characteristic of the colonial gentry.

The story opens soon after the old French and Indian War and is carried down to the close of the Revolution, the most heroic period in our history.

Our text-books tell the story of our struggle for independence, from the Puritan or Whig standpoint. Here it is told from the loyal or Tory standpoint. After the accession of Cromwell, thousands of the loyalists fled to Maryland and Virginia for their lives. Their children had been taught from their infancy to love and reverence the name of the king. They were Tories by heredity, education and environment.

These colonies were wealthier than those of New England, on account of the richness of the soil, and the production of such large crops of wheat and tobacco.

The gentry in addition to their plantations owned their own merchantmen, which carried the wheat and tobacco to England, and brought back the bright satins, sheeny silks and dainty laces that were worn by the wives and daughters. Their sons were educated at Eton and Oxford. The Episcopalian Church was supported by the same system of taxation that was used in England.

In reading "Richard Carvel" you feel that England is indeed the mother country, and that her blood is coursing through your veins. How long these strong men clung to her! What a struggle it was for them to take up arms against her! Mr. Churchill, with the most consummate skill, show how these ties, one by one, were broken.

The characters are selected with such care that no phase of life in Maryland is left untouched. The two types of Tories are represented in Richard's grandfather and uncle. Lionel Carvel had sat at the council board of the governor and had represented the Crown on several important occasions during the old French and Indian War. He loved his king next to his church. The king's birthday, June 15, was an annual holiday on his plantation. He thanked God that no Carvel had ever been known to be a Whig. Fortunately for this loyal soul, he died before the ties of the mother country were broken.

Graften Carvel, the uncle, was the kind of a Tory that every true American despises. He saw in the struggle only an opportunity to play the spy and to fill his own pocketbook. He deceived his dying father, had his nephew kidnapped and became a traitor to his country.

With an artistic skill Richard's political principles are contrasted with those of these two. Even amid this Tory enviornment, he developed, not into an English Whig, but into a Colonial Democrat, true to his convictions in every relation in life. His loyalty to what he believed to be right is the strongest element in the book. His sense of honor, his willingness to perform manual labor when his wealth had taken wings, his abhorrence to everything that is dishonest, are finely developed.

There are also two types of women—Dorothea Manners and Polly Swain. The Maryland women have ever been famous for their beauty. Dorothea, the heroine, has the combined charms of all of them. She was a born beauty. Her coquetry is positively bewitching in its keenness and subtlety. Polly Swain was full of simple beauty, a dainty housewife, full of domesticity. She was an artist in the preparation of those table delicacies for which the Southern women have such a reputation.

This particular period gives Mr. Churchill an opportunity to carry us into London, to show us the gaming, racing, gambling society and to contrast with it the republican simplicity of the colonial life of Maryland. It also gives him an opportunity to introduce many famous characters in history. In London we meet Lord Baltimore, Horace Walpole and Charles James Fox; in Annapolis, Jean Paul Jones and George Washington.

The love story of Richard and Dorothea is so cunningly interwoven that all of the events in the book, even the Revolutionary War, seem to be subordinate to it.

Let no one say that America has no material for a romantic literature since Washington Irving has immortalized the Hudson, James Lane Allen has forever hallowed Kentucky by the "Choir Invisible," and Winchell Churchill has recreated and etherealized the history of Maryland in his story of "Richard Carvel."

THE MAKING OF HAWAII.†

Among the timely books which give to the American public the information which it ought to have about our new possessions, this by Prof. Blackman, of Yale, holds an honorable place. It is not a large book, but it tells with admirable discrimination those things which contribute most directly to an intelligent understanding of the people and institutions which are found at present in the Hawaiian Islands. As the sub-title indicates, the point of view is that of the student of society, and politics has but a small place in the treatment. The method is historical, but only so much of the external history is given as is necessary for understanding the social forces which have produced present conditions and institutions. The primitive conditions of the Hawaiian aborigines, their customs, character and manner of life, are treated, not with the garrulous inaccuracy of the chance traveler, but with the precision of the trained student of society.

The religious and moral development of the people has been controlled by five elements, says the author: (1) Native tradition and custom, (2) influence of early discoverers and travelers, (3) missionaries and other Christians, (4) Europeans hostile to the missionaries, (5) Chinese and Japanese ideas. Out of this intermingling of motives and forces, there has emerged a three-cornered struggle which is still going on between, first, the primitive Hawaiian religious cult and ethical ideas, second, the civilized irreligion and vice of the anti-missionary Europeans, and third, Christianity as represented by many worthy and influential missionaries.

While making due allowance for exaggeration in the reports of the wonderful results of early missionary activity, where whole populations were nominally converted to Christianity without any noticeable change in manner of life, the author gives much credit to the missionaries for the degree of civilization which has been attained in the islands in a comparatively brief period. Dealing with the history of Hawaii in recent years, since the fall of the monarchy in 1893, the account is sufficiently full and entirely dispassionate—a narrative and not a judgment. It is yet too early to form judgments about Hawaiian history, but in these present days, when the question of the fitness of the islands to receive the privilege of territorial government is being discussed, there is much pertinent information to be gathered from this book by Prof. Blackman.

TOOLE.

Nancy Birdsong Toole was born in Salem, Indi- na, September 20, 1852, and died in St. Louis, December 18, 1899. Her life was characterized by service and ministry o others. Her children loved her, and they sus- ain a grievous loss in her untimely death. Her husband was devoted to her and is now heart- broken in his grief. But this affliction should ead us to our Father who comforts and sustains. He will bring good from it, for "all things work ogether for good to them that love the Lord;" and e will bring from this affliction a "far more ex- eeding and eternal weight of glory"—a trust in im who knoweth and loveth all.

PUBLISHERS' COLUMN.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1900.

This is the fourteenth in the line of regular succession of the office of the Christian Publishing Company. The work is a collection, arrangement and commentary by W. W. Dowling. There are 354 pages in the body of the work, and an addition of 35 pages of dictionary of Scripture names, making 389 pages in all. The mechanical work is well executed. That the lessons are well prepared goes without saying. Bro. Dowling has done more along the line of Sunday-school work than any other man among us. He has always done well in the preparation of the lessons. The work before me is an improvement on any preceding number in several particulars. I am especially pleased with the "practical" which concludes every lesson. We should learn more than history, chronology, biography, geography, and even exegesis, in its ordinary import. We should get the gist of the lesson for ourselves. What are we to do, and believe, and expect? are questions of vital import. As usual, the Year Book will have a large sale.

D. R. DUNGAN.

EUREKA SPRINGS, ARK., January 10, 1900.—DEAR BRO. DOWLING—I want to thank you very cordially for the splendid Lesson Commentary for 1900. The thanks are a little tardy, but I have delayed until I could finish a thorough examination of the work, in order to give you an opinion of its value. I have been a Bible class teacher for more than thirty years, and have used all the helps available, both from our own and other authors, and have never seen the equal of your work for depth of research, fairness in handling the texts, historical and geographical settings and plainness of putting things, to say nothing of the many side helps to proper study of the sacred oracles. And it seems to grow better every year. I congratulate you upon this splendid result of your hard labor.

State Mission Notes.

The word that comes to us from all the state so far as heard is one of determination that this shall be the best month that state missions have ever had in the history of the work, at least in recent years. True, some are writing that on account of local conditions it will be impossible for them to take the offering this month. That is no doubt the case here and there, but the great majority of the churches can take it up this month. Those who have written to say that they cannot take up the matter this month have been very careful to say that this is only a postponement; that they are all full of interest in the work, and that later on in the season the church will come up with its full apportionment. In only one or two instances has there been a refusal to do anything at all. Now, brother, if you did not bring the matter before your people last Lord's day, it is not too late to do it now. We want to get out of the way of the other mission collections, and yet we can only do this by having a great contribution this month.

We again lay this matter on your hearts. We want to do the work you have instructed us to do, but we cannot unless the funds come in. Forgive our importunity, but the Savior taught men that they ought always to pray and not to faint, and if this be necessary with God it is infinitely more so with men. We pray you, therefore, brother minister, that you will not neglect this matter, but take it up at once. The success of the whole year's work depends on this month's effort.

Yours in His name, T. A. ABBOTT.

A Model Church.

I have found it in Southwestern Nebraska, almost in the heart of the "Great American Desert." It is not a large church, nor rich in this world's goods. It has 150 members, mostly poor people, and none of them rich; Sunday-school, 100; good C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, and Children's Missionary Band; Ladies' Aid Society, and Y. P. S. C. E. They have the best church building in Western Nebraska, all paid for but $300, and this will be met in three annual payments. The church supports a pastor all the time, has an annual protracted meeting and pays $100 a year to missions. Except the Sunday morning offering they take no collections in the church, and ask the world for nothing; and yet, quietly and without observation they pay their bills as they come due. The pastor has lived in the town for eighteen years, and is likely to live there eighteen more, unless called to heaven. He organized the church since moving to the town, and has been its only pastor, and no doubt will so remain as long as he lives. He is an educated and cultured gentleman and an able preacher, has an intelligent family and a pleasant home, and is satisfied to remain and to live for Christ in this little Western town. The town is Beaver City, Neb., and the preacher is Alexander Campbell Corbin.

MAP OF THE TRAVELS OF JESUS

For a period of Eighteen Months, beginning with January, 1900, the International Sunday-school Lessons will be on the Life of Jesus. Throughout Christendom millions of young and old will be learning again the story of the Man of Galilee. To properly understand the journeyings of Christ and his followers throughout Judea, Galilee and Samaria, a good, reliable Map is necessary. We are glad to be able to announce that we are prepared to furnish such a map at a very low price.

This map is the result of many years of labor, study and research by Rev. A. P. Stout. The map of the Travels of Jesus has been made a life-work by him. He designed it especially for Sunday-schools and Bible Classes. It is a large and correct map of Palestine at the time of Christ, showing in colors the Territorial Divisions according to the most recent explorations and surveys. Its large size, and clear, distinct style of lettering, have combined to produce a map that will be welcomed in every Sunday-school. No expense has been spared to make this map as near perfect as possible.

Strong lines of different colors show the Journeys of Jesus, beginning with the Nativity and ending with the Ascension. The most minute details of our Lord's itinerancy are distinctly shown, giving every act, incident, event, miracle, parable, etc., in the order in which they occurred in his life. Showing a complete chronological chain of events, which practically explain the worst seeming contradictions of the New Testament. The Journeys of Jesus are shown so simply and clearly that a child can comprehend. Every effort has been made to make this an improvement on any map of Palestine that has preceded it.

SIZE, 72 x 36 INCHES. PRICE, THREE DOLLARS.

VARNISHED, MOUNTED ON ROLLERS, READY TO HANG UP.

This Splendid Map has always been sold for FIVE DOLLARS. A short time ago we were fortunate enough to secure a lot of several hundred copies at a price that enables us to offer it at the greatly reduced rate of THREE DOLLARS. We pay mail or express charges. If your Sunday-school has not a copy of this map, it should secure one at once.

NOT A CHEAP PAPER BUT A CHEAP PRICE.

One dollar and fifty cents a year for such a paper as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is wonderfully cheap.

One dollar a year in clubs of twenty-five is the next thing to giving it away. Pastors, congregations, do you realize the opportunity?

Churches who fail to take advantage of our present club offer might as well resolve to keep silent hereafter about the great desire for a "Christian paper in every Christian home." Now is the time to demonstrate how great and earnest such desire is.

We have printed thousands of extra copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for January in order that new subscribers may have a complete file beginning with the first of the year if they so desire. If subscriptions continue to surge in as they have thus far, however, we will be unable to supply back numbers to those who are tardy in sending in their lists.

As would be naturally expected, the splendid improvements we have made in both appearance and contents, combined with astonishingly low rates of subscription, are bringing a perfect flood of new subscribers. This department is working all day and a part of the nights to fill orders promptly. We are not complaining, quite the reverse, and only make two requests of our friends: That they keep the tide rising and that they be patient if we are not quite as prompt as usual in our responses. We will try, however, to give all orders and communications immediate attention.

We are glad that we are able to tell our friends and readers that our efforts to furnish a really first-class journal at a low price are meeting with unprecedented encouragement of a substantial kind. Time and space will not permit us to go into details at this time, as we are too busy taking care of the "encouragement" to talk about it exhaustively. Time enough for that later on. But we will say that Missouri, Iowa and Illinois seem to be competing with each other for supremacy in sending in subscriptions for the best paper in the brotherhood. Not that other states are not active in this work of education, but the three states mentioned are leading in the matter. What is your church doing?

DO YOU GRASP THE SITUATION?

Two Dollars In Value For One Dollar In Cash.

Complaints are sometimes made that our offer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in clubs of twenty-five for one dollar each is a discrimination against smaller churches, and we are asked to make the rate without regard to the size of the club. We have two reasons for not doing this. First, as a business proposition we can send a given number of papers with less expense in large bundles than in small ones, because of the saving of labor in handling, keeping accounts, etc. Second, churches are very often prone to underestimate their ability in this matter and content themselves with a club of ten or fifteen when it should be twenty-five or fifty. Our object is to stimulate effort in arousing the church membership to the importance of good literature. If you think your church cannot possibly form a club of twenty-five, write to us telling us the number of members you have and explaining why you think a club of twenty five cannot be raised, also telling us what sized club you think is a possibility, and we will give the matter prompt and liberal consideration.

In making this club rate of one dollar we are offering, not a dollar paper, but one equal in all respects to the best two dollar and two dollar and a half religious journal in the land.

We are pledged to maintain the high quality of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in any event. As to whether the cheap club rate shall become a permanent thing the churches will decide by their actions. Remember that we mail the papers to individual addresses at this price, but do not receive single subscriptions for less than one dollar and fifty cents. If you desire the one dollar rate see that your church forms a club at once.

ARE YOU FORMING A CLUB IN YOUR CONGREGATION?

THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST

CURRENT EVENTS.

The situation in South Africa at the present moment is of the greatest possible interest. During the past week General Buller has been conducting a flanking movement by which his main force has been moved from a point on the south bank of the Tugela River and fifteen miles south of Ladysmith, to a position north of the river and about twenty miles west of Ladysmith. The main body of the Boers has at the same time moved westward and taken up a strong position on the hills immediately west of Ladysmith. The British lines are drawn out to a great length, since the flanking movement necessitates an extension far to the north, and at the same time it is impossible to relinquish entirely the former position near Colenso. The preliminary movements in this general formation were completed by Friday, and on Saturday the British advance began, narrowing the circle toward the besieged town, and at the same time pushing the flanking wing farther to the north. Fighting began at once, and for three days, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the British advanced slowly, dislodging the Boers from ridge after ridge, but without reaching their main position. General Warren's column, which had not gone east from Colenso, as was supposed, won an important position at Acton Homes, and Generals Cleary and Dundonald have been doing good work farther to the north and nearer to Ladysmith. The situation is one of great strategic interest, and calls for a display of the highest order of military science. But a maneuver such as that which Buller is undertaking demands a superior force, and it is feared that he has not enough men to carry it out. A long delay for re-enforcements would be fatal, for it would give the Boers time to strengthen and extend their intrenchments, and it may yet be necessary to risk a frontal attack on the main positions.

Germany shows a strong disinclination to consider the question of British seizures as settled, and from the amount of feeling which is being generated it seems inevitable that the projected agreement between Great Britian and Germany for the division of the Portuguese colonies will be indefinitely postponed. The German vessel, "Bundesrath" has been released after a detention of three weeks, but Germany wants a clear definition of future policy. Demands have been formulated by Count von Buelow and sent to Lord Salisbury and a reply has been received. Germany demands that her steamers be not molested north of Aden; Great Britain agrees that they shall not be searched on mere suspicion. Germany claims indemnity for the detention of the "Bundesrath," and other vessels which, when searched, are found to contain nothing contraband, and suggests arbitration to determine the amount; Great Britain agrees to pay the indemnity, but prefers to settle by diplomatic negotiation. It is to be noted that England has not in the least relinquished her right of search and detention, but the German press in general admits that she has shown a conciliatory spirit. It must be remembered that an immense naval appropriation bill, the passage of which is urged by the Kaiser, is to come before the present session of the Reichstag and any slight trouble with England which would help the prospects of this bill, especially any trouble involving the navy or the merchant marine, would not be unwelcome to the Kaiser.

A few weeks ago Archbishop Chapelle, of New Orleans, went out to the Philippines as an unofficial emissary of the administration. He was to explain to his fellow-Catholics, the Filipinos, that the government did not mean to do them any harm and he was sure that his assurances would speedily put an end to the insurrection. He has failed. The archbishop's presence, instead of producing pacification, produced something very like a panic and it has been necessary for Gen. Otis to explain to the insurgents that the archbishop does not mean them any harm. The sight of a Catholic dignitary at once suggested that the friars were about to be restored, and the terror resulting from this belief can be readily understood by any one who has read the story of the Dominicans in the Philippines. The Catholics in the islands are begging that the friars be not again forced upon them and are asking for priests not connected with the brotherhoods. Whatever his original intention may have been, it has become necessary for the archbishop to declare that the church has no intention of restoring the friars, and Gen. Otis has officially assured the Filipinos that the United States Government has no such purpose. That they should for a moment believe that our government would restore and support the tyranny of the friars, shows how little the insurgents know about the institutions which they are resisting.

The investigation of the cases of Roberts in the House of Representatives and Clark in the Senate is becoming more discouraging for those gentlemen. The probability now is that the first will not get his seat and the second will not keep his. The special committee which has been receiving evidence about Roberts has reached its conclusion and formulated its report. The committee is unanimously agreed upon the fact that Roberts has three wives; that two of them he married after polygamy had been legally abolished in Utah; that children have been born to him by his plural wives within the past three years; and that his polygamy was generally known among his constituents when they elected him. These facts were all brought out by testimony in the presence of Mr. Roberts, and he himself cross-examined the witnesses, but refused to testify. Six members of the committee favor excluding Mr. Roberts from the House of Representatives. The other two on constitutional grounds favor admitting and then expelling him. In either case it is clear that he will not represent Utah in the House. The moral for Utah lies in the committee's finding that Roberts was known to be a polygamist when he was elected. What ought to be done to a community which chooses a criminal as its representative, knowing him to be a criminal? The inquiry into the bribery charges against Senator Clark, of Montana, is still in progress. Judging from the present state of the matter, the outlook for Clark is not hopeful. It is a matter of congratulation that party lines are being largely disregarded in all of these investigations. The Democrats are not rallying around Clark and the scheme of giving Democratic votes for Quay in exchange for Republican votes for Clark has met with no encouragement.

The opening of the Chicago Drainage Canal has been completed by the lowering of the dam at Lockport, and Chicago's sewerage is now en route for the Gulf, via St. Louis. This last step in the opening was taken as hurriedly as the first, and with an evident fear that something would be done to prevent it. But the Lockport dam is of such construction that the current can be cut off at any time in five minutes. Proceedings looking to an injunction against the operation of the canal have been begun by the Missouri state authorities before the United States Supreme Court, and a bill will be submitted to Congress this week to prevent the pollution of navigable rivers and to investigate the extent to which this is now being done. The bill was at first opposed in committee by Congressman Mann, of Illinois, but opposition has been withdrawn. Obviously, the friends of the canal would gain little by opposing an investigation of its effects. It is estimated that it will take eighteen days for the current to travel from Chicago to St. Louis, and it is claimed by many that the water will purify itself in that time. An investigation is exactly what is wanted. The canal trustees have decided to memorialize Congress at once asking for an appropriation to turn the drainage canal into a ship canal. The estimated cost of the project is $25,000,000.

Frankfort, Ky., was last week the scene of an unfortunate and bloody affair, an impromptu duel with revolvers, resulting in the death of three men and the wounding of four others. It was the result of a quarrel of long standing between Col. Colson, ex-member of Congress, and Lieut. Scott. Colson and Scott were both officers in the Fourth Kentucky regiment in the war with Spain. Scott was charged by Colson with incompetency and insubordination, was tried by order of Gen. Wheeler and was discharged from the service. In some way, however, he got it "fixed" and remained with his regiment until it was mustered out. Since then the men have been looking for each other. In an encounter in a restaurant some time ago Colson was wounded, but the police authorities took no action. Meeting in the crowded office of a hotel in Frankfort, the two men opened fire on each other with the result stated. Scott was among the killed and Colson among the wounded. The latter has been placed under arrest and has been indicted by the grand jury for triple murder. Such affairs as this seem particularly apt to occur in certain states, but it would be unjust to allow such deeds to stain the name of Kentucky. We must wait and see what treatment she gives to the surviving criminal. Public opinion cannot infallibly prevent two men from drawing guns and firing on each other, but it can see to it that social position and political influence do not stand in the way of punishment.

For more than two months there have been active hostilities between Mexico and the Yaqui Indians. The territory in dispute is a large tract containing valuable deposits of gold in the northwestern corner of Mexico. The Mexican government dispossessed the Indians by trickery many years ago and leased the land to mining companies, many of which represent American capital. The Indians retired into the mountains and have ever since been a menace to the valleys of the Sonora and Yaqui Rivers, which are the most coveted part of the land. For several weeks the Indians have had the advantage and it is reported that the Twentieth Mexican Infantry has been almost annihilated in its repeated defeats, but the latest news is of an important engagement in which a band of Yaquis was surrounded and two hundred of them killed. Mining in the gold fields is suspended during the uprising. The Americans in the district generally favor the Indians, for they have been a peaceable tribe when undisturbed and have never interfered with the mining, whereas the Mexican government has in many cases found occasion to confiscate mining property on the ground of some technicality, as soon as it became conspicuously profitable.

Some of the Indians, whose tribal reservations have lately been converted into individual holdings, seem to have a reasonable grievance. Considerable parts of this communal land was held by whites under leases which expired Jan. 1, 1900. At the same time when the Choctaws, Chickasaws and Creeks agreed to the allotment of their land in severalty, the government promised to give them peaceable possession of their respective allotments, and also assured the whites that they would receive compensation for the permanent improvements which they had put upon the land thus surrendered. The time has come for surrender, but the claims of the whites for the said compensation have not yet been adjudicated and meanwhile, they are holding on to the land. The "peaceable possession" is not forthcoming.

The great Trans-Siberian railroad is nearing completion. It has lately been discovered that owing to official corruption in various quarters there has been much defective work which must be done over before the road can be opened. Light rails have been laid, bridges have been built of wood instead of stone and iron, tressels have been carelessly constructed, and millions must be spent in making good these defects. This will involve delay—how long it is impossible to say—and the delay in the completion of this great highway to the far East may make Russia for a time more cautious in those aggressions which may lead to war on the border of Afghanistan and in Korea. When this great road is completed the distance by rail from Paris to Port Arthur will be 7,060 miles and the journey will consume something less than two weeks. The road across Siberia will not be perfect enough to allow a very high rate of speed. The time at present, via the Suez Canal, is about thirty-five days and the fare in the neighborhood of $375. The railroad fare, first-class, from St. Petersburg to Port Arthur or Vladivostock will be $86 on the extra trains with library, dining, bathing and gymnasium cars. The gymnasium car is a novelty, which will be appreciated on a railroad journey lasting two weeks.

Mr. Pettigrew's resolution calling upon the President for various specific items of information about the Philippines was defeated by a vote of 41 to 20 and Mr. Hoar's substitute, calling for information in so far as the President thought compatible with public interests, was adopted in its stead. Mr. Pettigrew in supporting his resolution said that the "public interest," as interpreted by the chief executive of this nation, meant his own chance of re-election, and he therefore wished to leave him no discretion in the matter of furnishing information. Taken altogether, the resolution and the argument for it amounted to what in the House of Commons would be a vote of want of confidence in the ministry. Its failure was not surprising. The date for the vote on the Senate financial bill has been fixed at Feb. 15.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

In an editorial last week we emphasized the need of a general revival of New Testament Christianity among all the churches of the country. Nothing, we believe, would do so much to correct the thousand ills which afflict the body politic and ecclesiastic. It is our purpose now, in a few articles, to set forth some of those truths which are causally and vitally related to such revivals. Religious awakenings do not lie wholly within the sphere of human causation, but they are, nevertheless, dependent upon human agency. Neither do they lie outside the realm of cause and effect. No true revival of religion ever happened, nor did one ever come without the proclamation or reproclamation of certain neglected truths which are essentially related to vital Christianity. What are some of those truths, the emphasis of which is likely to bring about that spiritual revival which the church needs in order to accomplish its mission in the world?

I. Man's personal accountability to God. It is not without consideration of the question of logical order that we mention first the truth of human responsibility and accountability to God. A number of influences have contributed to undermine, overlay or neutralize the force of this fundamental fact in human nature. A great deal has been said about the influence of heredity and environment as determining man's character and destiny. That these are powerful factors in molding character is not denied, but when they are pushed to an extent that deadens the sense of responsibility and of man's free agency, they are pushed to an unwarranted extent. Man is not the helpless creature of circumstances that such a theory represents him as being. This view of man as the helpless child of fate, under the irresistible influence of heredity and environment, finds its main support in materialistic science. But theology likewise has contributed its share in deadening the sense of human responsibility. Its doctrine of total hereditary depravity, as interpreted by the old school of theologians, landed men in the same helpless condition. By reason of heredity and inherited guilt he was said to be wholly incapable of thinking a good thought, performing a good deed or putting forth any effort whatever by which he might help to extricate himself from his awful condition of moral ruin. He must simply wait for God's omnipotence to act upon him. It is true, this theory has been greatly modified in recent years, but the paralyzing influence of the former view has not ceased, even unto this day.

Unfortunately, this fatalistic view of man's condition and destiny falls in very naturally with the depraved tastes and habits of men. It is a doctrine rather full of comfort for them. "We cannot help what we are; we are the creatures of circumstances; therefore we are not responsible. There is no use in resisting the inevitable, and there is nothing to do, therefore, but to follow our impulses." Such is the easy logic of men who are always seeking a justification for continuing in their evil ways. It would no doubt be surprising if we knew how many people there are to-day that solace themselves with the theory that there is but little guilt, if any, attaching to their conduct, wrong though it be, because of the circumstances which have surrounded them, and because of the temperaments which they have received by heredity. This view of life is far more prevalent than we may imagine. It sparkles and effervesces on the brightest pages of our magazine literature. It is woven into modern fiction. It comes, too, in the garb of philosophy and presents its opiates to the conscience in the name of the highest learning. The one fact in the universe which it seeks to belittle, cover up or deny, is the awful fact of sin. Let them once overthrow the fact of sin, and they feel that they have overthrown the whole system which has for its end the salvation of men from sin.

It is apparent, from these considerations, why we place the great truth of man's accountability to God for his conduct and character first in the category of truths to be emphasized in order to a revival or religious awakening. The antidote for all this false philosophy and theology is a true biblical anthropology, or Bible view of man. The scriptural truth that man was created in the image of God, and is therefore a free moral agent, possessing volition, or the power of choice, must be made to rise above these false speculations as the Matterhorn or Jungfrau rise above the low-lying fogs of the valley. Here is a true beginning corner —the Bible view of man. Fortunately, this view of human responsibility can be reinforced and proven by every man's consciousness. In spite of all the sophism that has been spun out to prove that man is a machine, acting only as he is acted upon, every man is conscious of the fact that he possesses the power to do or not to do certain things, the doing or not doing of which involves blameworthiness. The accusing conscience is the fact which every moral being is aware of, and he is no less aware of the fact that the conscience never accuses where there is no responsibility. It will be an easy matter, therefore, for the preacher of righteousness to arraign every man at the bar of his own conscience until he trembles in view of his responsibility and of his accountability to God. There is such perfect harmony between the teaching of the Scriptures and the testimony of our own consciences that there is absolutely no room for doubt as to the fact of human responsibility and therefore of human guilt.

It is not worth while for any preacher to spend much time in pointing out the way of salvation to men who have no consciousness of guilt, and who feel no great need of salvation. Many mistakes have been made at this point. Preachers have meant well, but they have often begun at the wrong place. The great truth of man's accountability to God must be made to stand out with such force as to carry conviction to the heart. When this is done, and not until then, is the ground clear to deal with the problem of sin and its remedy. The secret of power with such men as the late Mr. Moody is their ability to make men recognize the fact of their accountability, and to realize that they are sinners before God and need salvation. This was illustrated and enforced in so many ways by Mr. Moody, that the truth was driven home to the conscience with a force which no sophistry could evade. This quality has entered into every great evangelist from the apostle Paul to Dwight L. Moody.

We conclude, therefore, that if we are to have any such widespread revival as Mr. Moody was hoping for, and as we would all like to see sweep over the country, it must be preceded by the most earnest, incisive preaching, which shall find its way to the conscience through all sophistries and lay bare the fact of human guilt. Men of faith in God and in His Word must stand before the waiting multitudes and make them see that God has made them the arbiters of their own destinies, moral and accountable beings whose choices of good or evil determine their character and therefore their destiny. The human will must be recognized as the regnant power in human life, and men must be made to see that as they have chosen sin and have realized some of its fruits, so they must reverse their choice and choose righteousness that they may enjoy fruit unto life eternal. This is one of the great revival truths which must be burned into the hearts and consciences of men until they feel there is no escape for them who "neglect so great salvation."

In the Outlook for January 10 Dr. George Adam Smith has a tribute to Mr. Moody which is creditable alike to Mr. Smith and Mr. Moody. Referring to Mr. Moody's largeness of mind in working with men with whom he differed, Dr. Smith said:

> No one will ever know how much Mr. Moody had to bear, even from those who worked with him, of reproach and abuse for his loyalty to Christians who differed from certain of his views; yet, some of that injustice has already come before the public. He was bitterly blamed for the way he stuck to Drummond, and for the invitations he gave to Drummond in 1893 to speak at Northfield. Now, this loyalty came not merely from his loving heart. It was the large, fair mind which prevailed over what he might well have felt was due to at least the earnest and good-tempered among the opponents of Drummond's teaching. He had never allowed the accent and proportion of Drummond's message, although so different from his own, to blind him to its essential Christianity. "I have never," he said at the time when Drummond was most hotly attacked, "heard anything or read anything by Drummond with which I did not heartily agree—though I wish he would oftener speak on the atonement." It may not be known that, after the expostulations reached him against having Drummond at Northfield, he nevertheless invited his former lieutenant to join him in the evangelistic campaign which he conducted in Chicago during the time of the Exposition.

Dr. Smith himself was invited to speak at Northfield after Mr. Moody had heard him. He had the wisdom to see his ripe scholarship and his profound Christian spirit, although disagreeing in toto with his views of Old Testament criticism. It takes a large-minded man to do that. But Moody is not the only man that has been "bitterly blamed" for recognizing the worth of men whose views he could not fully endorse, nor will he be the last.

Ruskin is dead. The news carries with it a shock as one remembers that he was the last of the great men of his generation. Of that rare group of giants on both sides of the Atlantic who were born near the beginning and flourished near the middle of the century, Ruskin was the last to pass away in England, as Lowell was the last to pass from among us in America. Critic of art and life, a reformer in English painting, an artist in political economy and social problems, our century has not seen a richer nature or a heart of wider sympathies. But his work was fully done. Great as was his prime, his old age was sad and weak and unproductive. In his quiet home at Brantwood, among the English lakes, the years went by which carried him farther and farther from the generations which he had known and among which he had worked. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST next week will contain a picture of Ruskin's country home during his last years and an account of a visit to it.

Hour of Prayer.

RELIGION IN COMMON CONVERSATION.

(Mal. 3:16-18; Luke 24:13-32.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Jan 31.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Religion being the supreme interest of life, should have a place in our conversation, because "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

Our conception of religion has much to do in determining what place we give it in our life. If we think of it as related solely to one department of our nature and one class of interests, we will be likely to circumscribe it within certain holy days and holy places. If, on the other hand, we think of religion as the great regulative principle of human life and conduct, having to do, not with one day of the week alone, but with all the days of the week; not with one section of human interests, but with all that affects human welfare, it seems quite reasonable, then, that we should give it a place in our daily life and thought and conversation. The latter is no doubt the true conception of religion, and the more it prevails among us the more will religion become a matter of practical concern and the theme of our daily conversation.

As far back as the time of Malachi it is written that "they that feared the Lord spake one with another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." It is evident from the connection that they spake one with another concerning the law of the Lord and the interests of his cause. What more natural than that? When men representing any common calling or profession in life meet, what is more natural than they should talk together about those things in which they have a common interest? So did those pious men of the old dispensation, and the Lord hearkened. He not only heard what they said, but "a book of remembrance was written before him," and their names were recorded. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in the day that I do make, even a peculiar treasure; and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

It may be set down as certain that when we meet together now, as Christians, the Lord hears our conversation; He takes note of what we are saying. Is it of such a character that He can approve? Will He write it in a book of remembrance before Him? Will we be ashamed to face it in that day when the books are opened, and when we shall be judged by the things that are written in the books?

That is a beautiful picture drawn by Luke: It is the first Easter morning. At the early dawn Jesus had risen from the tomb and had been seen by Mary and some of the disciples. But two of the other disciples are taking a walk through the country to the village of Emmaus. They had heard the strange rumor that Jesus had risen from the dead, but had not given it sufficient credence to remain in the city. But as they walked together they communed with each other of all these things which had happened. What a glorious theme of meditation and conversation! What mighty thoughts it must have stirred within their hearts! It is not strange that in such a frame of mind, "while they communed and questioned together, that Jesus Himself drew near and went with them." O, blessed companionship! "But their eyes were holden that they should not know Him." But He knew them, and what is more, He knew the theme of their conversation and the very thoughts of their hearts. And yet, He asks the question: "What communications are these that ye have one with another, as ye walk?" This was a question that went home to their hearts. They stopped still in the road, looking sadly in each others' faces, and perhaps at the stranger. When they afterward learned who it was who walked with them and who came into their humble abiding-place and ate with them and explained to them the Scriptures, then they said one to another: "Was not our heart burning within us while He spake to us in the way, while He opened to us the Scriptures?"

Suppose, however, their theme of conversation that blessed Lord's day had been something quite different—something that was of the world and worldly. Think you Jesus would have joined them in the journey and opened to them the Scriptures? It is only to those who think of Him and who study His word that He manifests Himself. He would be an intruder to come to those who would not welcome Him. He knew where He was welcome when He was here on earth, and He knows the homes and the hearts that welcome His coming now.

It is only necessary to give Christianity its true place in our hearts for it to find its true place in our conversation, one with another. Religion, like love, which is its essence, "doth not behave itself unseemly"—does not thrust itself in where it is not wanted. It may be set down as an indication of a feeble faith and a weak type of Christian life that is ashamed to make Christ and His religion the theme of conversation in any proper place and under any proper surroundings. It is to be regretted that many Christians falter and hesitate to speak of religion even in the prayer-meeting. This timidity or cowardice we should strive to overcome.

PRAYER.

Almighty God our Father: We thank Thee for the revelation of Thyself through Jesus Christ our Lord, through whom we are made partakers of the divine nature. We thank Thee for the great themes presented to us in the gospel of Thy grace, themes so deep and so broad as to challenge our intellects, quicken our imaginations and enlarge our hearts. So fill our minds, we pray Thee, with these heavenly themes, that we may speak one to another concerning them, and so help each other to a better understanding of Thy Word and encourage one another in our mutual struggle to live the Christian life. Bless us with larger visions of Thy truth, and above all, with greater love for Christ and a closer communion with Him, until our hearts shall burn within us as we journey along our pilgrim way. We ask it in Christ's name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

These are some Lord's day meditations. The preacher was telling us to-day about character transformation through the renewal of the mind, based on the familiar passage in Romans 12. It was a needed emphasis of an old truth. "Man is not a stone or a piece of metal to be polished from the outside, but he is a heart to be purified, a mind to be renewed, a spirit to be inspired, a personality to be transformed." This transfiguration of character is not an act but a process. "The eternal method of God is from within outward." David hit upon the right idea, when after his great sin he prayed: "Create within me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." It would not have sufficed for the Lord to have extended forgiveness without this inward work of cleansing and renewal. Make the tree good, said Jesus, and the fruit will be good. What is there on this earth to be compared with this transforming process in the individual life and character? Only those in whom this process of becoming Godlike is going on are "being saved," in the highest and best meaning of that word. No matter what outward calamity may befall a man, if he is being tranformed by the renewal of his mind he has reason to be profoundly grateful; his life is a success, however the world may judge it.

The preacher reminded us, however, that this transformation was a means to an end, that end being service to humanity. Even the transfiguration scene in the life of Jesus was only an incident in his life work. Raphael rightly brings the healing scene and the transfiguration scene in the same picture. This inward glory which was in Christ, shining out through his body and his raiment, would serve to encourage and strengthen him for his great work as well as his disciples. Peter, in his enthusiasm, not understanding at that time the meaning of what he had witnessed, was for remaining upon this mountain-top of glory. He learned later, however, that this was but to fit him and the other disciples, as well as the Master himself, for the labors and trials that awaited them. It is a glorious thing, occasionally, to have a mountain-top view of things spiritual and eternal, to feel our souls enraptured with the vision of divine realities. But these are to be regarded, not as the end of our being, but as incidents in the life of toil, and intended to fit us better for the service which God desires us to render. Those who would always be enjoying the Vision Splendid mistake the true meaning of life, which is service and not ecstasy. Let us indeed be grateful for the glimpses through the rifted clouds of the infinite azure, but let us not fail to heal, instruct and save our fellowmen when such a vision is denied us.

This is one of those calm, bright and beautiful Lord's days which seem to bring heaven and earth nearer together. The churches are crowded with worshipers and the blue sky seems to shed a benediction over all the land. And yet, in the midst of all this calm and quiet, we have been thinking of those vast armies, desperate and determined, which are confronting each other in the throes of battle in South Africa. While we are worshiping here to-day, in peace and quiet, these armies are engaged in a life-and-death struggle, the end of which no man can foresee, but the effect of which we shall all ultimately feel. No doubt many of our readers have experienced, what we have, of sailing on ocean or lake on a calm, bright day, when a heavy sea was rolling, and learned, on inquiry, that a storm was raging on a distant part of the lake or ocean. Such is the solidarity of the race that whatever seriously disturbs one continent is soon felt more or less by every other continent. If the acoustic properties of the earth were sufficient, our ears would be greeted to-day with the roar of cannon, the shriek of bursting shells and the rattle of musketry, with an undertone of groans of the wounded and dying. It is well for us, however, that distance conceals these sights and sounds from us, and deadens somewhat the awful impression which they would otherwise make. We cannot, however, and ought not to feel indifferent about war in any part of the globe. Is not the sky the roof of but one family? Is not God the Father of us all? May the feeling of human brotherhood soon triumph over national selfishness and usher in the era of universal and perpetual peace!

Questions and Answers.

Is there any Scripture that states or goes to prove that Christ's material body arose from the tomb? E.

Yes, every account of the resurrection of Jesus states, or implies, that his body came forth from the tomb in which it was placed. Else how is it that John and Peter, when they ran to the tomb, found it empty and the stone rolled away? Why Mary's grief that they had taken away her Lord, and she knew not were they had laid Him? Else why were the Roman soldiers bribed to say that while they slept the disciples came and stole the body? On any other hypothesis how could Jesus have shown his wounded hands and side to Thomas and asked him to examine them?

Please define, in CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "higher criticism." What is it?

Perry, Mo. B. J. Coyle.

"Higher criticism" is the name given to the literary and historical investigation of ancient literature of any kind. It has been widely applied to the ancient books of the Ethnic Religions and to other ancient literatures, as well as to the Bible. As applied to the Bible it has for its object the investigation of the historical situations out of which the various books arose, together with such literary features and characteristics as would throw light upon the date or authorship of the books. This name has been given to this sort of criticism, to distinguish it from lower or textual criticism, which has for its object the comparison of various manuscripts of the Bible, in existence, with a view of securing the purest text. The word "higher" was perhaps unfortunate, and it has provoked a great deal of criticism that has been anything but high in its character. The thing for which the name stands is undoubtedly legitimate and inevitable. But like many another lawful things it has been abused by many who have brought to their work rationalistic presuppositions which have made their criticism of a destructive rather than a constructive type. Well-informed people, however, distinguish between the use and abuse of what is legitimate within itself.

George Park Fisher, D.D.,LL.D., says in his history of "the Christian Church," p. 565, "The dissent of Campbell and his followers from some of the opinions of the Baptists led, in 1827, to his exclusion from their fellowship." Is this true? Where is a true account of Campbell's relationship with Baptists to be found? T. Nelson Kincaid.

The statement is not historically correct. After Mr. Campbell had adopted immersion and had become identified, he and the Brush Run Church, with the Redstone Baptist Association, there was some opposition to him, chiefly because of a sermon which he preached before the association on the law, in which he developed his doctrine concerning the distinction between the law and the gospel, or the Jewish and Christian dispensations. In spite of this opposition, however, which came up at each annual meeting of the association, Mr. Campbell was able to hold his own. Feeling, however, that his work of reformation was being handicapped by this factious opposition, he left the association, uniting with another, viz., the Mahoning Association. Here the seeds of the Reformation found more congenial soil, and this association went with him in the work of reformation. Had he been excluded from the Redstone Association, he could hardly have been received into the Mahonnig. An account of this change may be found in the Memoirs of Alexander Campbell by Dr. Richardson.

Current Religious Thought.

In the Atlantic Monthly for January there is an article by William DeWitt Hyde, president of Bowdoin College, on Reform in Theological Education. The whole question of present-day ministerial requirements, says the writer, involves a contrast between two conceptions of theology, two types of minister, two plans of theological education. The first conception of theology is as a finished system of divine truth. God is conceived as a being beyond the clouds who has occasionally broken into the world to promulgate his laws, inflict his vengeance and rescue his favorites. Man's salvation depends upon his rightly apprehending the system and the exact letter of the law which God miraculously revealed. In the second conception of theology, God is not so much an arbitrary authority outside of the world, as the spirit of love and sacrifice within it. All righteous legislation and all moral insight, both Jewish and Christian, are the progressive unfolding of his will. Christ is the well-authenticated Son of God, because righteousness and mercy became his constant meat and drink and the spirit of love, which is the Spirit of God, was without measure upon him. Sin is selfishness. Salvation is restoration to the lost life of love, and it can come only by a personal sharing of the sinner's sorrow and shame, of which the cross of Christ is the perfect example. Heaven is not only a hoped for reward, but a present experience of the joys of love and the glory of service and sacrifice, and concern for sinners busies itself more with their present degradation than with an impending doom.

To each of these conceptions of theology corresponds a type of minister. The first preaches the formal theology with its supraterrestrial God, its rigid scheme of promises, conditions, rewards and punishments. He deals with sin in the lump, if not actually in the abstract. His natural common sense and moral earnestness put him on the right side of most public issues and give some content of reality to the otherwise empty theological outline, and his personal character often gains for him a place of great influence in the community. The second type of minister finds his starting-point not in the fall of man and the inherent wickedness of the race, but in appreciation of the beauty and joy and worth of human life, and he sees an embodiment of the love of God in all the pure and ennobling relations, the loves and friendships, the honest work, the independent self-respect, the loyal citizenship. He sees all phases of human life, not as unrelated fragments to be viewed with general sympathy, but as elements to be interpreted as parts of a vital whole. He will not countenance a religion too otherworldly to make its influence felt in trade and politics and home. He knows no division between things sacred and things secular, because things secular are made sacred. Religion is viewed, not as a department of life, but as a spirit and force which must control the whole of life. Hence the joys and sorrows, successes and failures of all his people are a matter of concern to him.

Two plans of theological education correspond to these two conceptions of theology and types of minister. The first plan is that generally in force in the seminaries. It consists usually of five parts: Hebrew and Greek to get at the text of divine laws of the old and new covenants, dogmatic theology which weaves these scriptural truths into a system, church history which deals with the work of former theologians and shows the institutions in which Christian truth has embodied itself in times past, and homiletics, the art of fitting a doctrine to a text and proclaiming it convincingly. The method employed is generally that of lectures, in which the student receives passively the material delivered to him without original thinking or investigation. Such a plan, operated by professors who have duly signed the creed, is fitted to produce ministers who will preach the creed, the whole creed and nothing but the creed. The second plan includes most of the above subjects, but approaches them by a different method. The historical spirit is prominent. Investigation and research take the place of the reception of ready-prepared material. The object is to teach the student to solve the problems which arise, and to this end problems are suggested to him and he is required to work at them by the laboratory method. The student's theology will thus be in a measure the product of his own thinking. It will, therefore, be something which he can handle and apply and reconstruct as the need arises.

To effect the transition from the first plan of theological education to the second plan which will produce the second type of minister with the second conception of theology, President Hyde recommends the following specific reforms: (1) Let no indiscriminate financial aid be given to ministerial students; it tempts idlers and degenerates into the ranks. (2) Maintain a high grade of scholarship and rigidly exclude the weaklings. The training of a man is an arduous process which cannot be rushed through by any short cut. The minister must be taught to endure intellectual hardship equal at least to that of professions like engineering and journalism, which have less to say about consecration and self-sacrifice. (3) Theological seminaries must not tie their professors to a creed. If they believe it, they will teach it without signing it. If they do not believe it, they will shuffle and explain it away. (4) Secular studies must be carried on by the side of the traditional theological studies through the course, especially philosophy, ethics, sociology, economics and literaure. (5) The method of instruction must be more individual. It must demand of the student, an attitude not of passive receptivity, but of active, independent and original investigation, as is demanded in any other sort of graduate study.

USES OF THE RELIGIOUS PAPER.—II.

The Spirit and the Press.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

The church is the earthly abode of the Holy Spirit. By divine promise he dwells in the heart of every true Christian; but in some in much larger measures than in others. In view of this an important question arises: Can we draw larger measures of this Spirit from its earthly fountain? And if so, by what means? There is no greater question than this, in our time.

The conditions of receiving the Holy Spirit from God are given in the Scriptures, but the reason for them is not stated. From all that is said on the subject, and from what we are taught concerning God and know of our own nature, there is good reason to believe that these conditions are not arbitrary, but that they conform to the nature of God and the laws of the human mind, and cannot be essentially different so long as these remain the same. From all that we can discern of the nature of things, the spiritual element in baptism is the necessary condition of the divine inflow, just as the Scriptures make it. But if baptism is regarded—as it commonly is—as a mere outward act, it has no rightful place as a condition of the reception of the Holy Spirit.

Whatever may be thought regarding the conditions of the divine bestowment, there need be no doubt about this earthly source. The food that enters the circulation of the body through digestion is dead matter; but as soon as any particle, in its passage through the capillaries, takes its place as a part of the living body, it immediately becomes alive and possesses sensation and other vital functions, and this life is received from contact with adjacent tissues. Life by contact is, in like manner, one of the most universal facts of the spiritual world. Laughter provokes laughter, weeping causes weeping, the angry word brings another in return, kindness begets kindness, the spectacle of heroism fires the heart, and every element of the Christian spirit is contagious. When Christ was on earth he breathed upon his disciples and bade them receive the Holy Spirit.

The orator breathes on his audience and sets them on fire with his own passion. Charlemagne breathed upon men the spirit of war and the whole world grew martial. There is no sublimer spectacle than that of a great man giving his spirit to an entire generation. There is much also in numbers. How immense the spiritual uplift of our great conventions. They are verily great spiritual baptisms, vast channels of the inflow of the divine Spirit. But we cannot often listen to impassioned oratory, and these conventions do not often come. When they do, it is to but a small fraction of our people, and even these conventions could not well be without another agency—the religious press. The religious press is the great and almost the sole means of receiving the spirit from the larger brotherhood. It is a river flowing from this vast fountain.

But, as the moon reflects the light of the sun without its heat, is not the spirit of a writer lost in "cold type?" May not our papers, therefore, be valueless as means of conveying the Spirit? Type is not cold unless the man behind it be cold. True, the influence of bodily presence, gesture and intonation of voice may add much to the force of expression; but written words are not passionless. Behold yon maiden weeping over her novel! Is the page cold? Demosthenes' philippics are still hot. Shakespeare's plays are still hot or they would not live. In 1872 I heard Isaac Errett grow eloquent in one of his masterpieces. He bore his audience with him into the unseen and they forgot that they were in the body. It was a sublime spectacle and I was much moved, but not more than I have been by the reading of some books. The young writer is not long in discovering that the pen is wonderfully pliant to the state of the soul and that he may easily say more than he intends; that his moods as well as his thoughts go on paper with astonishing completeness, and that it requires a distinct effort to prevent their doing so. You can weep with your pen; and with it you can write great, hot words that will make other hearts burn with your own passion.

Yet, there is a difference between written and oral expressions. The man who writes is more reflective than the man who speaks, and he who reads is more reflective than he who listens to speaking. The result is that the influence of the living speaker is more intense and less permanent, while that of the writer is more gentle and more lasting. The speaker may rouse an emotional storm for an hour; the writer may raise a gradually swelling tide for a generation. The press, by its very nature, is fitted to be one of the mightiest if not the mightiest of all instruments of spiritual growth. In raising the gradually increasing interest of a presidential campaign, until it bursts in fever heat upon the polls, how insignificant is every other agency beside the press. How little popular oratory has to do with the vast enthusiasm. Its power would be as nothing were it not made thousand-tongued and far-voiced by the multiplications of the press. Its heat reaches the million alone through the press, and therein ceases to be oratory and becomes writing. As the moon sits far away in the heavens and silently draws the tides around the earth, so the press silently rules the great tides of human feeling that sweep over the world.

The press is the voice of the Zeit-geist, the spirit of the age; and you cannot well get away from this. Lecky has shown that the mightiest intellects do not escape it. The leaders of human thought speak through the press, and now more than ever through the periodical press, which has become the maker of public opinion. Merchant tailors make our garments, and we wear them; the press makes our thoughts, and we think them; it sends forth a spirit, and we unconsciously drink it in. The sound of a rushing, mighty wind and a storm of fiery tongues, and one tongue rests on each home! It is the baptism of the world-spirit. Where is our miracle to match it? We may well tremble while we ask, Where? The world has stolen our Pentecost. This is not mere theory. Mr Sheldon has startled the church by tearing off the mask and asking the frank question, "What would Jesus do?" But there is a more terrible question behind this: Do I possess the Spirit of Christ? Of a frightfully large number of professing Christians it must be answered, No. And yet, these awful words are tolling from the Great Book: "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Why let these multitudes go on in the belief that they are Christians till they hear the sentence from the Master's own lips, "I never knew you?" Why displace the Christian standard of acceptance?

We preach the conditions of the reception of the Holy Spirit and think because we have complied with them—in a way—that we possess it. Why not let common sense in on our theological dream? Whether we have the Holy Spirit or not is an easy matter to determine. If we have it we are ready to "walk in his steps;" for he did what he did because of the spirit that was in him. Do we feel as he did? Do we will as he did? If not, the matter is settled—we are not his.

The matter of the possession of the Holy Spirit is not what it was in the apostolic age. The Spirit can be quenched, and it is being quenched far and wide by the mightiest world-power extant, which was not even born in Christ's time. Shall we shut our eyes to this and be content to ape apostolic ways? If so, it shall be written on the wall not far hence, "Weighed . . . and found wanting." Where is our power to meet this maker of the spirit of the age which is molding the spirit of our churches? Nowhere, if not in the press.

The editor is not greater than other men, but he has a miraculous art—that of indefinitely multiplying himself. The smallest pigmy in Africa could conquer the world if he had the power of infinite self-multiplication. The writer has also another power—that of ubiquity. The great orator can be heard by but a few thousands; the writer may be heard by millions. In our own brotherhood there are six thousand preachers and half a dozen editors. The multitudes must be served in the pulpit, with rare exceptions, by ordinary men; they may be served through the press by the few very best. Giants may thunder over the world in the press and be heard in every cabin; and they can be met in our pulpits only by common men. What must be the issue? Outnumbered and outweighed! Have we lost all sense of dynamics? Shall we ever be trying to make an ounce weigh more than a pound? Shall we stand condemned in this awful time by our very arithmetic? The world has stolen the old miracle of the fiery tongues; shall we not snatch of its fire and be saved? The world-spirit is not homogeneous; it is particolored; it has its upper and its nether side. Shall we receive the baptism of its secular tongues alone and be lost? Let us not mistake; there is a new condition of the possession of the Holy Spirit by the church in our time. That condition is a strong, spiritual, widely read religious press. It is a supreme duty of every minister of the gospel to select that Christian paper which breathes most fully the Spirit of Christ and place it in every family and see that it is read. It is not simply that it is a "good thing;" it is a question of preventing a tremendous spiritual leakage. It is a question of salvation from a complete secularization of the churches, from ignominious defeat on the battlefield of the world's great spiritual forces. "But it is not commanded in the Scriptures that I should take a religious paper." Shame on you! Is it not written across the heavens? Can you not "discern the signs of the times?" Shall we give perpetual evidence of a simian origin by aping old ways when a trumpet is in our ears telling of present danger? Shall we cling to the forms of the past without its spirit? The future is for men, for those who can see. Shall we trot forever in our little circle and be lost? The forces of this great age will not wait on our stupidity.

Let us lay our hand on this monster that is stealing the heart of the church and tame it with its own magic--and let us do it quickly!

HACKETT ON REMISSION OF SINS.

A. B. JONES.

H. B. Hackett is recognized as standing among the best of scholars and biblical critics. His commentary on the Book of Acts is a standard work, so considered generally I believe. As a critical commentator he is clear, bold, strong and broad. In his notes on Acts 10:43, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins," he is very clear, very explicit; so much so, that it is impossible to misunderstand him, though not impossible to misrepresent him. His comment on the first clause, "to him give all the prophets witness," is this: "For this one testify all the prophets." On the phrase, "through his name" he comments thus: "Through HIM as possessing the attributes and sustaining to men the relations of which his name is the index."

Concerning the clause, "whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins," he says: "This clause presents two ideas: first, that the condition of pardon is faith in Christ, and secondly, that this condition brings the attainment of pardon within the reach of all." Is that all he says? Is not that enough to be clear to an ordinary mind? "The condition of pardon is faith in Christ." That clause itself would seem to be sufficient. Had he said "one condition" or "a condition of pardon is faith in Christ," we would have been ready to inquire, "What other conditions, Mr. Hackett, are necessary in order to pardon?" But when he says "the condition of pardon is faith in Christ" we are not inclined to ask that question. However, lest some disingenuous disputer might be led to do so, he adds, "and secondly, that this condition brings the attainment of pardon within the reach of all." Is it necessary to add anything more? Well, the human mind—some human minds are queer things. And lest some such might yet misconceive his meaning, Mr. Hackett adds still another explanatory clause to his exegesis of Acts 10:43, as follows: "Every one who believes on him shall receive remission of sins." How is that? Do you really mean it—every one?" Yes. "Every one who believes?" Yes. "Every one who believes on him shall receive?" Yes. "Every one who believes on him shall receive remission of sins?"

Now, Mr. Hackett, will you please state, in one full utterance, your exegesis of Acts 10:43, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins?" I will: "For this one testify all the prophets. Through him, as possessing the attributes and sustaining to men the relations of which his name is the index. The condition of pardon is faith in Christ; and this condition brings the attainment of pardon within the reach of all; every one who believes on him shall receive remission of sins."

Indeed, that seems plain enough. Briefly, then, you mean to say that this passage teaches that the prophets testify that through the suffering, atoning Savior, God will forgive the sins of all who trust in him; and that, without any other condition—without baptism, for instance? That is what I mean.

But, Mr. Hackett, there are quibblers abroad in the land. Does the English language give you possible scope in which to be any more explicit and definite? O, yes; the possibilities of our language are almost unlimited for the clear presentation of thought. That there may be no chance to misconstrue, misinterpret or misapply my views on this subject I refer you to my exegesis of a similar passage of Scripture, in Acts 13:39, where I say: "Faith in Christ is the ONLY condition annexed to forgiveness."

Now, it is intelligible to ordinary intelligence that H. B. Hackett teaches that faith in Christ is the only condition between the sinner and his forgiveness of God, in some sense.

In this same volume, in his commentary on Acts 2:38, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," Mr. Hackett gives the following exegesis of the phrase "in order to the remission of sins:" "We connect this naturally with both the preceding verbs. This clause states the motive or object which should induce them to repent and be baptized. It enforces the entire exhortation, not one part of it to the exclusion of the other."

Nothing can be clearer than that. According to Hackett, then, baptism stands between the sinner and his forgiveness, in some sense.

The exegesis of the foregoing passages of the Word of God is not peculiar to Dr. Hackett. The scholarship of Protestant Christendom is in complete harmony with Dr. Hackett in his interpretations of these Scriptures. This fact is so well known, so manifest on the face of the theological literature of the age, that it is unnecessary to quote from other authorities on this subject. Now it is a fact, and a fact to be deplored, that there are partisans, men of narrow views, on both sides of the question involved in these interpretations. On the one side there are men who see clearly the great, fundamental truth of New Testament Christianity, the essential point in Paul's masterful argument in his epistles to the Romans and to the Galatians, and the backbone principle of the Reformation of the sixteenth century—that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is the only condition which interposes between the sinner and his Father's forgiveness. They repudiated the idea that baptism is, in any sense, in order to the remission of sins. On the other side there are men who deny, stoutly deny, that according to the Scriptures remission of sins, in any sense, can be received or enenjoyed until the party is baptized. And thus the contention goes on. All this, too, in spite of the fact that the uniform verdict of enlightened biblical criticism is positively against the partisan controversy, and in favor of a broader view of religious truth.

OUR EDUCATIONAL NEEDS.

J. L. DARSIE.

After sixty years of the most strenuous effort for the permanent endowment of our educational institutions, our people have accumulated only about $800,000—an average of less than $14,000 per year—a sum which would not exceed the ability of many of our individual congregations. The great American idea of show and material display has so far dominated our plans that we have expended most of our means on buildings, to the neglect of the more important item of permanent endowment. Brick and mortar do not make colleges; indeed, they are not even an essential part of educational work. Some of the greatest institutions in the world practically exist without buildings. It requires men to make educational establishments, and to get men we must have money.

While no greater misfortune could befall a church than to be liberally endowed, the lack of endowment will always defeat efficient educational work; indeed, the very existence of our colleges depends upon permanent and safely invested funds.

The facts will justify the statement that not one of our institutions of learning is half endowed, and in almost all of them the faculties are doing double duty on about half pay. A more self-sacrificing class of workers it would be difficult to find.

The average amount expended for buildings, equipment, etc., in proportion to the outlay the student has to make for actual expenses, in schools generally, is as five to one. In our own schools, where actual expenses are quite small as compared to the outlay for similar privileges in long-established institutions, that are amply endowed, it is as three to one, showing the careful and conservative use of the means at our command.

Never in the history of education has any people achieved such enviable results on so meager an outlay. That we have triumphed in spite of such straitened circumstances is hardly a sufficient apology for its continuance.

That we have suffered from it and are bound still to suffer in a largely increasing measure, as the years go on, it is scarcely necessary to suggest.

What, then, is the remedy for this defect in our educational work?

(1) Co-operation. From the first our forces have been divided. Nothing can be gained by jealousy, rivalry and bigoted competition. Prosperity for one of our schools means success for them all. We need to get closer together. A plan that will provide a strong central advisory board, composed of representatives from all of our colleges, should not be very difficult to originate. Into the hands of this committee or board could safely be placed such of our educational interests as are common to all of our schools. They could dispense information, compile statistics, suggest ways and means for correcting existing abuses, lay plans for future work and act as a bureau of education in studying the peculiar needs of our people, etc.

We have displayed practical wisdom in our other benevolent enterprises; why not in this also? Until we come to some such an understanding we need not hope to succeed in this field of effort as we have in others. State lines should be obliterated or held in much lighter esteem. Students in selecting their schools pay but little attention to them, and wisely, too. Getting away from home may be a very large part of a person's education. It is often wise for the Western man to go East in quest of knowledge, and for the Northern man to go South, and vice versa. Coming up from all parts of our country, and even from foreign shores, to our representative colleges are young people who receive the unspeakeble blessings of education, and in turn carry them back to far distant fields of usefulness as inestimable blessings to be conferred upon others; why should they be hampered by arbitrary boundaries? Like the rays of the sun, the further they go forth the greater is the boon they can bestow. This being true, why should any one of our colleges be confined to arbitrary state lines in securing the support and patronage needed in carrying on its work? Why should Kentucky University confine herself alone to Kentucky while educating students from all states, and almost all lands? Or Hiram to to Ohio? Or Drake to Iowa? Or Butler to Indiana? Or Eureka to Illinois? Or Bethany College to the East and the South? A combination that would foster all of our institutions, having a special care first of all for the weakest until self-supporting as in our missionary work, would be both practical and wise. We could also provide a system of academies and preparatory schools, judiciously located, as feeders for our colleges. New England is full of such schools, and they have gone far towards making her colleges the success they have proved to be.

The time was when, perhaps, we had too many colleges; it is doubtful if we now have enough to meet the growing wants of our people. Our first and most supreme duty should be to adequately endow those we have. This need not be a very serious problem for the people that raises the amount of funds we do each year for other purposes. The expenditure of funds in any other direction could not accomplish anything like the amount of good it could here. The times are propitious for this work. Never was there so much money in so many hands as now. Our people are growing in wealth and influence. Are they to fall behind in culture?

(2) We need to make this work popular. It should have an equal chance with all our other interests, in our conventions, in our appeals to the churches, in our papers, and at the hands of our preachers and public teachers generally. If we wish to reach all of our people, to stir up an interest, create an educational sentiment and lay this matter upon their consciences, we must use the same means that have been so successfully employed in our missionary and other ventures. Already, education in part is included in our co-operative work. What right have we to exclude our colleges, that have made all of our work in this direction possible? That which is fundamental and indispensable to our success in these fields, if not to our very existence as a people, is the last to be served, and it has to content itself with such crumbs as it is able to pick up by way of individual contributions in unusual places. Until quite recently, popular appeals for small sums, and from many people from the pulpit for college endowment, were practically unknown among us. Even now, in the minds of most people, it is considered of doubtful propriety if not an infringement on the rights of the churches.

The college representative is a thorn in the side of our conventions, a stumbling-block to our churches and foolishness to people generally; while he should be regarded as the advance agent of civilization, the prince among pioneers, the friend of all good enterprises and the chiefest among the the ten thousands of our Israel. The genius of history will some day crown him with her choicest laurels!

(3) Lastly, we need to enlarge our educational work. Not more colleges, but such a comprehensive arrangement of them all as will bring about greater results. Academic work leading to the bachelor degree is a necessity , but what is to hinder such a division of labor in advanced work as that each school may have its own specialty without trying to infringe on the rights of others?

We need a great university that is worthy of the name, and worthy of us as a people: why could not such an establishment be realized by dividing among our colleges special fields of original works, and thus, by a kind of composite process, realize in them all that which could not at present be achieved in any one of them?

The time has come when we must meet these great needs; it cannot longer be delayed. We have been coasting near the shore long enough. It is time to put to sea for larger opportunity and for better work.

THE LIBERAL CHURCH.

JOSEPH F. NEWTON.

Please permit me to say that I do not think Dr. Tyrrell's remarks concerning the position of the liberal church are exactly fair. Certainly he is incapable of being unkind, but I cannot help feeling that his statements are an injustice to that large and intelligent fraternity. I should regret to think that the liberal church is guilty of the folly of running in an unthinking, erratic and orbitless course; that it is drifting like a "rudderless, unpiloted" ship, "with neither cargo nor destination;" that it is in danger of plunging over some precipice into a bog, or that it rejects the old merely because it is old and accepts the new simply because it is new. The present writer sees no indications which justify these descriptions of the sad condition of the liberal church and the destruction towards which it is moving. It is to be hoped that the author of the article under review does not mean to affirm that the liberality as described by the great preacher from whom he quotes represents the spirit and genius of the modern liberal church, and yet the tone of the entire article implies this. If I am mistaken in my exposition of his words I shall be delighted. It would be sad, indeed, to think the liberal church advocates a liberalism that "loosens the terms of truth, permitting easily and with ceaseless magnanimity variations from it, consenting as it were in its own sovereignty to overlook or allow them, and subsiding thus, ere long, into a licentious indifference to all truth and a general defect of responsibility in regard to it"—a liberalism conducive to the insidious "mental and moral deterioration here indicated."

These good men fail to distinguish between liberty and license. True liberalism "holds fast the minutest atoms of truth as precious and divine, offended by even so much as a thought of laxity;" "takes the truth to be sacred and immovable," and does not allow "it to be marred and maimed at pleasure." The truly liberal man is not the man who has no foundations of faith and no fixed mental and moral convictions, who extends allowance to falsities themselves and who with imbecile apathy "lets the errors be as good as the truths"—that were to confound liberality with stupidity—but the man who thinks deeply, clearly, logically, who possesses firm convictions of truth and duty, who can recognize the truth of his neighbor's affirmations, who does not make his individual convictions and interpretations standards of truth and fellowship. No man is more contemptible than he who "takes it for a sign of intellectual eminence that one can be floated comfortably in the abysses of liberalism," if by liberalism we mean that feeble laxity which takes refuge in a superficial scepticism in order to conceal its indifference to the divinity of truth and the dignity of duty. But it is unjust to say that this spirit reigns in the liberal church. That liberalism is sometimes used as a cloak to cover iniquity does not prove that it is itself evil, for sin as often wears the robes of orthodox faith.

If I may be permitted to state the idea and ideal of the liberal church, it is this: The church encourages that liberty of thought without which religion is a shallow superstition or an empty credulity; fosters that purity of heart and righteousness of life without which liberty is license to sin; advocates that intellectual culture without which manhood is rudimentary, and inspires that spiritual character without which intelligence is the slave to greed and passion. It strives to treasure all that is true and sacred in the past, every sweet and tender thought, every vision seen from holy mountain-top, every truth gleaned in the vale of sorrow; it tries to face the problems of the present in the spirit of helpfulness and hopefulness; it endeavors to open its soul to receive every intellectual suggestion and every inspiration that may come flashing to us through the gates of the future. It emphasizes those simple and universal truths and duties and hopes which are endorsed by the intuitive spiritual judgment of mankind, as distinguished from those systems of theology born in the stress of ecclesiastical controversy—formulas hammered into cannon for sectarian battlefields. It pleads for unity, not upon the basis of conformity to creeds and forms, but upon the broad basis of spiritual brotherhood; it seeks to bring together all who love God and desire to do his will, that all may rejoice in the spirit of love and truth.

In conclusion allow me to express the hope that all churches, both orthodox and liberal, will cultivate those transcendent affinities that should bind us together as brothers and children of our Father; that they will understand and appreciate each other better, and that at last we shall unite—

"To build a universal church
As lofty as the love of God,
As ample as the wants of man."

Non-sectarian Church, St. Louis.

[The word "liberal" in the extract from Horace Bushnell, made by Mr. Tyrrell, doubtless had reference to the Unitarian movement which was creating so much excitement in Mr. Bushnell's time. The Unitarians doubtless applied this term to themselves then as they do now. It is only fair, therefore, to judge the words of this distinguished theologian, and the comment thereon by Mr. Tyrrell, in the light of subsequent developments. Does the history of the Unitarian movement and other allied liberal bodies, justify the characterization of them by Dr. Tyrrell as "drifting like rudderless, unpiloted ships with neither cargo nor destination?" Does it justify Dr. Bushnell's distinction between "liberal" as thus used and "charitable?" We regret to say, in spite of all the nice things Mr. Newton says about these liberals, that history seems to justify the language we have quoted above. Have not Unitarians thrown Christ overboard as possessing an unique or final authority in religion? Who, then, is pilot? Have they not, in like manner, rejected the Scriptures as containing any authority over any other ancient writings? Whence their rudder or chart? Have not the fundamental doctrines of the incarnation, the atonement and regeneration been discarded by at least many leading "liberals?" What cargo have they left to meet the hunger of the world? Not all liberals, of course, have gone so far, but plainly that seems to be the drift. Mr. Newton may accurately describe his own sentiments, but what he says cannot be properly applied to modern Unitarianism nor to any other liberal movement that rejects the truths above mentioned.—EDITOR.]

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PROPAGANDA.

In the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the writer of the Kansas City Letter referred to the enthusiastic and earnest propaganda which is being conducted by Christian Scientists in the cities of the United States.

Last Tuesday evening St. Louis was treated to an excellent example of the methods of these "vigorous champions of an unblest nostrum," to quote from our correspondent. William G. Ewing, of Chicago, one of the most prominent lecturers on Christian Science, spoke to an audience of over three thousand people, which filled to overflowing the largest hall obtainable in St. Louis. The lecture had been extensively advertised; no admission fee was charged or collection taken.

Mr. Ewing spoke for an hour and fifty minutes. He is an elderly gentleman who uses excellent English and is gifted as a public speaker. The audience listened to him attentively, and at times applauded his utterances. They might well have been even more liberal in their approbation, for nineteen-twentieths of what he said was entirely orthodox, and could with propriety have been preached from the pulpit of any evangelical church.

And just there is shown the cunning of the propaganda. There were doubtless hundreds of people who left the hall after the address saying to themselves, or to each other: "Christian Science cannot be such an outrageous thing, after all." The Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, God's tender love for his children, the authority of the Bible, the divinity of Jesus —these were the things that the speaker brought forward as articles in the creed of the followers of Mary Baker Eddy. The silly, preposterous metaphysics of "Mother" Eddy were kept in the background, or left unmentioned. Without doubt the average hearer went away from the lecture more favorably disposed toward Christian Science than he was before—not converted to its teachings nor ready to affiliate himself with the Eddyites, but with his mind in a condition to listen with favor to further teachings of the Christian Scientists.

The most extreme statement made by the speaker was in about these words, which we quote from memory: "All of you members of the old churches have said again and again, in your ritual or in your prayers, 'In God we live, move and have our being,' but Christian Scientists are the only Christians who really believe this. What do you think of the consistency of the man who says he believes that in God he lives, moves and has his being, and then goes into a drugstore to get something to help him move?" This statement brought laughter and applause; doubtless it was regarded by some present as a crushing argument. As questions had not been invited, no one arose to ask, in return, what the speaker thought of the consistency of the man who would say that in God he lived, moved and had his being, and then went into a restaurant to get something to help him live? Christian Scientists are generally careful, we believe, not to invite public questions, to be publicly answered.

The lecture was an excellent presentation of a bad cause. It was apologetic in tone, calculated to remove prejudice. But it was essentially dishonest because the lecturer did not declare those peculiar doctrines which are the essence of Christian Science.

San Juan—Reading Matter.

Of course, a reading room first is better, but it would be a good work to collect and send to Bro. J. A. Erwin papers, magazines and booka that have been enjoyed by the homeland folks and laid by, or as is often the case, destroyed, mutilated or never thought of again.

Bro. Garrison, I haye had a way of thinking about "gathering up the fragments" that may be emphasized in connection with this interesting mission, coming to us o'er Macedonian waves, as a seasonable thought. Do we not need these times and seasons for this very purpose—to think it all over again? There were started thoughts and half-formed resolutions of better living upon reading many articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during the year that may be labeled, fragmentary, when we reread or rethink the matter over, and thus we may yet "gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost."

Again, the very reading matter may be conveyed far o'er land and sea to perform a like service in the economy of heavenly missions among political changes, followed up by heart-expansion for souls unsaved, or in great danger of being lost.

Then will editors and contributors be more careful. Edit and write as for eternity! Reading matter going beyond—recirculating, and of such a kind that it sticks everything to it—tarbucket-like—and goes on in repetition for time and eternity.

"Good Literature," is called for, and we have abundance. Perhaps we often fail to appreciate our blessings from the press. Some may cry, overproduction. Well, be it so; then has God sent us expansion and a call to wider and deeper service in the uplift of the islands of the seas, and the gathering up of fragments of time, thought and action, both wholesome and heavenly.

"Instructive and Interesting." That is what we all like, and blessed is the pen "thrilled to its nib" with the enterprising and ennobling thought of giving instruction a diamond point. And last, the pupils in the mission schools and young people of San Juan may thus become familiar with the sight of our language and gather up some fragments of helpfulness in the plastic years of youth. A reading room and reading matter for San Juan!

J. D. CALLAHAN.

A down-east editor has drawn up some new game laws which he wants adopted. The following is a summary: "Book agents may be killed from September 1 to October 1; spring poets from March 1 to June 1; scandal mongers from April 1 to February 1; umbrella borrowers from August 1 to November 1, and February 1 to May 1, while every man who accepts a newspaper two years, and upon being presented with a bill says, 'I never ordered it!' may be killed on the spot, without reserve or relief."—The Worker.

OUR BUDGET.

—We have sown in tears; we are reaping with joy.

—"Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning."

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is receiving its vindication in the most tangible way.

—Our friends seem to be saying to us, "Make us a first-class religious journal and we will do the rest."

—And they are doing it nobly. Clubs are coming in rapidly and our friends have only begun the canvass in earnest.

—Well, we are working hard to do our part, and we offer you a number of the paper this week which we think will interest you.

—We are glad to hear of and to report so many good meetings. Our evangelists are doing faithful work and are reaping a rich harvest.

—"Say not ye, there are yet four months and then cometh the harvest: behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes and look on the fields that they are white already unto harvest." So said Jesus, and he is Lord of the harvest.

—The Texas Letter did not reach us in time to appear in this paper as our forms were more than full at the time of its arrival. With our next paper the Texas Letter by M. M. Davis, will appear as in former years. Other communications of interest that came to us on Monday and Tuesday will also have to go into our next number.

—We are informed by Alanson Wilcox of the death of J. M. Atwater, Cleveland, O., on the 17th instant. This is surprising news to us as it is but a short time ago since we had a card from him in relation to an article which appeared in our issue of January 11th. It is an interesting account of his test of a "Spiritual Test Medium." We have not the particulars of his sickness and death as yet, but a memorial tribute is promised by Brother Wilcox for a later edition.

—The Twentieth Century New Testament, Part I, consisting of the five historical books of the New Testament, is now out, being published in this country by Fleming H. Revell Co. We can fill orders for same at 50 cents. This is the translation spoken of in an editorial in this paper, some time last year, and concerning which we have had numerous inquiries. Its aim is to put the New Testament in our every-day, modern English, so as to make it more easily understood by the masses.

—According to the Chicago Record, the Fifth Presbyterian Church at its annual meeting decided to sell their house of worship at 30th Street on Indiana Ave., and to purchase other property at Ellis Avenue and 47th Street. This will cause the removal of the First Christian Church which has had the property rented for some time. The article also states that the pastor, F. G. Tyrrell, has announced that a large hall at Grand Boulevard has been rented for one year, by which time they hope to have a new building of their own. The move, it is said, will be made about Feb. 1st.

—The Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, representing the Protestant missionary societies and missions of the world, will be held in New York City, April 21 to May 1 of the present year. This is to be one of the most important meetings of the closing century. Great plans are being made for a great convention. It will be great because of its personnel, its theme, its reports, its grasp upon the future, its influence upon denominationalism and upon the world. It will require a vast amount of money to entertain this conference, and churches all over the land are asked to contribute to its expense account. Every contributing church will receive a copy of the report containing the addresses and summaries of the discussions of the great themes which are to come before the conference. The report will be published in two volumes at $2.50, and sent to each individual subscribing $2 prior to May 1, 1900. Address Ecumenical Conference Secretary, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

—The Christian Standard doesn't seem to be in as peaceful and happy a frame of mind, of late, as we could wish. It seems to be grieving over the apostasy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The particular source of its solicitude at present is our failure to issue a circular guaranteeing that our Sunday-school supplies will not attempt to carry the children of the brotherhood into the camp of the higher critics! It points out to an unsuspecting brotherhood that the conservative element of the Christian Pub. Co.—the men who really held the company to the gospel landmarks, or sought to do so—have left the company, and what assurance have we now that such hair-brained radicals as the President of the Company, Vice President W. W. Dowling, Secretary W. D. Cree, and Business Manager and Treasurer, R. P. Crow, and such other higher critics in the directory as A. H. Duncan, W. Palmer Clarkson and G. A. Hoffmann will not plunge headlong into the dismal bog of rationalistic criticism! W. W. Dowling, who for 35 years has been preparing Sunday-school supplies, which have steadily grown in popularity because of their remarkable adaptation to the needs of the schools, and against the soundness of which no word has ever been uttered, should according to our contemporary, be placed under bonds to stick to the Bible! Really this is a lugubrious mess for our friends of the Standard to be dishing out to their readers. Surely, they cannot be feeling a bit well. Why, bless you, dear Standard, you do not seem to realize the situation. Never did a religious journal have a more signal vindication than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has had. It never had so many friends as it has today. Its circulation is growing even more rapidly than the Standard's, measured by your own reports. The Sunday-schools are standing right by us. They are not frightened in the least at this bugaboo. We are all happy, and the people are feeling well. Cheer up, neighbor, and put more "sweetness and light" into your columns and you will be happy too.

—Another cause of irritation to our esteemed contemporary is a discovery it claims to have made that the claim of the Christian Pub. Co. circular, that we maintain uniform prices for our supplies, is not true. "We know the statement to be false," says the Standard, and call upon the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to correct it, as it has pledged itself to do." Now be calm, neighbor, and maintain a judicial frame of mind. Without calling in question your entire disinterestedness we can hardly allow you to act as plaintiff, prosecuting attorney, judge, jury, witness and "the whole thing." Submit your case and we will allow the accused to be heard in self-defense, and then we will make the correction—if found guilty. Do not get excited, and above all, keep sweet. And while the Standard is about it, let it state whether it is the cutting of rates that it objects to, that is, departing from published prices, or whether it is the violation of a promise to maintain uniform rates, that is the sole ground of its complaint. Let us know the precise nature of our sin. If the latter be the only cause of complaint, what about published rates? Are they not virtually a claim of uniform rates? Will the President of the Standard Pub. Co. join with the President of the Christian Pub. Co. in an earnest effort to maintain uniform rates for all publications? There is a good opportunity here to go on record in behalf of sound business methods. Will the Standard do it?

—The Educational Directory, prepared by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, of Nebraska, for the year 1899-1900 is quite a valuable compendium of facts that are of value to many persons, especially within the state. There is a complete list of the names of all superintendents, professors and teachers in the state, by counties, and their salaries. According to the summary table in the ninety counties of Nebraska there are 6,703 school districts, nearly as many schoolhouses; 9,608 teachers employed at an average salary of $47.70 per month. Children of school age 366,069. Total enrollment, 273,919. Average daily attendance, 173,930. Total teachers' wages, $2,449,833.88. Total expenditures for the year, $3,712,016.98. Average cost of education per pupil by average attendance, $20.46. In the state there are 415 graded schools with 2,590 teachers and 158 private schools. This report is for the school year ending July 11th, 1898.

—As the utterances of Prof. Atwater, of Middletown, Conn., regarding the food value of alcohol have been used to counteract the influence of temperance reform movements and to mislead the innocent and the ignorant as to the real danger accompanying its use a pamphlet has been prepared with great care and ability by the joint action of the committees appointed by the leading temperance organizations of the country, fully setting forth the inadequacy of Prof. Atwater's experiments, and the consequent error of his opinions. The pamphlet is a strong condemnation of Prof. Atwater's conclusions and equally strong vindication of the principles advocated by the various temperance organizations. The pamphlet contains abundant evidence by authoritative scientists on this question and is well worthy of a careful perusal, and may be had by addressing "Appeal to Truth," 345 West 18th Street, New York City, at five cents each, or forty cents per dozen.

—We are just in receipt of a pamphlet entitled "Instructions to Workers in Gospel Meetings Conducted by Charles Reign Scoville." This little pamphlet of 31 pages contains rather minute instructions which the evangelist desires to be faithfully followed in his meetings. It is not for sale, but for use by any church which is planning a meeting to be conducted by Bro. Scoville. A glance through this pamphlet shows that the evangelist believes in thorough organization, and that a meeting should be conducted according to well-known principles of success, just as any business enterprise. The suggestions, as far as we have had time to examine them, seem to us wise and practicable, just such as have proven to be successful by actual test. It will be valuable to churches contemplating a meeting by this earnest and successful evangelist. Address him at 358 Dearborn St., Chicago.

—G. A. Hoffmann has been confined to his home in Columbia, Mo., for four weeks with nervous prostration. He is now convalescing and hopes to be about soon. He was to have begun work for this company as its general field agent and representative at the beginning of the year, but his sickness has delayed his entrance upon the work. Bro. Hoffmann has been an overworked man for several years and is greatly in need of rest. His service to our cause in Missouri has been beyond computation, and the whole brotherhood is debtor to him for his painstaking labor as statistical secretary. Thousands of our readers will join with us in the sincere wish that he may soon regain his health.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary Society is in receipt of another $1,000 for Foreign Missions. It will be remembered that we reported a $1,000 gift last week.

—Remember our Congress meets at Indianapolis, March 27-29, with the Central Church. Program next week.

—It is good to hear a Justice of the Supreme Court speak out occasionally on the subject of religion. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, in an address at Washington, D. C., at the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, on "Twentieth Century Religion," predicted that the coming century will be characterized by a larger measure of Christian unity:

The present century has been one of denominational rivalry and strife. The next will be one of Christian unity. It is not unworthy of notice that the ancient enemies, Catholicism and Protestantism, are drawing closer together. The prelates and members of the two churches do not hesitate to affiliate in a thousand forms of labor. The time is past when the Protestant should look back upon the horrors of the Inquisition, and denounce Roman Catholicism on account thereof, or the Catholic, on the other hand, to look back at the burning of the witches or the persecution of the Quakers, and denounce Protestantism therefor; but each should shake hands and join in a common effort to further the cause of a common Master.

—We are not to infer from the above that there is to be indifference to what is truth, in the coming century, for in the same address he says:

Looking backward on the progress of Christianity, we notice two marked features. One is the struggle about creeds. . . . Creeds have their place and value. The dearer, the stronger and the more profound one's convictions, the more earnest and zealous he is apt to be. But something more than creed is essential to religion. It is not a question of intellectual advancement so much as one of moral growth. So religion that spends itself in creeds, and does not ripen into character and the richness of a pure and lovely life, is like a barren fig tree—covered with leaves, but fruitless. So I look, in the coming ceutury, to see, not merely a clearer conception of the fundamental truths—a putting behind us as of little significance the minor differences of creed and doctrine—but also a keener and more just appreciation of the means by which alone humanity can become fit to enter the new Paradise which one day shall dawn upon the earth.

—The following card from Secretary Abbott looks as if the churches in Missouri were beginning to wake up on the question of state mission work. We hope that similar encouraging reports will come up from every county in the state. These are simply the first reports from the field following offering day, Jan. 14th:

Springfield Ave., Kansas City, T. P. Haley, pastor, raised their full apportionment in six minutes. Sixth and Prospect, and West Side, next Lord's day. The collection from Carthage was on the secretary's desk at 8 o'clock Monday morning. Converse had hers in in an hour afterwards. The Cameron Church in a few minutes raised $75, $35 more than her apportionment. Indications hopeful. Let us hear from you.

T. A. ABBOTT.

—We have received an obituary of Peter S. Wilkes, who departed this life at his home in Stockton, Cal., Jan. 2nd, 1900, which will appear in our next issue. Peter S. Wilkes, previous to his death, was the only surviving brother of L. B. Wilkes, whose name is so familiar to our brotherhood as one of the fathers of the Reformation.

—A few days ago we received from Prof. H. McDiarmid a communication in which it was alleged that our Beanville (Mo.) correspondent, Bro. Hezekiah Hobson, had misrepresented the "Department of Biblical Criticism." The specific offense charged was that Bro. Hobson had quoted "bruther Wilsun," of Beanville, as replying to an interrogation as to his reasons for believing "infidelity" and "hire criticism" to be synonymous terms by saying, "Because the departmint ov biblikel krittysizzum sez so." We forwarded Prof. McDiarmid's letter to Brother Hobson and have received from him the following reply:

BEANVILLE, MO., Jan. 20, 1900.

DEAR CHRISCHUN-EVANGLEST, Yores reseeved. I hav cairfully red perfesser Mackdermud's letter. Sertinly the departmint ov biblikel krittysizzum nevver sed awl hire kritticks wuz infiduls, or that awl hire krittysizzum wuz infidelitty. I nevver sed it did say so, eether. I sed bruther Wilsun sed it sed so. Praps I shood hav correctid hiz staitmint, but I thot it mite be jest as well to let it stand, az it shows what kind ov impreshun the departmint ov biblikel krittysizzum iz maikin on the minds ov menny ov its reeders—thoze who, like bruther Wilson, are good, honist men, but who are not well informed, and do not know how to cairfully annilize what they reed in the papers. Bruther Wilsun had bin reedin the depertmint ov biblikei krittysizzum fathefully for sum time, and he honistly bleeved it sed jest what he sed it sed.

Yores in the werk,
HEZEKIAH HOBSON.

—James Millard Philputt recently preached his tenth annual sermon for the Church on 125th St, New York. In it he recounts in a most interesting way the history of these ten years, full of sacrifice and earnest work. The present membership is about 250. The church raised, last year, $4,359.55. Referring to the attitude of the church to the brotherhood the pastor said:

From the first the church has been identified with the Disciples of Christ. The doctrines preached, the ordinances administered, the customs observed and the government adopted have been those in common use among our churches. The spirit of the church has been liberal and progressive. We took a step in advance of our sister churches in trying to solve the problem of Christian union—receividg into our congregation persons in good standing in any evangelical church. Such persons do not in this way change their denominational connection. They do not become Disciples of Christ without immersion. They are, however, members of this local congregation. They work and worship with us. This is for the time their church home and all the privileges and blessings of the church belong to them. We have never thought that we were surrendering any vital principle in taking this step. It has simply been a method of work with us. Within the church it has occasioned no friction whatever. We have had ten years of practical Christian union, with perfect peace and harmony, and the Lord has blessed our labors together.

However, for this feature of our work we have been criticised. I have been compelled again and again to defend the orthodoxy and good name of the church in our papers from the assaults of those who did not or would not understand our position. The problem is working itself out. To quiet the consciences of some weak brethren and to spike all guns leveled at us, it may seem best to the church to come to a position of regularity with our sister churches in this matter.

—"Who is preaching for you congregation now?" was asked of a brother traveling in Tennessee, by one of the brethren of that state. "Bro. ———," was the answer. "What! that infidel?" He had never heard or seen the preacher in question, but he had been reading one or two of our religious journals!

—S. A. West, Rockport, Mo., requests the name of the correspondent from Oregon signing himself "An Honest Seeker," in a late number of the Christian Standard. If the correspondent so desires he may communicate with Bro. West.

—We wish to call the especial attention of Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to the Map of the Travels of Jesus, fully described on page 2 of this issue. During the coming eighteen months the International Lessons are on the life of Jesus, and this map is an indispensable help in the teaching of these lessons.

—W. S. Hoke, Weldon, Ia., referring to a recent notice advertising a certain ministerial fraud suggests, what is perhaps well enough to remember, the importance of giving such a description of the person advertised as will not involve some other person unfortunate enough to have the same or a similar name. As a rule, however, a worthy minister will always be able to identify himself as such, though he may suffer temporary inconvenience from confusion of names.

—The Advance (Congregationalist), of Chicago, commenting upon a paragraph in the Church Economist in which infant consecration is spoken of as a substititute for infant baptism, says:

"As an item of news that is interesting. But one cannot help wondering where is the gain, and whether it is not rather late in the nineteenth century to yield to the immersionists that stronghold of their contention, that baptism is only for believers."

If we might be permitted to add a word of comment we would say that the "gain" by this change, in the view of those who favor it, is that it would remove a serious obstacle to Christian unity, while conserving all that is held to be really valuable in what has been called infant baptism. The question is not, we should say, "whether it is not too late in the nineteenth century to yield to the immersionists that stronghold of their contention, that baptism is only for believers," but whether the New Testament authorizes or requires any other baptism than that of believers. If not, it is only yielding to the teaching of the New Testament to make the concession indicated, and that, too, in the interest both of unity and of closer conformity to apostolic teaching and practice.

The Macon Republican gives a very flattering account of the introductory sermons of F. R. Stutzman, who has recently accepted the Macon City work in this state.

The Gospel Plea says that John A. Stevens has quit work as state evangelist for Mississippi, and that Bro. Jacks, of Georgia, has become his successor.

G. W. Webbe, of Independence, Mo., paid his respects to this office on last Monday while in the city. He reports Brother Procter in fair health and preaching for the church at present. Brother Webbe is giving his attention at present to mining interests in Northern Arkansas.

The Ohio Worker is the name of a new eight-page paper, just started, to appear monthly from Cincinnati, Ohio, and published by the Disciple Puolishing Co., but for the Ohio Christian Missionary, with S. N. Bartlett, Cor. Sec., for editor. The first number looks and reads well.

R. M. Messick, of Salem, Ore., writes that his work at Kelso, Wash., closed with 1899 and that he is now ready to accept work at any point in Oregon, Washington or Idaho. He can give substantial references as to his efficiency in the work. Aderess him 362 Summer St., at above place.

J. M. Morris, of Glenwood, Ia., would like to correspond with a good physician and surgeon, emphasis on surgeon, "an up-to-date man in the science of medicine and surgery, and a full-breasted and healthy Disciple of Christ,that would like a good field," to write him at once.

On entering upon his new field of work in Florence, Col., Daniel Trundle, formerly of Springdale, Ark., was given an enjoyable and pleasant public reception, not only by his members, but also by many of the pastors of other churches and their members. Such a fraternal spirit is commendable.

The Leaflet, Lexington, Ky., contains resolutions passed by the official board of the Central Christian Church of that city declaring with pleasure the peace and harmony of the church and the efficiency of its pastor, I. J. Spencer, whose ministry is therein fully endorsed. Such official action is a matter of encouragement to any pastor.

ESTEY PIANOS AND ORGANS

Excel in Superior Tone, Perfect Construction and Great Durability.

THE ESTEY CO., 916 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.

T. A. Abbott, state secretary, preached at Cameron, January 14th and raised $75 for state mission work. The Cameron pastor, Brother White, is spending January in Ohio. The church is prospering in every department.

After concluding his meeting in Gillespie, Ill., with Bro. Zachary, of Lexington, Ky., Bro. Luttenberger and his wife started for Jacksonville, Fla. This trip is taken in the interest of Sister Luttenberger's health.

We were pleased to see the familiar face of our former editorial contributor, J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky., on the first page of the Christian Century last week. By the way, we notice that Geo. A. Campbell has become editor of the Christian Century, with C. A. Young, J. J. Haley, J. H. Hardin, A. M. Haggard and F. D. Power for contributing editors.

After a little more than three years' labor with the church at Oswego, J. A. Longston tendered his resignation, to take effect March 1. He expects to spend about four months wheeling through Europe next summer. If any of our readers contemplate such a trip and has no partner as yet, he would like to hear from them. Address him at Oswego, Kansas.

Chancellor Craig, of Des Moines, Ia., recently dedicated the new house of worship built by the church in Fairfield, Ia. There were large audiences at the various services of the day and great rejoicing. It was the reconstruction of the old house into a new one at a cost of $4,971.62, all of which was paid in full prior to the dedication. The pastor of this flourishing congregation is Leander Lane.

E. W. Brickert, of Sullivan, Ill., with his wife, called at this office last week on their way to Midland, Tex., for a protracted meeting. He reports the new church building in Sullivan enclosed and paid for up to date. Expect to dedicate in April. He has been called to remain indefinitely. He reports having traveled last year 6,000 miles by rail, 1,100 by buggy and preached 230 sermons, besides delivering 10 addresses. They will be absent in Texas one month.

In a communication from J. D. Dillard, field agent for the Christian Orphans' Home, in relation to a visit recently paid to Palmyra, Mo., where they have adopted the individual cup communion system, he says that he was converted to the wisdom and beauty of this system then and there at first sight. He thinks it a vast improvement over the old way on the line of cleanliness, and safety from microbes. Each person, he thinks, prefers his or her microbes, since we are all of necessity more or less their happy abode. We know of no church, we believe, that ever gave up the new system after once having tried it. And many others like Brother Dillard are converted at first sight.

B. B. Burton, pastor of the First Church of Christ, San Jose, Cal., has been given a six months' leave of absence that he may visit Egypt and Palestine. He will start on this trip about February 1st. On the way to New York, at Ames, Ia., he will spend two or three weeks in a revival meeting and lectures. Before embarking he will visit Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, and probably other of our important cities. Bro. Burton's trip is one of study rather than pleasure. His family will remain in San Jose during his absence. Bro. Burton has twice resigned in his stay of four years at San Jose, but the church would not accept, and now has increased his salary and given him the time in addition for his trip. This is certainly an expression of high appreciation. Bro. Burton went to San Jose from Colorado Springs, Col., and for some months past has been taking a postgraduate course at the Stanford University. The objective points in his tour are stated as follows in the San Jose press: He purposes spending considerable time in the London Museum and in other noted museums and art galleries in Europe. He will go up the Nile beyond the usual tourist travel to inspect the old temples above the pyramids. He will visit Palestine and hopes to participate in a Masonic meeting on the site of the ancient temple of Solomon. He will also visit Oberammergan for the purpose of witnessing the Passion Play by the Bavarian peasants, which is presented only at invervals of ten years, and is with them one of the most sacred of ceremonials. Mr. Burton expects to wind up his sight-seeing at the Paris Exposition. Everywhere he will procure the best views obtainable of landscapes and objects of note, and he expects on his return to San Jose to be able to illustrate his travels to his friends.

"Words fail to express what I suffered for three years, with cold chills, palpitation of heart, shortness of breath, and low spirits," writes Mrs. A. C. Jones, of Walterboro, Colleton Co., S. C. "I could not sleep and really thought I would soon die. Had a peculiar roaring through my head all the time. Was so emaciated and weak I could not feed myself. My aunt induced me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which I did, only to please her, and six bottles cured me. To-day am sound and well. During the three years I was sick I had five different physicians."

A. H. Baker, of Hoisington, Kan., sends us the following: "Geo. F. Hall, of Decatur, Ill., reports a church membership of 801. The Ladies' Aid Society raised nearly $1,200. Hoisington, Kan., can beat that. We have a church membership of 45. Our Ladies' Aid Society for the year ending Jan. 1, 1899, raised $100.47. It is safe to say that they will exceed that 25 per cent this year. Who is ahead?"

The Milwaukee Times, Jan. 13, contains an outline of C. G. McNeill's work as Cor. Sec. Wisconsin State Mission Board. Brother McNeill has been in this position but little more than a year and has done a creditable work. During the year he laid two corner stones for church buildings, dedicated two new church houses, paid a debt on a church in Platteville of $3,100 and raised a building fund of $2,813 for the church house in Richland Center. This church has since been dedicated free from debt and no appeal on dedication day for money. F. N. Calvin, of Milwaukee, was present at the dedication, about a month ago. And by the way, the church for which he now preaches in Milwaukee is raising funds for a new building.

S. T. Willis.

S. T. Willis, our New York correspondent, whose face we present to our readers on our first page this week, was born in Anderson County, Ky., July 16, 1864. He was brought up on his father's farm, working on the farm in the summer and attending school in the winter. He taught in the public schools in his home county two years. He made the good confession and was baptized August 8, 1881, and soon resolved to preach if the Lord so willed it. He entered the College of the Bible in Kentucky University, where he spent two years. He then served as pastor successively at Bowling Green, Ky., Chattanooga, Tenn., and Knoxville, Tenn. In 1888 he went to Milligan College to study and teach, preaching meanwhile for the church round about. January 1, 1889, he was married to Miss Mary C. Madden, of Knoxville. A little later he received a call to the 169th Street Church, New York City, and entered upon the work there October 1, 1889. At the close of his first year's service there he received an indefinite call. During the earlier years of his pastorate he carried on his studies, taking a year and a half's work by correspondence in the department of Hebrew under Prof. W. R. Harper, then of Yale, and finished up the second year's work under Prof. Batten in the Chatauqua Summer School. Meanwhile, he made the race for Congress in the Fourteenth New York District on the Prohibition ticket, but escaped election. In 1891 he entered the Middle Class in Union Theological Seminary, graduating in May, 1893. He also took five years' postgraduate work in the University of New York, doing two years' work in comparative religion and three in philosophy. He has also stood the final examination required for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, but has not written the required thesis. His church, during all this time, has generously given him the time required for such studies. He is now in his eleventh years' work. He is a frequent contributor to the popular high-class magazines and journals of New York, besides acting as contributor for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and some of our other religious journals. Concerning his work in the 169th Street Church Bro. M. C. Tiers, a veteran member of the church, writes as follows:

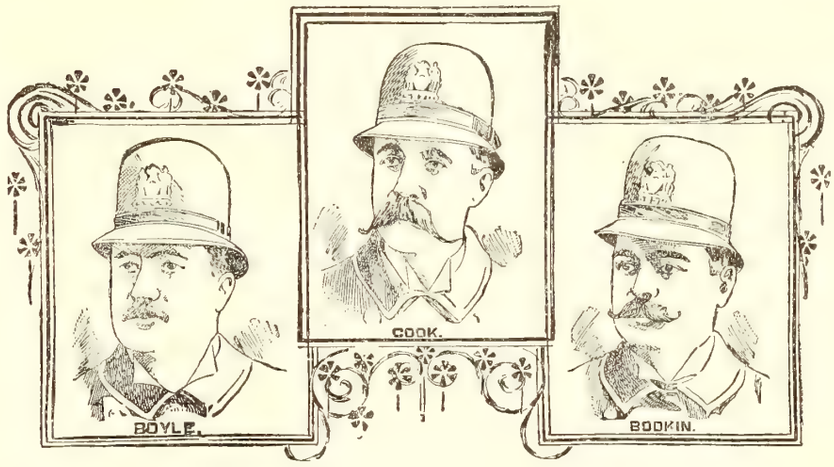
During the past six years, since the completion of his studies in Union Seminary, there has been a steady and substantial advance in all departments of the work. At first there were about 30 members in the fellowship; at present the number is about 125. This numerical increase has been largely by additions of young people from families of the vicinity connected with other communions; and among these are some of our most efficient members in the young people's societies. In addition to this, there are a number of devout people who have hitherto been in other Christian fellowships, who are constant worshipers with us, and are in general sympathy with our work, contributing both by their means and talents to its advancement.

These conditions are largely due to the prudent and discreet manner in which the pastor has mingled with the people in social intercourse, and to his plain, convincing exposition of New Testament teaching. And, while he is uncompromising in this latter respect, there is none of the offensive belligerent tone in his delivery that would tend rather to repel than attract those he might desire to convince. His sentences are delivered in a voice of moderate power, well modulated, and hence without monotony and somewhat musical in its tones, but with no attempt at oratorical display. In this respect his delivery is in agreeable contrast with the style of some popular speakers.

No proper estimate can be made of the extent of Bro. Willis' work in this community without notice of that which is in progress at the newly built chapel a mile east of the church. His wisdom in this movement has been apparent from the first. This accessory has been a constant feeder of the church both in substantial membership and financial support from the beginning. His talent for "Business in Christianity" in giving direction to the various financial affairs of the church has been apparent in the unanimity with which the church has sustained him in the work. More than $4,700, contributed almost entirely by the members of this little church, expended during the past year, without any remaining debt, is ample demonstration of all I have written on this point.

WONDERFUL CURES BY SWAMP-ROOT.

To Prove What This Famous New Discovery Will do for YOU, Every Reader of "The Christian-Evangelist" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.



65th Police Precinct, Greater New York.

Dr. Kilmer & Co., Birmingham, N. Y. Nov. 11th, 1899.

Gentlemen:

In justice to you, I feel as if it was my duty to send you an acknowledgment of the receipt of the sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy you so kindly sent me. I had been troubled for the past five years with kidney and bladder trouble. I had our best physicians prescribe for me. They would relieve me for the time being, but the old complaint would in a short time return again. I sent for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and I found that it did me a world of good. Since then I have taken eight small bottles and I consider myself entirely cured. I do not have to get up during the night to urinate as I formerly did, three and four times a night, but now sleep the sleep of peace. My back is all right again, and in every way I am a new man. Two of my brother officers have, and are still using Swamp-Root. They, like myself, cannot say too much in praise of it. It is a boon to mankind. We recommend it to all of our friends, and we recommend it to all humanity who are suffering from kidney and bladder diseases.

My brother officers (whose signatures accompany this letter) as well as myself, thank you for the blessing you have brought to the human race in the compounding of Swamp-Root. We remain, Yours very truly,

JAMES COOK,
HUGH E. BOYLE
JOHN J. BODKIN

Officers of the 65th Police Precinct, New York.

What a Woman Says of Swamp-Root.

Mrs. H. M. Wheeler, of 268 Boston St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Dec. 11th, '99: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe attack of grip. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt certain that they were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle, and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser; I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root, the one which we publish this week for the benefit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative powers of this great kidney remedy.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

So when your kidneys are sick you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you—and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallowness, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, sometimes the feet, limbs or body bloat, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

English Topics.

A GREAT THEOLOGICAL SYMPOSIUM.

The lamentable war is obscuring all the issues of peaceful life. It is very difficult for us in England at this juncture to set our minds to the contemplation of any of the problems of life in its normal relations. Some remarkable controversies are, however, in full blast, and it is singular that these are for the most part purely religious. The Ritualist row in the Anglican Church will not quiet down. For a few weeks it seemed to smolder only to break out again with redoubled force. But it is interesting to note that one department of thought which many people supposed to have become effete and unpopular shows wonderful signs of revival. During this generation religious people have almost universally manifested the utmost indifference to doctrinal studies. It has been often openly said that controversies on baptism, on atonement, on election and on communion had ceased to interest the Christian consciousness of the age. Not long since even so influential a paper as the Nonconformist flippantly remarked that the discussion of infant sprinkling and immersion had long since exploded. But there is a turn of the tide. A sure sign is the current symposium in the Christian World, by far the most widely circulated of English religious organs, on "The Atonement." Week by week elaborate essays are appearing from the pens of the very ablest men in England, Germany and America in that journal. Amongst the contributors have been Dr. Horton, Lyman Abbott and Prof. Harnack. This week appears an essay by the famous Scotch divine, Dr. Marcus Dods. These papers are entitled "The Atonement in Modern Religious Thought." Dr. Dods writes in a style altogether original, as does Harnack. If these chapters should afterwards be published in a volume, the whole work will certainly be invaluable. The ground taken by Dr. Dods is simple enough. The key of his argument is that "the death of Christ achieves the reconciliation of God and man, and in so doing becomes the supreme manifestation of the Father's love." Dr. Dods makes the significance of the atonement hinge on the Messiahship of Jesus. He died as the Christ, the Anointed, the Messiah. In his death it is not merely the love of the human heart of man to man he is expressing; it is the love of the unseen Father manifesting itself to his children. Take away the Messiahship; put aside the representative character of all Jesus said and did; think of him as a mere man and not as the Revealer of God, and you destroy the essential and radical significance of his death. In order that God's love might find free expression in the forgiveness of his children, two things at least were necessary—that they should be penitent and that they should be powerfully impelled towards righteousness. Bare forgiveness, the mere proclamation of free pardon to all, could accomplish neither of these ends. It could not secure adequate repentance and it could not secure righteousness. The death of Christ secures both. In some beautiful paragraphs Dr. Dods shows how the death of Christ not only makes forgiveness possible by producing the penitence which alone can crave and accept it, but also it secures that forgiveness shall not be abused.

BRITAIN'S GREATEST NOBLEMAN.

During the years when, as a youthful minister, I was the Baptist pastor in the beautiful old city of Chester, one of my kindest friends was the noble Duke of Westminster. He was a friend to every Christian minister and to every good cause, religious, philanthropic or social. He was the richest man on earth so far as the possession of real estate was concerned, for this landed property brought him an income of about a million pounds sterling annually. Of course this stupendous revenue was a burden to him. I remember some years ago being told by one of his many estate agents, that the Duke daily had to work hard for his living, for notwithstanding that he employed a large staff of stewards, bailiffs and secretaries, he was compelled to spend many hours every day in attending merely to such matters as absolutely required his personal supervision. He died at the age of 75. He was a fine, tall, upright, slender figure with a keen, benevolent, intellectual countenance. The last time I received any communication was when he sent me a donation for the benefit of an Armenian family who had been driven from home by the Turks and had found their way to London, where they were in danger of starving. We helped them to go to America, and the Duke helped us to help them. He never turned a deaf ear to the cry of woe or want. He did not want his money merely for his own personal use, for he was a man of the very simplest habits. He had one fault. He was a patron of the turf; but this was because he was brought up to think that every wealthy nobleman should keep a magnificent stud of horses. He also had the doctrine firmly embedded in his mind that horse racing, if not debased by gambling, was a noble and elevating sport, and he thought that it was his mission to seek to purify it. Of course, he was mistaken. But he was a devoutly religious man, who acted conscientiously up to his light. His shining merits far more than compensated for his errors, and perhaps this is all that can be said for the very best of men. He died on the same day as D. L. Moody.

THE DUKE'S LAST WISH.

The last incident in the good Duke's life was full of pathos. When no longer able to speak, he signaled for a sheet of paper and pencil. He then wrote that he wished a cheque for a thousand pounds to be sent to the fund for the widows and orphans of officers killed in the war in South Africa. This wish was carried out and the sum was sent to the fund. The Duke of Westminster's remains were cremated at Woking. He was a man of much individuality of character and was a firm believer in funeral reform.

A PARSON'S NOVEL EXPERIMENT.

The Rev. C. D. Crouch, of Worthing Tabernacle, not far from Brighton, on the Sussex Coast, is a remarkable man. Like myself, he was one of the students of the late Mr. Spurgeon, and I therefore feel all the more interest in him as a fellow alumnus. A few years ago he quitted the regular Baptist ministry in order to take up unsectarian ground. But he did not leave the town of Worthing. Setting up an undenominational church, he gathered a new congregation. His work is very much like our own, if he could only see the likeness; but he seems to be a man of the solitary sui generis quality. Many Christian men who quit their old lines through conscientious scruples, and therefore should be honored by others, yet seem strangely oblivious of the obligations of the principle of fellowship with all who are of kindred spirit. It to my mind is a problem in the mysteries of psychology, that both in England and America a considerable number of good people who are practically as well as theoretically identical with us should yet hold aloof. Being in sentiment identical they should identify themselves with us. That was how I acted myself. I could not look on and see those with whom I agreed fighting their great battle without feeling impelled to plunge in and risk all with them. Therefore I do not admire the attitude of a large number of earnest unattached Christians who decline to come to our help, though it is impossible to see how they essentially differ from us. Mr. Crouch belongs to the category of Fuller, Gooch, Pierson, Varley, Mountain, etc. These able men help anybody in general and nobody in particular. Therefore, wherever they appear they gather a pious mob, which immediately disperses as soon as they move off, and they never build anything up which seems to be of any avail as a rampart against devilry, or as a constructive center for the propagation of the truth. I am tired of Christians unattached. I am sure that Beelzebub fears them less than any other class of enemies, for they make great demonstrations against his kingdom, but never follow them up. Now, when Mr. Crouch of Worthing, set up on individual lines he was not content with the ordinary unattached method of gypsying round, but stayed in Worthing. Of course, this makes him a thorn in the side of his old Baptist cause in that town. He adopted a plan of his own, which to some people seems original and sensational, but which I am afraid is altogether fantastic, illusory and mischievous, however heroic it may appear to be to himself and to superficial minds. Each New Year he issues a manifesto to his people respecting the success of his novel experiment of devoting himself to business pursuits as well as to the pastorate, in order that he may be free to apply himself to the ministry without payment from his congregation. This New Year he has once more summed up results. His efforts, he says, have been so signally blessed that he was able to return his people's offerings at the rate of £50 in the first year and £100 in the second, while in the year on which they are just entering the return will be £150. Mr. Crouch adds: "Considerable criticism is aroused by the course which I have been led to take, but the conviction that I am in the way of the Lord's will determines me to go forward." With this sincere sentiment we must all symathize, but a fallacy underlies the whole idea. Mr. Crouch is simply taking a very familiar position. I know, honor and love many unpaid preachers who live by their secular labors and refuse to take any salary for their preaching. But they can never with any efficiency do pastoral work, or carry on the multitudinous duties of a regular minister to a stated congregation. "Commit thy self wholly to these things," was the apostle's direction. I see with astonishment that our daily secular organs allude, as they did last year, to Mr. Crouch's "novel experiment." There is no novelty in it at all. It is an old thing in a new aspect. The business to which he has taken is the delightful avocation of fruit-growing. I should like to grow fruit myself and to earn money enough by it to dispense with a salary. But I am certain that I could not put my whole heart both into growing fruit and also growing Christians.

Helps Electricity.

GRAPE-NUTS BUILD THE BRAIN THAT DOES THE PLANNING.

A famous electrical engineer, Foote, who constructed the 3,000-horse power electric plant which supplies Battle Creek, Kalamazoo and other Michigan cities says there is no food known that will supply him with the vitality and mental vigor from breakfast to noon that Grape-Nuts will.

Mr. Foote, in conversation, said: "There is no doubt left in my mind of these facts. I have tried all sorts of of food, and have kept track of the results. I gain steadily in reserve force when I use Grape-Nuts, notwithstanding my occupation requires long-continued and concentrated brain work." There is no artificial stimulant in Grape-Nuts. Nothing but the stimulus of good food that is scientifically prepared for immediate assimilation into blood and tissue, especially brain tissue.

Brain workers can get sure and understandable results by using Grape-Nuts.

Colorado Letter.

Of course I can "turn aside from telling about things in Colorado long enough" to say what I think about the name by which "we as a people" ought to be known.

The children of God, by a spiritual regeneration, are, in the New Testament, called Friends, Brethren, Saints, Discipies, Believers, Christians, Fellow-Citizens, Children of God, Sons of God. These names are appropriate at the present time.

But ought "we" not to agree on some one name and use that exclusively?

No, not if "we" are to be guided in this matter by the believers in the Apostolic Age. They used a number of names, and we are certainly at liberty to do the same.

"What authority have you in the New Testament for printing the word Disciple with a large D?"

No authority whatever! Divine authority is not needed in a case of this kind. Common sense is a good thing in religion as in everything else. Every man ought to keep a supply on hand for such emergencies as the present. Whether the initial letter of a word shall be capitalized is a matter of taste. If you ask me for New Testament authority for printing the first letter in this sentence as a capital I confess that I cannot give book, chapter and verse.

My taste may be at fault, but it causes me to write the names Friends, Brethren, Saints, Disciples, Believers, Christians, Fellow-Citizens, Children of God, Sons of God, as they are printed in this sentence, i. e., each word beginning with a capital letter. This is with me a mere matter of taste. It is not at all a matter of principle. Your taste may not be the same as mine. In fact, your taste may be superior to mine. About a matter of this kind we will not fall out. There is no principle involved. We are brethren. Let us behave ourselves as such.

Do you not see a danger at this point?

There is danger that we will substitute names for things. That a degree of importance belongs to names is not denied, but it is far more important that we shall be the right kind of persons than it is that we shall have the proper name. One may have a good name with a bad character.

In the New Testament teaching character is everything. "Love, joy, peace, long suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance" are the essential features of a character with which God is well pleased. Against the man who possesses these traits "there is no law." God help us to cultivate these graces. Let every one of us be sure that we ARE Christians, Believers, Disciples of Christ, Children of God, Saints, Fellow-Citizens in the Kingdom of Christ, Sons of the Most High.

In reply to your inquiry concerning the frequent observance of the Lord's Supper I have this to say: There is no law requiring Believers in Christ to assemble on every first day in the week to partake of the Communion in memory of Christ Jesus our Lord. Note well the fact that I say "there is no LAW" to this effect. Examine the New Testament statements concerning the beginning of this feast. There is only a single note of time in all that is said on that subject, and that note is indefinite. Paul says, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come."

Matthew says that Jesus "took bread, and blessed and brake it; and he gave it to the disciples and said, Take, eat; this is my body."

Mark says that Jesus "took bread, and when he had blessed, he brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take ye: this is my body."

Luke says that "he took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave to them, saying, This is my body which is given for you, this do in rembrance of me."

Matthew says that our Lord "took a cup and gave thanks, and gave to them saying, Drink ye all of it".

Mark says that "he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave them, and they all drank of it."

Luke says that the Master "took the cup in like manner after supper, saying, This cup is the new covenant in my blood, even that which is poured out for you."

This is all. John does not give an account of the institution of the Lord's Supper. There is no intimation in the Gospel as to the frequency of the observance of this feast of love. So far as they are concerned the Communion may be once a day, once a week, once a month, once a quarter, once a year or once in a lifetime. "This do in remembrance of me" are the words of the Master. As to frequency he says nothing.

From 1 Cor. 16:1-2 we learn that the Christians living in Galatia and Achaia were in the habit of coming together on the first day of the week.

From Acts 20:7, we learn that the Disciples of our Lord came together on the first day of the week to break bread—presumably in memory of the death of the Lord Jesus.

There is no doubt that this custom, to say the least, met with the approval of the Apostles of Christ. This is what the Fathers, our Fathers, called "an approved precedent."

There is a grievous thing under the sun. It is this: There are large numbers of men and women whose residences are convenient to places of public worship, but who, notwithstanding the fact that they claim to be members of the Christian Church, neglect to unite with the congregation convenient to them.

It is said that J. V. Coombs, during his meeting, recently held with the South Prospect Street Church in Kansas City, Mo., found fifty such persons within five blocks of the church.

Such persons are likely to inform the minister that they are members of the Christian Church—that they can never be Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists or Methodists. Probably it would be better for them if they were consistent Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians or Baptists, than to be such grossly inconsistent members (?) of the Christian Chnrch.

At a recent meeting of the congregations of Disciples in Kansas City a resolution was passed to the effect that it was the sense of those present—and the meeting was well attended—that in each church there should be an Outlook Committee, whose duty it shall be to find unaffiliated members and urge them to take membership in the church most convenient to their place of residence, or in which they can render most efficient service.

This action is commended. It is worthy of imitation. It is an important step in the right direction. Let the pastors follow these members, who remove from their parishes, with letters urging them to unite with the church near their new home. This will be another step in the right direction.

St. Louis Letter.

Probably the youngest pastor in the city is Baxter Waters, of the Central Church. That he is wise appears in the ease with which he followed F. G. Tyrrell. I have heard prominent men, who have heard him preach, say that he is a young man of great promise. His sermons are studiously prepared, thoughtful, and he is generally well liked.

The newest work in the city is in Carondelet, the southern extremety of the city. Several attempts have been made to establish a church there, but with only partial success, until the city mission board sent A. J. Marshall, our city evangelist, into that field. They now have a good organization, good property (cost $2,500) partly paid for, and are doing regular work.

Brother Marshall, who is now assisting the Fourth Church in a protracted meeting, is jointly employed by our city missionary board and the American Christian Missionary Society, and is being used at present in strengthening the weaker churches. His next work will probably be in the Ellendale suburb, where we have a few members and a small chapel, but where we ought to have a strong church. Brother Marshall is not flashy in his methods, but sober, industrious and persistent.

The only assistant male pastor we yet have in St. Louis is Brother Cook, of the First Church. Brother Cook is a young man and Brother Fannon finds plenty of work for him to do. Indeed, he could keep a dozen assistants at work in this city, if he had them. We are not informed as to the division of the work between this pastor and his assistant, but we hear of much work and large results in the church. Their crowds of people and the conversions are strong testimonials to their efficiency.

St. Louis is the home of one of the most widely known and successful evangelists in our brotherhood, S. M. Martin, who has recently concluded a great meeting in Huntington, Va. Brother Martin's praise is so well known throughout the churches that we need not repeat it here. He is an orator, an elocutionist and an enjoyable entertainer as well as a defiant but dignified preacher. His membership is in the First Church and his address is 3531 Bell Avenue.

Another preacher of note among us has taken up headquarters, recently, in this city, and that is Elder J. B. Briney, formerly of Moberly, Mo. Brother Briney is undertaking the publication of a magazine to be called "Briney's Monthly," and of course wants it to issue from St. Louis. The arrival of a copy of the first number of this magazine has been announced in a former issue of this paper, first from Paris, Mo., but we understand is to be published in this city as soon as arrangements can be made. Perhaps the founder of this magazine thinks St. Louis has so degenerated in sound doctrine that only something Briney can save it. All right; let us have the savor—Briney's Monthly—if savor it shall prove to be. In the meantime, we shall boast of the presence of so able an expounder of the gospel as a resident of our city.

C. J. Kimball, our proof-reader, belongs to the preachers' class. He lost his wife some months ago, is getting along in years, and does not now preach regularly, but still loves the association of preachers. He used to read proof for the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST many years ago.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST must not be forgotten as one of our St. Louis preachers. He is a kind of pastor of pastors, whose presence and voice all respect in our ministerial association. He does not preach regularly, but cannot resist all calls for sermons on special occasions and addresses before conventions, lectureships and institutes. But you have probably heard of J. H. Garrison before.

Then there are his two sons, A. O. and W. E. Garrison, both of whom have filled pulpits acceptably and both of whom are now residents of St. Louis. A. O. Garrison is married and thinks himself the father of the handsomest and smartest little girl in the city, and the grandparents smile consent. W. E. Garrison has just surrendered a professorship in Butler College, Irvington, Ind., for a place on the editorial staff of this paper and will henceforth contribute more largely to its columns.

W. W. Dowling may kick at seeing his name in this list, but he is a preacher, nevertheless. He objected to his picture on the front page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but it got there just the same. He preaches to the largest audience of children, young people and old people, of any man in our ranks. In fact, we know of no man that holds three such audiences, simultaneously, year after year, with increasing interest and numbers. And then, too, we have seen him in the pulpit and heard him preach, but he seldom leaves the city on such errands.

There is also the assistant editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who still claims his place among the preachers of the city, and whom they now use chiefly as a convenience for supply work. But an editor, like other men, is a failure at serving two masters, and hence the office has been his chief work for the last five years.

But we are not done yet. There is a young man, W. R. Shanks, now a student of the law school of Washington University, of this city, who preaches for Illinois churches every Sunday. He is an energetic, promising young man.

John Burns may not like this, but he preaches, nevertheless, and we shall call him one of our St. Louis preachers. His parish is the Christian Orphans' Home where he conducts services every Lord's day afternoon. Brother Burns has endured afflictions, but he is still of good cheer and joyous heart. He is one of the old standbys of the cause of Christ in St. Louis.

Another preacher, whose name awakens memories in many hearts, is that of John Owen. Brother Owen is not regularly employed in ministerial work, being in business, but preaches acceptably and has to respond to frequent calls. He is as true as steel to the gospel and as conscientious as a man can well be in his dealings.

Two other of our home boys have become preachers. These are Roy Handley, of the Beulah Church, and Elmer Shepard, of the Fourth Church. They are not now in the city, but this remains their headquarters. Roy Handley, at present, is traveling in the interest of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, preaching as opportunity affords and Elmer Shepard is now working in Southeast Missouri, under the auspices of the State Sunday-school Board; both are worthy young men, of fair ability and good conscience. Receive them as becometh saints in the Lord.

Another preacher, with headquarters in this city, 712 Commercial Building, is our widely known Bible-school secretary, H. F. Davis. We seldom see him, nor does any one else of this city, his wife probably not excepted, except when she accompanies him. Though not an angel, he is on the wing about all his time; and yet he is an angel of mercy to many barren districts of Missouri, as also to the Bible-schools.

But we are trespassing, and yet we have hardly hinted that we have women in St. Louis who are preachers—or preacheresses, as you like—but if they will pardon us for mentioning the men first we shall devote our next letter, in its entirety, to their side of the house. W. W. H.

THE WELSH EISTEDDFOD.

One of the notable recent gatherings here was the National Welsh Eisteddfod at New Year's time. It is an ancient institution of this splendid and vigorous people, who will not be "assimilated," although they have been under Anglican law and association these centuries. You know the Welsh claim descent from Gomer, Noah's grandson, and were the Cimmerii of antiquity and the Cimbii of Roman times.

The Druids were their ancient order of priests, and Cæsar tells in his Commentaries of one of the early Eisteddfods under their auspices. But the historic Eisteddfod dates to 540 A. D., since which records have been kept and the observance quite regular. Tradition goes back to the dim past of 1000 B. C., when Prydain ab Aedd Mawr, who then ruled Britain, presided at a great gathering, and it is supposed to have been an old institution even then. It is the Welshman's pride, and wherever he is found in numbers he clings to this ancient institution. It is his religious cradle, for from Druid days he has been reverential. It is the birthplace of his liberties, for in these great national gatherings were laws promulgated in a most democratic way, and he claims it was the birthplace of the Jeffersonian sublime government by the consent of the governed, etc. It has ever been the schooling-place for music, poetry, oratory; in fact, all learning and art.

The primitive Eisteddfod of history was tribal and each of the five "Bardic" provinces of Wales had its motto. They will give an idea of the character of the institution. "Truth Against the World" is the general motto. The tribal ones were, "God and All That is Good," "Heart to Heart," "Jesus Forbid Injustice," "He That Slays Shall be Slain," "Under the Protection of God and His Peace." These great democratic gatherings became the government, church and college of the Cymric tribes.

To-day the meetings are largely devoted to music. This Cincinnati gathering opened with an inspiring religious service, with preaching in English and Welsh, on Sunday. Then from early morning until late night Monday the various vocalists contested for prizes in solo, duet, quartette and chorus singing. All this was interspersed with original poems and elocutionary efforts. It was an enthusiastic gathering of a rare and noble people.

THE NEW MUNICIPAL CODE.

The eyes of municipal reformers everywhere are now on the Ohio Legislature to see what becomes of the report of the "Municipal Code" commission. The commission and the result of their labors are most gratifying if they are not now so "doctored" in passing as to destroy the real virtue in them. The code is modeled after the recommendation of the Civil Reform Committee, of some time ago, for which Albert Shaw and other notable men of character and wisdom were responsible.

The party caucus will be eliminated and the principle of the initiative used in nomination. A petition by a minimum number of voters will make a man a candidate, so it is hoped the "Bosses'" power will be minimized. The mayor will appoint the heads of four executive departments: those of law, safety, improvement and account, thus fixing a direct responsibility and giving executive power. Every other official in the department's forces will get his place by civil service, and the city purse thus closed to the "gang."

The legislative body will be composed of seven men, four of whom will represent districts, and the other three be elected at large, thus doing away with the cumbersome double house plan of the present. The mayor can veto, and the direct power of the executive departments will be much more as they are in the cities of Glasgow, Birmingham and other English municipalities where such great strides forward have been taken. Each city of over three thousand will be a law unto itself and not under the direction of a foreign legislature, which can saddle a fifty-year street car monopoly on it, as in the case of Cincinnati. No franchise can be given away or sold without a referendum vote. Give the people a good opportunity and a little stimulating education and they will settle the municipal ownership question rightly, and that right quickly, too.

THE YEAR IN THE CHURCHES.

The writer made a sort of census of the churches of the city last year, and has repeated it for '99. The figures are not correct to the digit, but are approximately correct, and show a very favorable comparison, all in all. There were 310 conversions as against 350 last year, but we have had no city evangelist since April; so the number thus gained at regular services is perhaps greater than last year. The total gain to the churches, minus all losses, seems to show an increase of 20 per cent. This year $41,000 was raised for all purposes as compared with $35,000 for last, and it is most gratifying to note the overwhelming increase in missionary giving. Last year $4,400 was given for missions; this year, $7,000—an increace of 60 per cent. The record ought to read in five figures this coming year. A new church was organized at Delta Avenue last Lord's day. The above figures are for Greater Cincinnati, of course. The Norwood Church celebrated the recent acquisition of a new church home last Sunday. The word is, "All's well" along the whole line.

It is Truly a God-send to All Humanity, and the Greatest Blessing Ever Bestowed Upon Man, Woman or Child.

Many letters have reached us concerning this wonderful Cabinet, described in a former issue. A searching investigation has been made, and we can assure our readers it is just as represented and everything claimed for it.

All who want to have perfect health, a clear skin, beautiful complexion, prevent Colds, Fever, La-Grippe and Disease, and enjoy all the marvelous, cleansing, beautifying and curative elements of the famous Turkish, Russian, Sulphur Vapor Baths, perfumed or medicated if desired, at home in your own room for 3 cents each, should have one of the remarkable 1902 Style Square Quaker Turkish Bath Cabinets.

Water baths simply wash the surface. The Cabinet Bath, perfectly safe both Summer and Winter, opens the 5,000,000 pores of the skin, sweats out all the poisons and effete matter which cause disease, cleanses you inwardly and outwardly, purifies your blood, makes your eyes bright, your skin clear, your nerves strong, sleep sound, appetite good. One week's use will make a new being of you.

This is a genuine Cabinet with a real door; handsomely made; best materials; rubber lined; heavy steel frame; top curtains, in fact, all the latest improvements; will last 20 years; not a cheap, flimsy affair, but strong, substantial, ready for use when received.

Over 27,000 Physicians and 1,000,000 happy users recommend this Cabinet for bathing purposes.

Dr. A. B. Stockham, Chicago, editor Tokology, recommends it highly, as also does Hon. B. F. Shipley, Moroa, Ill; Rev. H. Gardner, well-known Evangelist; M. C. Gropner, M.D., 375 Center St., Boston; Congressman John J. Lentz and thousands of others.

Mrs. S. H. Tripler, 36 Park Row, New York City, had Rheumatism and other troubles 20 years, was cured in one week, says this Cabinet is a God-send to every woman, worth $1,000.

G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., was compelled to quit business, walked on crutches, drugs and doctors failed, was relieved by the first bath, entirely cured in 14 days.

J. W. VanTassel cured himself of Lumbago, and his friends of Blood and Skin Diseases, Kidney Affections, Nervousness, Piles etc., and made $1,500 selling this Cabinet in 5 months. No one afflicted can afford to be without this Cabinet for a single day.

The makers guarantee results and assert positively as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will cure Nervousness, Weakness, Aches, Pains, Colds and Rheumatism (they offer $50 for a case not relieved). Purifies the Blood, cures Sleeplessness, LaGrippe, Neuralgia, Headaches, Indigestion, Piles, Dropsy, all Blood, Skin, Liver, Kidney, and Urinary troubles. Has wonderful power to prevent and cure Women's complaints.

A Face and Head Steamer is furnished if desired, which cleanses the skin, beautifies complexion, removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions, and is a sure cure for all skin diseases, Eczema, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis and Throat troubles.

All our readers should write to-day to The World Mfg. Co., 1154 World Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, for valuable book and testimonials; or better still, order a Cabinet at once.

The price is wonderfully low. It is a regular $12.00 Cabinet for only $5.00, complete with stove, formulas for baths and various ailments, and plain directions. Face Steamer, $1.00 extra.

The firm is perfectly reliable; capital $100,000.00, ships same day your remittance is received, and refunds your money after 30 days' use if the Cabinet is not just as represented. Send for Booklet anyway.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 every month and expenses.

A Prophet in His Own Country.

I am again back in my native county. More than half a century ago I first saw the light of day in this (Audrain) county. It was here I spent my boyhood days, here I grew up to manhood. I have swung around the circle and at last am back home again. All my work is in this my own county. Two Sundays in the month I preach at Benton City, six miles east of Mexico. One-fourth my time at Macedonia, where I have preached a great deal in days gone by.

As a rule a prophet is without honor in his own country and in the midst of his relations, says Jesus; but my case seems to be an exception. My best friends are here, and all my work is in my native county. I live in one mile of the place where I was born. So much I am proud of. I realize that if I live long enough I will be old, but in spirit I am as young as ever, and in spirit I shall never be old. "As a man thinketh, so is he.' I want to spend the remnant of my natural life laboring in the "vineyard of the Lord." I think I can truly say with the poet:

> "I love thy kingdom, Lord,
> The house of thine abode,
> The church our blest Redeemer saved
> With his own precious blood.
> For her my tears shall fall,
> For her my prayers ascend,
> To her my cares and toils be given
> Till toils and cares shall end."

I believe God is with you, my brother, and as an old man once said to Mr. Lincoln, "the people, too, sir." I think you have been misunderstood by some of our good brethren and are to-day, but so was Jesus Christ, and so have been the best and truest men of earth. Be faithful to Jesus, my brother, and all will be well. W. H. HOOK.

Who Wrote The Ten Commandments?

It is very important to get matters of fact exactly right, and this is my reason for asking the privilege of another word as to the writer of the Decalogue. In his reply to my former criticism Bro. Garrison wrongly assumes, in my opinion, that verses 1, 27 and 28, in Ex. 34, all refer to the Ten Commandments. Between verses 1 and 27 are a dozen or more statutes which God ordained for the government of Israel, and it seems to me to be clear that these are the things that Moses was to write, as per verse 27, and they surely do not necessarily include what God said He would write. The Lord commanded Moses to prepare the tables of stone and take them up into the mountain, and when the Lord appeared to him there He said, "Behold I make a covenant;" and then proceeded to give sundry commands for the people to observe, the last of which is, "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk." Immediately following these injunctions is the command, "Write thou these words," and "these words" are manifestly the words that God had just spoken, and not the words that he had written upon tables of stone several days before, and which He said He would rewrite. I am unable to see how this natural and grammatical interpretation brings the passages "in conflict" with each other. There are at least twenty commandments in the covenant that Moses was to write, but the covenant that "he" wrote only embraced the "ten commandments," and this suggests that "he" was not Moses.

But the strongest point in my argument—the one that seems to me to be a demonstration—Bro. Garrison utterly fails to notice. In Deut. 10:1-4 we have the following language: "At that time the Lord said unto me, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first, and come up unto me into the mount, and make thee an ark of wood. And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first tables which thou brakest, and thou shalt put them in the ark. So I made an ark of acacia wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand. And he wrote on the tables according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of fire in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me." It is difficult to see how language could be more explicit than this. It tells particularly what Moses did, and what the Lord did; and it is expressly declared that God wrote the ten commandments and gave them to Moses. This, as it seems to me, ought to settle the question with all who believe the Scriptures; and if it does not, then plain statements of the Bible amount to nothing.

I agree with Bro. Garrison that the Decalogue would be just as authoritative if Moses wrote it by divine command, as if God wrote it personally. But that is not the question. The matter relates to the credibility of the Scriptures as to a plain statement of fact, such as is made in the passage quoted above, to which it is desirable that Bro. Garrison give his careful attention.

J. B. BRINEY.

[In other words, Bro. Briney holds that the credibility of this record can only be maintained by denying that God used any human instrumentality in writing the Ten Commandments on the tables of stone. This seems to us wholly unnecessary, and it involves consequences from which Bro. Briney himself would shrink. Let an infidel take that premise and go through the Bible with it and he would play sad havoc with many passages. We do not admit the premise. We hold that whether God revealed to Moses what He would have him write, or whether He Himself, without human instrumentality, made the letters on the stone, in either case it is equally true that God wrote the Ten Commandments, and to take any other position is, in our judgment, dangerous and untenable. We leave it at that, without entering into the question of how much more the former method comports with God's way of making His revelations to men, as seen in both the Old and New Testaments.—EDITOR.]

Notes and News.

Reports show 1899 to have been the best year in the history of the church in Springfield, Ill. There were 291 additions, 106 being parents in families. The total mission offerings amounted to $1,483.65, which exceeded those of 1898 by $400. The church raised for all purposes last year, $8,028.13, or $2,200 more than in 1898, and this, too, in addition to the liquidation of the debt balance against the church. The Sunday-school and the Endeavor Society are said to be the best in the city. The pastor, Bro. Lynn, is a fine organizer and greatly essteemed by the church for his work's sake. He is secretary of the Springfield Associated Charities. His annual report to the church strongly recommends the establishment of another church in Springfield this year.

G. S. Battenfield reports good progress of the church in Eureka Springs, Ark. The church raised $875 in 1899, being 20 per cent. more than was raised in 1898. Since Bro. Battenfield began with the church last June, 26 have been added to the church, a Bible-school increased and a Bethany Reading Circle established with over 50 members. The pastor has been called to remain with the church indefinitely.

The annual reports of the various activities of the Compton Heights Church, this city, were very encouraging. The church is well organized and highly esteems its pastor, S. B. Moore. During 1899 there were 89 additions and 16 departures, leaving an enrollment of 340 members Jan. 1st, 1900. W. P. French, the clerk of the church, says: "While our prospects are so bright we do not forget to pause and reflect upon what depends our success. We realize that our efforts must be simply along the line given to us in the book of life. 'Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God gives the increase.'"

"A HEART AS STURDY as an oak." If the heart is to be sturdy and the nerves strong, the blood must be rich and pure. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes hearts sturdy because it makes good blood. It gives strength and courage.

MISSIONARY.

C. S. WEAVER AND WIFE.

The Preachers and the March Offering.

If the preachers have an intelligent interest and give enthusiastic co-operation, the success of the March Offering is assured. It will be little trouble to raise $200,000. They hold the key to success or failure. It will be a fruitless effort without their support. The interest of the preacher in missions measures the interest of the church. The preacher by his own enthusiasm may kindle a passion for missions which will stir up the careless and indifferent and make all feel that missionary zeal is at once the heart and the life-blood of the church. He can make the congregation realize that missions is the supreme test of its loyalty to Christ.

One preacher every Sunday morning before the sermon gives a five-minutes prelude on missions, adapted especially to the men of the church. In contrast to this, another preacher, when he was called to a new church, abolished the whole system of missionary offerings on the ground that these offerings cut into the money needed for current expenses.

Another contrast: One of our city churches had for its preacher a godly, wide-awake, growing man, who always took the March Offering and secured a handsome sum. Under his ministry the church was prosperous in all its work; and was happy. This useful preacher was succeeded by another who did not take to the annual offering for Foreign Missions. He complained, of course, that it was difficult to meet current expenses; and so the missionaries in foreign lands were forgotten. This preacher is not successsful, the church is not happy, and he is now seeking another field.

The preacher is personally responsible for the missionary interest in the church he serves. He is its shepherd. No man can preach God's Word who does not preach missions. Cut missions out of the New Testament and it will bleed to death. The missionary cause is vital. The man that ignores missions preaches only a mutilated gospel.

The real preacher is a leader. The churches are looking for leaders, and they will follow. Give us missionary preachers, and we will have missionary churches. The preacher who is not leading is dying. He must either inspire or expire. The preacher must lead if he will live. He must not only talk boldly, but give liberally. This is the eloquence that tells.

The March Offering will measure, not only the churches, but the preachers as well. The amount in the offering will be a measure of what is in the head and heart of the preacher.

We will cheerfully help the preachers and churches by sending March Offering Envelopes, Missionary Voices and Pastoral Letters free of charge.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

EVERY Sunday-School, Endeavor Society, EVERY Reading Circle, Private Family, especially every one of these organizations and institutions in anywise connected with the Christian Church, ought to be abundantly supplied with

OUR YOUNG FOLKS A large sixteen-page Illustrated Weekly, devoted to Bible Study, Christian Work and Home Culture, Instruction and Amusement.

The Reasons why this should be so are many, prominent among which are the following:

1. Because there is no other journal covering so wide a field and especially set for so important a work.
2. Because no other journal of its class has so large and distinguished a corps of special contributors.
3. Because no other paper of like merit and cost of production is offered at such a low price—only 50 cents per year in clubs of 10 or more.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY Is hereby opened to any competent person to do a good work and reap a rich pecuniary reward. The Publishers of Our Young Folks desire canvassing agents to visit every Christian Church, Sunday-school and Endeavor Society on the Western Hemisphere, and take orders for the journal. From 10 to 100 copies can be placed in nearly every such organization where the paper is not already taken. Where this cannot be done for any reason, a canvass for individual subscribers is desired, which will pay nearly as well on account of the larger cash commissions that will be allowed. Samples, and full information as to terms and so forth, will be furnished on application. Address,

March Offering Notes.

Last year the churches as churches gave a little over $56,000. May we not depend upon them for at least $75,000 in this good year of 1900?

The following from Frank W. Mutchler, Center, Wis., has a determined ring: "I will work hard for $200,000. We must have it! Will begin to urge now. I will speak of it every Sunday."

Many make a church debt an excuse for not observing the March Offering. Howard T. Cree, of Maysville, Ky., says: "Though burdened with a church debt, we thiuk the best way to get out is give out to missious." This is the universal testimony of all who have tried it.

R. L. McHatton, of Santa Rosa, Cal., long secretary in that state, hits the nail on the head in the following: "I believe all our mission work is dependent on the preacher in charge. If you get the preachers thoroughly aroused to their duty, I think we will have the problem largely solved. I also believe that nearly every preacher we have in California will assist you this year."

G. N. Shishmanian, our faithful missionary in Constantinople, Turkey, sending a pledge for $25 for Foreign Missions this year, adds: "If I am permitted to add a word; it is that I regret it is put down to $200,000 instead of $500,000." Our missionaries in the presence of the awful needs for the foreign field see no reason why we do not give more than twice as much as we are now giving, and no reason can be given why we should not.

It is a good sign to see a preacher take a pride in raising the full apportionment of the church. The following from Will G. Loucks, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., represents hundreds of preachers who have a deep and practical interest in preaching the gospel to every creature: "We have more than reached our apportionment for two years. I intend that we shall do the same this year. God help us to send the gospel into all the world, and do it as fast as we can."

There is a lively interest in the March Offering this year and the raising of $200,000. Let the churches order their March Offering supplies at once. Address a postal card to F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, O., giving the number in your church, and the necessary supplies will be furnished at once. A. McLEAN, Cor. Sec.

"Speak Unto The People That They Go Forward."

In every Christian enterprise we need to learn the lesson that the work of God is never to cease, never to stand still, but ever to advance. To halt is to recede. Grow or die, is the rule for organic as well as individual life. It is well for us to remember this just now, in regard to our great missionary cause. At the Jubilee Convention, last October, we rejoiced over the magnificent reports from all our boards. Unless we do better this year than last, we shall have no cause for rejoicing next October. Last year we raised $150,000 for Foreign Missions. We must raise not less than $200,000 this year. Why?

1. Because this is the Silver Anniversary of our Foreign Society, and it is the least we can properly do, in celebration of this event, to make so modest an increase in the income of the society.

2. Because the society is sending out new workers into the field, who must be supported, while others stand ready to go, so soon as we will supply the means to send them. Two hundred and twenty-nine laborers are now in the foreign field, and ten more will soon go. Dare we delay their departure by our failure to supply the needed funds?

3. Because additional equipment is needed by nearly all our missionaries, some of whom are sadly handicapped by inadequate buildings and other conveniences essential to successful work.

4. Because God hath richly blessed us at home in material and spiritual things; while our workers abroad have gathered rich fruit from their planting and watering. Let us make a worthy thank-offering to him. W. F. RICHARDSON.

The Fear of Humbug

Prevents Many People From Trying a Good Medicine.

Stomach troubles are so common and in most cases so obstinate to cure that people are apt to look with suspicion on any remedy claiming to be a radical, permanent cure for dyspepsia and indigestion. Many such pride themselves on their acuteness in never being humbugged, especially in medicines.

This fear of being humbugged can be carried too far, so far, in fact, that many people suffer for years with weak digestion rather than risk a little time and money in faithfully testing the claims made of a preparation so reliable and universally used as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Now Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are vastly different in one important respect from ordinary proprietary medicines, for the reasons that they are not a secret patent medicine, no secret is made of their ingredients, but analysis shows them to contain the natural digestive ferments, pure aseptic pepsin, the digestive acids, Golden Seal, bismuth, hydrastis snd nux. They are not cathartic, neither do they act powerfully on any organ, but they cure indigestion on the common-sense plan of digesting the food eaten thoroughly before it has time to ferment, sour and cause the mischief. This is the only secret of their success.

Cathartic pills never have and never can cure indigestion and stomach troubles, because they act entirely on the bowels, whereas the whole trouble is really in the stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets taken after meals digest the food. That is all there is to it. Food not digested is poison, as it creates gas, acidity, headache, palpitation of the heart, loss of flesh and appetite and many other troubles which are often called by some other name.

They are sold bo druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. Address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for little book on stomach diseases, sent free.

New London, Jan. 14.—In a recent meeting here with home forces only we had ten additions. At Mount Zion we called to our aid the singing evangelist, Chas. L. Harbord, of Canton. As a song leader and teacher, as well as a personal worker, we found him valuable. Baptized 14 and two added otherwise. Baptized two since the meeting closed, and also one at New London. Warsaw.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting at this place. The meeting was a great success in every way save that the additions were not numerous. The church has been established 50 years or more, and has of late been much run down, owing to death and removals. The active membership was less than 40 and there had been no regular preaching for nearly two years. But the people made up their minds to re-establish the church on a better foundation. The meeting resulted in 21 additions, all told. They will employ a preacher and organize a Sunday-school. We ought to have a strong and active church in Warsaw, and I have no doubt that this result will be reached in a few years. I am beginning to get acquainted with my work and to like the prospect.—JOHN LOGAN, dist. evan., Sedalia district.

St. Louis.—At our preachers' meeting, Jan. 22, the following additions were reported for last Sunday: First, five; six baptisms, Central, two baptisms. Fourth, two confessions; 15 for the meeting just closed. Compton Heights, two additions. West End, one. Beulah, one. Mt. Cabanne, two.—W. W. H.

To Launder Lace Curtains.

Shake all the dust from the curtains, and soak them over night in plenty of cold water. In the morning rinse them out in several waters before putting them in suds; then use a tablespoonful of Gold Dust Washing Powder to a quart of boiling water, and wash the curtains by squeezing up and down. Rinse thoroughly, and if you wish them very white, slightly blue the last water. Dry them in the open air, then put them through the wringer. If you have curtain frames put them in, but if not, tack old sheets on the floor and pin them to it.

ILLINOIS.

Girard, Jan. 13.—Bro. E. C. Sharpe, who has been the successful pastor of this church for the past year, begins a meeting Sunday, assisted by the writer. Bro. Sharpe will do the preaching, and we are anticipating a good meeting, for the harvest is ripe. Two confessions and baptisms the last two weeks. I would like to engage with some pastor or evangelist for a meeting in March. Address me here.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, gospel singer.

Galesburg, Jan. 8.—There were four additions here yesterday; seven since last report. Church work along all lines very encouraging.—C. H. WHITE.

Atlanta, Jan. 15.—We are having additions here almost every Sunday. One confession at the morning service yesterday.—W. R. JINNETT.

Pittsfield, Jan. 15.—Great meeting in progress here. Greatest audiences in the history of this city; 33 additions yesterday; 45 last six days. J. V. Coombs doing the preaching.—R. F. THRAPP.

Jacksonville, Jan. 15.—There were 14 additions to the Church of Christ in this city at services held during the "week of prayer," and four on last Lord's day.—WALLACE BROCKMAN.

Augusta, Jan. 16.—Our meeting began on the 6th and Bro. G. W. Buckner, of Clarksville, Mo., is in the pulpit. He is a fluent, forceful and logical speaker, and is speaking to full houses daily. The interest is widening and deepeniug, and we think the times are ripe for a good work. Three confessions to date.—A. L. FERGUSON.

Jacksonville, Jan. 11.—There were eight additions last Lord's day. We are observing the week of prayer. Jan. 12th there were three confessions, and two by letter last night at close of prayer-meeting. This may develope into a protracted meeting.—A. C. ROACH, associate pastor.

Virginia, Jan. 12.—Meeting closed at Blanchard, Iowa, with 55 additions; 38 of them heads of families; 29 of them men. Bro. D. A. Hunter has been employed for all his time. Commenced here last Sunday. Bro. J. H. Stark is the pastor.—R. A. OMER.

Gillespie, Jan.—The meetings conducted by Evangelists Jas. W. Zachary, of Lexington, Ky., and J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill., came to a close Dec. 28, 1899. Bro. Zachary closed his service Dec. 22, and Bro. Luttenberger continued the meetings until Dec. 28. The meeting resulted in six additions; four by confession and baptism and two by commendation. Although there were but few additions, yet the meeting was a success. Bros. Zachary and Luttenberger both deserve great praise for their work in the Lord's cause. At the close of the meeting a re-election of officers took place, and on the followining Sunday Bro. Luttenberger organized a Sunday-school. We hope to have the prayers of God's people for our success at this place.—LENORA LYNCH, church clerk.

In Life's Great Book.

LAURENE HIGHFIELD.

In life's great book a page, all new,
We turn with each new year, they say,
Whereon to place each word and deed
In lasting record, day by day.
We see it spread before our eyes,
A page all clean and fair and white;
With glowing hearts and eager hands,
We hopefully begin to write.
We plan to pen an epic grand,
A lyric soft, or poem sweet;
To make our page a history
With noble thoughts and acts replete.
But one day a mistake appears,
Another brings an angry stain;
We try to rub it out; mayhap
'Tis followed with a holier strain:
Perhaps the ink from last year's tale
Keeps staining through and spoils the page;
Perhaps the good is crowded out
As baser themes our pens engage.
Our epic dwindles to a verse;
So swiftly speeds away the time,
Our lyric has no rhythm or tune,
Our poem sweet is merely rhyme.
The year is gone; the page is filled;
A grief, a blot, a sigh, a tear,
All interspersed with happier things,
Make the brief record of a year.
Yet, pressing on toward the ideal,
Which Christ has left us, we may rise
Till every line of record penned
Shall make us worthy of the prize
Which in His name alone is given;
And every failure, every fear,
Be merged in heartfelt thanks to Him
Who grants us yet another year.

The Lost Emigrants.

R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER IX.

How does it happen that when a man does a mean thing it so often proves a committal of the entire life to an evil course? It is the dislodging of a pebble or a bunch of snow on the mountain side, and that detaches something else, and presently a mighty avalanche goes thundering down to the depths below.

The drunken revelers who had fired the ship and given way to a cowardly panic, though deservedly rebuked by Dr. Andral, had thereafter been threatened with the same impartiality that was meted out to the others, but they were indolent, surely, and insolent.

They objected to every enterprise undertaken for the general good; and while they gave reluctant aid in farming, they from the start refused to aid in building the village on the bluff, or to remove from the temporary shelters down at the bay.

There, according to the laws of moral attraction and repulsion, they become the necleus for the riffraff of the colony; while the well disposed went on the bluff.

At the latter place industry thrived and pleasant homes were built. Maria Clarkson went to live at the home of Prof. Fergus and wife, to whom I think she was distantly related.

I was much gratified to receive a cordial invitation to the home of Simon and Rebecca Gray: the more so because I knew it was a welcome to both home and hearts. Some years before, their lives had been saddened and sweetened by the loss of a beloved daughter, and they said to me, "God has given us another. Thee will be a daughter to us." And surely, no daughter ever had a better home.

During the activities of village building we had not forgotten our spiritual duties. Hitherto our place of worship had been canopied by the treetops, or by the overarching sky: pleasant enough, but winter was coming. And so we set to work to put up a house for church and school purposes, where in due time Maria Clarkson was installed as teacher.

While the work of building was going on, at a Sunday meeting Captain Wolcott said: "Brethren, I would have been a Christian long ago if there had been clear sailing. but the members of the different churches came to me and from the Captain to the cook said: 'Throw a line and I'll tow you into the harbor.' And as no two of them agreed in the bearings I said: 'I'll let go the halyards and cast another till the fog lifts.' And there I've stayed to this day. But, thank God, the fog is lifting and you begin to agree in your reckoning, and are ready to pull together, and I want to sail into port. Others want to come aboard—they've said as much to me—but we are all somewhat confused about it until you give us the exact bearings."

Mr. White said: "One thing at least is clear: we are to 'seek the Lord while he may be found, to call upon him while he is near.' Let us, therefore, pray with and for these who seek him, that they may trust in him and find salvation."

Accordingly, he led in a fervent prayer in their behalf.

In conclusion Mr. Fergus said: "As we have agreed to settle every question by the express teaching of the Bible let us earnestly and prayerfully go to the fountain of truth, the Word of God, and study the matter of conversion preparatory to our next conference."

Accordingly, the hour appointed for the next meeting found a goodly number present, at which time Mr. White said that his views on conversion were embodied in the words of the 50th psalm: "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."

Mr. Gray approvingly added from Joel: "And it shall come to pass, that whoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered."

Miss Petyon, a devout woman, at that period in life with the gentler sex when Father Time kindly omits to make record of the lapsing years, said that she was trying to follow the way of duty and safety as marked out by Solomon in the words: "They that seek me early shall find me."

Mr. McGregor found the way of salvation clearly set forth in the words of Ezekiel: "Repent and turn yourselves from idols, and put away your faces from all your abominations."

Prof. Fergus, following, said: "The passages to which we have listened clearly enjoin a duty. We must seek the Lord; but how? We must call upon his name; but how? The idolatrous Jews were commanded to repent and turn from idols. Certainly, these general commands to the Jews, under the Old Testament, were never intended to point out the specific line of duty of the seeker of salvation under the Savior in the New Testament.

"I, with many others, have had a very confused notion about the Bible, but it was dishonoring to the Scriptures and most bewildering to me. And pondering on this matter I said: 'Is the confusion the Bible's, or is it mine? It cannot be in the Bible. It must be in me. I'll treat the Bible just as I do any other logical book; that is, apply to it the rules of common sense.' I did so, and the confusion vanished.

"I said: 'Here are two Testaments, the Old and the New. The predominating idea in the first is exclusion; the separation of the Jew from all mankind. Of the second, the great purpose is unification; to bind together all the human race. Again, the first offered salvation by works; the second by grace.

"Here were antagonistic ideas, making it impossible for both administrations to exist at once. 'That's what logic says,' said I. 'Now what does the Bible say?' I then turned to the beautiful treatment of the two covenants or testaments in Hebrews, and I found the author saying (Heb. 8:13): 'In that he saith a new covenant he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.' In these words the writer declares the old covenant is obsolete. Again, I read (Heb. 10:9): 'He taketh away the first that he might establish the second.' What does that mean?

Your favorite commentator, Mr. White, Dr. Adam Clarke, says: 'He taketh away the first covenant that he might establish the second covenant. He takes away the law that he might establish the gospel.'

"We will, therefore, not quarrel with Paul when he says (Gal. 3:24,25): 'The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. But when faith is come we are no longer under the schoolmaster.' And no one who believes the Bible will dispute me when I say (Rom. 6:14): 'Ye are not under the law, but under grace.'

"Let us not, then, commit the amazing error of going for the way of salvation to the law, which did not save (Gal. 3:10), to the Levitical offerings which never took away sin (Heb. 10:4), but let us go the gospel of Jesus the Savior: to the cross, where the sacrifice typified in all the offerings of the ages was made—the only sacrifice that ever cleansed a solitary soul from sin.

"As it is an important thing that we be right, I would suggest that we take further time for careful study. If I am incorrect, a close study of the Bible will reveal my error to you and I will be thankful; if correct, your study will confirm my position."

CHAPTER X.

Many other matters besides our religious interests necessarily demanded our attention. With the advancing season it became evident, if we were to have provisions for winter, we must protect our vegetables from the depredations of the hogs and goats. We could do this by building a fence around the few acres in cultivation, but as we hoped to cultivate a much larger area another year, it was thought wiser to adopt another plan.

The arable part of the island was the northern; the pasturable, the southern. Then, there was the bay at which we landed on the east and another indentation on the west, which reduced the width of the island near a mile at this place. A fence from bay to bay would enable us to confine the animals in the southern part and devote the other part to agriculture.

This was the plan proposed by Dr. Andral. It was vigorously opposed by the "blackbirds," as we came to call the dwellers at the cove.

We began calling them "birds" from the name of their leader, Bird. But some of the men said: "That's not black enough, they're blackbirds," and whether fitting or not, the name has clung to them.

Their opposition to the fence was made on the ground of its involving too much labor, when with half the work a fence could be thrown around the field. Many surmised, however, that the real ground of opposition arose from their innate aversion to labor.

The Doctor's plan, however, prevailed, and he was asked to supervise the work. And as expedition was needed to save the crop, he was to use all the force available.

The fence followed the south bank of the brook for some distance, and as this was steep, it did not require much labor to make a secure barrier here. But leaving the brook, a strong and high fence was required thence to the bay on the west, to prevent incursions of the nimble-footed goats.

It was with difficulty that the blackbirds were induced to work at the fence at all. This they did in such a sullen, discontented and perfunctory manner, that the men on the bluff said it was more shirk than work. Reproved for lack of diligence, they threw down their tools and left the field. This led to a visit from the Captain. But his exhortations and expostulations were scornfully rejected. He then, following the line of other potentates when patience has ceased to be a virtue, gave an ultimatum, based upon the Pauline law that if they would not work they should not eat of the harvests saved by the toils of others. But the birds laughed him to scorn; for at the time of the threat, both sea and land were supplying superabundant food, and what did they care for the coming winter?

However, it soon became evident that the birds were not satified with nature's supply of food, but were stealthily robbing from the store saved from the ship which we were preserving for a time of need. Upon this discovery the storeroom was locked; but the lock was broken and the stores disturbed. A trustworthy sailor was put on guard; but a night or two thereafter he was bound and gagged by masked men, and the pillaging continued.

Two armed guards were thereupon appointed, and the stores were not troubled for a season; but after a little the canned goods began again to mysteriously disappear, though neither guards nor locked doors were disturbed. Jack Burton and Dr. Andral took a turn at watching, but without abatement of the theiving or of the mystery.

Accusations made against the blackbirds were met with a stout denial and challenge for the proof, and only served to exasperate them towards the better disposed colonists.

The fact that despite our vigilance, and despite the fact that this vigilance was doubled by guards without and trustworthy watchers within, the goods were still disappearing, without so much as the telltale imprint of a human foot to fix the species of marauder, was so mysterious that it excited in the minds of some a superstitious fear that was by no means quieting to nerves. However, sometime thereafter the veil of darkness enshrouding this matter was lifted, as we shall see.

Not Prepared to be Rich.

Tne writer has a theory that when civilization has become morally prepared to withstand the snares of riches, poverty in large measure will be unknown, and wealth will be used for educating and encouraging our higher selves. But that time has not come. People are not yet sufficiently developed in character as to possess great riches and at the same time stand against the allurements of luxury. An individual may, but not the class. Consequently, the beneficent law of nature soon dissipates their riches and gives them to others. Just now it is being shouted from the housetops that the women of New York's four hundred are drinking too many cocktails of the stronger kind. Pandemonium reigns because of this announcement. Not until Christianity so prevails as to cause rich people to be altruistic in their thinking may we expect the attention of even the women of the four hundred to be diverted from strong drink and extravagant balls. There is no safeguard except in unselfish thinking and living.—The Christian Century.

Where to be Religious.

Many people think they are only religious when they are engaged in prayer, reading the Bible, listening to a sermon, taking the communion, putting money into a contribution box, singing hymns in the church or performing some distinctively religious act; everything else is called secular; these acts only are sacred. But the truth is, a man may be as religious in shoeing a horse, in measuring grain, in weighing coal, in purchasing or selling an article of merchandise as in paying his subscription to the church or attending the prayer-meeting.

The man who resists the temptation to make money by lying and swindling, and does it in the name of Christ and Christian honesty, is more religious, certainly more Christian, than the man who has offered prayers, but will cheat and swindle when he gets the chance.

The woman who can maintain her equanimity and control her temper while bending over a hot stove in warm weather, with children crying and clawing after her, has more religion—or shows more in that transaction—than a dozen Mrs. Jellibys who never miss a prayer-meeting or a convocation of the W. C. T. U.

This is not said in disparagement of the latter, but in emphasis of the right of the former to be included under the head of religion.—Chronicler, in Christian Oracle.

"The Family Altar."

J. H. CALAHAN.

Seasonably to a "reconsideration of the theme," allow me to indite a few observations:

1. Time and times. On the former I would observe that less time is required by reading a portion of Scripture at the table mornings when usualy all are present, when reason forbids rush, and the weekly readings may be substituted or followed and fastened by a few questions, after which or before the questions an appropriate prayer. This is our rule from way back in the '70s, coming from, I believe, a recommendation of D. R. Dungan. I had no family altar training and failed, except as above.

2. The times or age forbids the old way, in that the children grow up and go up and down the street quite early, impatient to get "into the swim" (head and heels), and the old folks generally say, "Blood tells," with a look of pride. Only a few can set up the family altar and, not only keep it up, but make it a great household happiness and household bond of earthly and heavenly blessing.

These few descend from the naturally pious and from childhood familiarized with kindly parental treatment along with participation in the sacredly joyous moments at the family altar. How few are thus started out in life and toward life!

The theme is important and timely, and deserves our best thought that the hit-and-miss or when-the-preacher-comes family altar may become a daily affair, and the multitude of Christian families now without the family altar may be guided to it or to a more excellent way that will bear precious fruit—even to the "healing of the nations."

It pays to wear a smiling face
And laugh our troubles down,
For all our little trials wait
Our laughter or our frown;
Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away,
As melts the frost in early spring
Beneath the sunny ray.

It pays to make a worthy cause,
By helping it, our own;
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.
It pays to comfort heavy hearts,
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
A gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth,
To note, with all their waywardness,
Their courage and their truth;
To strive with sympathy and love
Their confidence to win;
It pays to open wide the heart

Riches in the Transvaal.

The yield of these Kimberley diamond mines is said to average about fifty-five hundred carats a day. They furnish ninety-five per cent. of the world's diamonds. Mr. Kunz, of Tiffany's, estimates that so far nine and a half tons, worth three hundred million dollars in the rough and double that when polished, have been taken out of the Kimberley "yellow and "blue." On a nominal capital of less than twenty millions, the DeBeers Company pays annual dividends of fifty per cent.

But the record of Kimberley should not obscure the fact that elsewhere in South Africa there are "infinite riches in a little room." For instance, the largest diamond known to exist was found at Jagersfontein, eighty miles away—a gem two and a half inches long, one and a quarter inches thick and two inches wide, weighing nine hundred and seventy-one carats, or nearly half a pound avoirdupois. And in many parts of South Africa gold is plentiful, notably in the Witwatersrand region of the Transvaal. When the present war began, the Transvaal was yielding annually about sixty million dollars' worth of gold, or more than one-fifth of the world's production, of which, by the way, the United States is credited with nearly sixty millions.

Conservative authorities have estimated that, carried down to a depth of four thousand feet, the Rand mines will yield in all more than three and a half billion dollars' worth of gold, of which almost a third will represent clear profit.

The old phrase of a "king's ransom" seems thin and meaningless when one realizes the enormous wealth destined to be controlled by the victor in the present struggle.—The Youth's Companion.

A Needed Reform.

Tom came in last week for the first time in months. "Nell's a brick of a girl," he began; "she's taken to doing a lot of things for me. Why, she has made my old room as pretty as her own. Then, almost every day when I get home from school I find she has put up a lunch for me. She's a dear girl!"

"I hope you've told her so."

Tom flushed.

"That's just it! I want to, but—I declare, Aunt Hope, why is a fellow ashamed of being sweet on his own sister? We're all as polite as possible to the other girls!"

"Suppore you start a reform," said I.

"I will. There's to be a social Wednesday evening; I'll invite Nell to go, and give her some flowers."

I felt pretty certain Nell would call after the social, and had not long to wait. Thursday she came wearing some pink carnations.

"O Auntie, I've so much to tell you! Who do you think gave me these flowers? But you'd never guess. My own dear brother Tom. He invited me to go to the social with him and treated me splendidly. We grew really confidential as we walked home, and I told him how I loved him."

In the evening Tom appeared with his version.

"Aunt Hope," he began, "you should have seen Nell. She was so sweet, and Jack Davis wanted to take her home. 'Another time, my boy,' I said, 'I'm her escort to-night.' A lot of the boys heard me, and one or two laughed, but Hal Rhodes told me to-day that he thought we boys were fools not to make more fuss over our own sisters; so you see, the reform is started."—Epworth Herald.

The Red Box Clew.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

When it was about four o'clock, Frank dressed as quietly as she could and slipped down stairs undiscovered. Ronald was waiting at the front gate. It was light enough to see their was through the dusky streets. They hurried toward the Covered Bridge, Frank feeling a little guilty, and Ronald feeling that he was enjoying an adventure. According to arrangement, they seperated before coming to the bridge that Nance might not know that the boy was near; besides, she might have something to say that Ronald ought not to hear; but if Frank cried out, then Ronald was to come forward. The Covered Bridge looked very dark and unpleasant, as Frank slowly approached it; and it did not improve in appearance when Nance stepped forth from its gloom. "Here you are, my plum pudding," she said, holding out her skinny arms. "Now you know you air my own daughter, and I am yore long-lost mommy. Come to yore mommy's arms, you apple dumpling you, and kiss yore mommy!"

"I shall do nothing of the kind!" Frank declared, shrinking back. "I do not believe you are my—my mother. But I believe you can tell me who is my mother, and that's why I've come."

"Oh, ho! You don't believe I'm yore mommy after I've came clur from St. Louis, awalking my toes off, to get one kiss of my little gal? You come here, and you kiss yore pore ole mommy, that loves you like you was pies!"

"If you care so much," said Frank, still retreating from the extended arms, "why have you left me so long with strangers? Why did you desert me? No, you are not my mother, you are not!"

"I tell you I am yore mommy. And I'll tell you more; I'm starving to death of poverty, and you air agoin to hand me over the wages you gits as you gits 'em, week by week. And ef you don't do it, I'll take you away from here to my house where you belongs, anyhow. You're under age, miss, and I've got control of you, and you belong to me, bone and skin. Which would you druther—stay here and support me, or come home with me and support me? I say I'm yore mommy. You come here and kiss yore loving old doter. You come here and kiss me, I say, and do it quick, or I'll knock yore haid off yore shoulders!" She rushed forward, looking horrible and ferocious, and Frank screamed. At that Ronald sprang from his hiding-place like a good hero and shouted bravely. Nance turned upon him, and laughed shrilly as she spied her antagonist. "Now you run home, sonny," she said, "or I'll ketch you and give you a spanking!" She started toward him as if to carry her threat into execution; which would have been very humiliating for a hero. But Ronald with a grand air, clapped his hand to his pocket and started to draw forth his pistol. It was the first time he had ever appeared in public with a weapon and there was some hitch in this part of the adventure. For the pistol went off when it shouldn't, and Ronald felt a stinging pain. The enemy stood unhurt, but Ronald had shot himself.

XVI.

Ronald, like many another hero (not in a book) had carefully considered everything that might happen, except what did happen. Not for a moment had he thought of shooting the old woman; but he believed she would keep at a safe distance if he "covered her" with his weapon. However, if she "made for him," thus he had thought out the little drama, he would shoot in the air. If that didn't keep her back, the report would doubtles bring others to the scene.

When the pistol exploded before he had drawn it out of his pocket, the crash and red flash of light startled him as much as it could have scared any old woman. Then came a stinging pain in his leg, and he fell to the ground wondering if he was dead. Frank ran to his side with a scream, forgetting her terror of the old woman. The old woman herself was greatly surprised at this turn of affairs. "The land's sake!" she exclaimed. "The boy has shot hisself!" She hurried to the prostrate form. Frank cried, "Oh, he is dead! He has killed himself trying to protect me. Why did I come! Ronald, can you speak to me? Ronald, Ronald, are you alive?"

"Right now I am," the boy answered faintly, "but it won't last long, I guess. I'm done for?

"Where are you hurt?" demanded Nance, falling on her knees beside the still form.

"I guess I shot myself through the heart," whispered Ronald, "it feels so strange. But, oh, my leg."

"Now we're coming to it!" exclaimed the old woman. "Put your hand on the place. My! You're bloody all up and down. So that's the place? Then don't you be skeered. Nobody's heart didn't never grow in the calves of thur legs; not yet. Now you lay still, whilst I find the place and tie it up. And Frank Douglas, run as hard as you never run before, to the Clarmonts and tell 'em what's happened."

"Go away," said Ronald, as the old woman began prodding him with her bony fingers. What are you up to? Leave my leg alone. It ain't proper."

Nance laughed. "Legs ain't no more to me than teeth is to a dentist," she announced. "Wisht it was daylight! I guess this here's the place; found it, did I? Well you kin yell right smart for a boy that's shot hisself through the heart! Meant to shoot me, I 'spose, a defenseless, pore old woman. But I'll return good for evil. You're my enemy and I loves you. You're a Clarmont, you air. I loves the Clarmonts, I does. They's money in 'em."

In the meantime, Frank had sped, sick at heart, to the Clarmont residence. She was so agitated that her emotions were uncontrollable. As she tore open the front door, she began to call Mrs. Clarmont, although that lady's bedroom was in the second story. She continued to call as she ran up the stairs. The house was soon in a tumult. Mrs. Clarmont looked from her door, and Clara appeared at hers, just across the hall. Mrs. Dew awoke, and missing Frank from her bed, began to call her.

Mrs. Clarmont in her night-dress confronted Frank with a severe face. "What do you mean by going up and down my house like a maniac?" she cried.

THE FIRST DISCIPLES OF JESUS.*

During the forty days of Jesus' sojourn in the wilderness, John the Baptist continued his preaching of repentance and the kingdom. But a new spirit was now infused into his message, a new confidence made itself heard in his voice. He had seen the Messiah, whose herald he was, and the redemption of Israel was now a certainty. His own mission was drawing to a close, and only waited the reappearance of him upon whom he had seen the Holy Spirit descend and abide, to have its transcient glory merge into the greater glory of the Son of God. It was during this period of waiting that the deputation of priests and Levites came from Jerusalem, to inquire more carefully concerning the personality of the stern prophet. He bade them watch for the coming One, who was even now somewhere in their midst, and beside whom he was worthy to occupy only the place of the humblest slave.

On the morrow after this conversation, the Baptist saw Jesus coming toward him, and pointed him out as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. Telling the story of Jesus' baptism, he asserts that God's testimony was there given to the Sonship and Messiahship of the Savior. "I have seen and have borne witness that this is the Son of God." From the excited throng that perhaps gathered at this proclamation of the Baptist, Jesus seems to have quietly withdrawn himself, for it was not his plan to gather followers as the demagogue, in throngs. He would select them one by one.

The following day John was again standing by the riverside when the Master approached once more. But two of John's disciples were with him at the time, Andrew and John, the writer of the fourth Gospel, whose hand penned the narrative we are now studying. Again they hear the Baptist say, pointing to Jesus, "Behold the Lamb of God," and they forthwith turn their steps to go after the stranger. To these pious Jews the mention of the Lamb of God would at once suggest the picture of the Messiah in Isaiah, 43rd chapter, where he is said to be led as a lamb to the slaughter. They would likewise think at once of the daily sacrifice of the lamb in the temple for the sins of the people, at morning and evening, and perhaps above all, of the Passover lamb, whose blood brought home to their hearts the redemption wrought in behalf of their fathers, from Egypt. They understood better, afterwards, how true was this figure, and in his age the apostle John in Patmos saw the sacrificial ministry of Jesus set forth in the form of a little lamb. Twenty-eight times in the one Book of Revelation does John refer to Jesus as the Lamb of God. He is the Lamb of God to redeem, and the Son of God to rule.

What were the feelings of John when his disciples turned away from him to follow his Master, we may not know; but we may conjecture from the noble reply made by him afterwards, to the complaint that the crowd was ceasing to attend his ministry, and going after the Nazarene. "He must increase, and I must decrease," was the noblest utterance of the truest servant God ever had sent to Israel. Are we able to follow his example? Can we content ourselves with persuading men to follow Jesus so closely that they shall forget their human teachers? This is the supreme art of all preaching and teaching, to so display the truth as to make it absorb the attention of the pupil, and become a part of his intellectual and spiritual nature. Happy the herald of Christ today who can so far turn men's minds away from himself to Jesus as to wed them to him forever after.

As the two disciples timidly followed in the steps of Jesus, he turned about and gently asked, "What seek ye?" The great Teacher would not fail to encourage the first faint effort to learn of him. Yet he would know the motive of every one who presumes to become his disciple. What answer, shall we make to this question? "What seek ye?" What is your purpose in following Christ? Why have you made a profession of religion? Why are you in the Church of God? What is your supreme object in life just now? Are you seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, or does some worldly ambition fill your heart? The same searching eye is upon us, and the same question penetrates our hearts. The two discipies made simple and truthful answer: "Rabbi, where dwellest thou?" We would abide in thy company for a time, that we may know more of thee. The gracious invitation followed at once, "Come and see." They went with him to the humble place of his temporary abode, and tarried through the remainder of the day, and perhaps the night. It was the tenth hour, John tells us. This may have been the tenth hour in the morning, acording to the Roman reckoning, or the fourth hour in the afternoon, as the Jews counted time. The latter was probably the case. What would we not give to know what Jesus said to these humble guests of his, during those sweet hours? Whatever his words, their effect was to send them away with the glad conviction that he was the long-expected Messiah. It needs only that any one shall company with Jesus for a little time to be convinced that he is indeed the Savior.

From this sacred interview the two disciples go forth, thrilled with the consciousness of their supreme discovery. They hasten to their nearest and dearest friends with the message, "We have found the Messiah; we have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." Andrew hastened to find his own brother, Simon. It is implied that John sought out his own brothur, James, but his characteristic modesty causes him to omit all reference to himself, by name, in the the story. When, the next day, Jesus starts for Galilee, and calls Philip by the way, he in turn seeks his friend Nathanael, and brings him to Jesus. How often might we share in the joy of these first disciples would we but reach out the hand of loving entreaty to our own. How loth we often are to even speak of Jesus to those whom we love. It is a false and dangerous modesty that restrains us. Let us echo the glad cry: "We have found him Savior, the Son of God!" Archbishop Trench calls this the "eureka chapter," because of this refrain, "We have found." We need not to prove Jesus to our friends. We need only to testify and invite. "We have found; come and see!" The facts of Christian experience are as deserving of faith as any other facts, and we need not hesitate to declare them. He who will make but the slightest sincere inquiry about Christ will come to believe in him. He shall not look upon his face and hear his voice, as did Simon and Nathanael, but he shall see a whole world largely transformed by the influence of Jesus, whole races uplifted to nobler standards, millions of individuals redeemed from selfishness and lust and a new hope and joy put into humanity's heart.

Simon, the son of Jonah, the dove, receives the name Cephas, or Peter, the Rock Man, because Jesus reads in him the faith and love that shall yet make him bold and faithful, even unto death. The gentle Nathanael, full of prejudice against a teacher who comes from the despised Nazareth, finds his distrust quickly dispelled under the searching gaze of the Master, who read his sincere spirit and knew even of his secret hour of meditation and prayer beneath the fig tree. Within two days Jesus has found at least five, and probably six, of the twelve who will bear his gospel as chosen ambassadors through the world. They have all come by the way of personal experience and acquaintance.

Burpee's Farm Annual for 1900.

This popular catalogue is more attractive than ever, in a particularly dainty cover for 1900. Nasturtiums, New Sweet Peas and the famous "Rocky Ford," or Burpee's Netted Gem Melons are shown in colors, painted from nature, while the book is full of lifelike illustrations from photographs. Of particular interest is the new feature for 1900 of giving "a plain talk" as to the relative value for different purposes of all varieties of vegetable. Another interesting feature is the remarkable record of prizes won by the products of Burpee's seeds at leading State fairs in 1899. "New Creations" of intrinsic merit are offered in both vegetables and flowers. Altogether the catalogue shows most painstaking care in the effort to "tell the plain truth about seeds" as proved at Fordhook Farms, the largest trial grounds in America. Willett's Bible Lectures.

On the evening of Dec. 31st, 1899, in this city, Dr. H. L. Willett closed a series of six lectures on the History of Prophecy. The lectures were attended by the most cultured and religious people of Kenton.

No course of lectures or sermons in the history of this place ever attracted such profound attention and interest.

Bro. Willett is a man of marvelous power; his learning is profound; his scholarship is broad and reverent. After listening to him the Bible is to us all a new book. Nothing that I have ever read or heard has so fixed me in the faith, that the Bible is the Word of God, as have these lectures.

With one or two exceptions the ministers of this city heard him and expressed themselves as being charmed and delighted. So great was the interest that the closing lecture was delivered by special invitation in the largest church in the city. The church was packed with a company of devout men and women.

Dr. Willett is a man of charming personality. To a cultured mind and ease and grace of manner is added the dignity and strength of a man of Ged. His coming is a benediction to all who reverence God and love the Bible. Our brother will not, perhaps, thank us for these words, but they are in my heart and I must say them.

His stay of a week in our midst was concluded with a reception, given in his honor, at the home of Bro. Price. Many of the best and most cultured people of the city came that they might honor the man that had helped them to a larger vision of God and a better kaowledge of his Word.

STUDY THE QUESTION YOURSELF.

"When the doctor said 'no more coffee,' I was dismayed, for as an ardent lover of coffee and a crank in the matter of its preparation, I had grown to believe that life was not worth living without it, but the dull stupidity and the almost daily headaches so interfered with my profession (literature) that I was compelled to seek the doctor's advice.

"I saw an improvement from the start, but missed my morning beverage and felt a great lack. It was at the home of a friend and Postum apostle, Mrs. ————, of Lonsdale, that I tasted my first Postum. Her family had sworn by it a year or more and declared themselves, from the least to the greatest, benefited by its use.

"I was surprised to find it really palatable, and determined that I could improve on it myself I purchased a box, and as we all do, on the first trial, made a lamentable failure of it, through insufficient boiling, and the Postum was poked away on an upper shelf, until the oft-reiterated newspaper statements made me determine to try again, with long boiling.

"I took twenty-five minutes to prepare it, about ten minutes to bring it up to a boil, and then allowed it to boil steadily for fifteen minutes, and from the first sip, I was enthusiastic over the new beverage, and even wanted a second cup. It has never palled upon me, morning or night. Nothing could induce me to go back to the berry coffee.

"The change Postum has wrought in me seems little short of miraculous. For the ffrst time in many years, I am really well, my color has freshened, headache has not visited me for many weeks and my ability for work has returned with all its old zest. I shall never cease to be grateful for what I feel is a remarkable cure due to nothing more than Psstum Food Caffee, in place of the Oriental berry.

"Sincerely yours," Mrs. R. B. Tallman, Centredale, R. I.

Missions in South Africa.

BY W. J. LHAMON, Director.

The eyes of the civilized world are upon South Africa. It is lamentable in the extreme that two great and civilized peoples should be at war in that land. We marvel that these prayiug peoples have not come more completely under the leadership of the Prince of Peace. Surely, the differences might have been settled by arbitration, and the sad and expensive hazard of war might have been avoided. But whatever our reflections may be the war is on, and the question uppermost with the student of missions must be, How will it affect the work of Christ among the missions that have been established?

The area of the Transvaal is about three times that of the state of Ohio. Its population is about 1,100,000, three quarters of whom are native blacks; the others are whites. In 1857 the Hermansburg mission began in this region, and now it numbers 20,000 black converts. In 1859 the Berlin mission began work, and now has 14,000 converts. Besides these four other societies are at work.

American missionaries entered the Zulu country in 1835. They have made great progress, having acquired 90,000 acres of land in twelve mission reserves. In addition to many churches, some of which are self-supporting, they have a theological training school which prepares Zulu men for the native ministry. In many communities the Lord's day is observed, and in multitudes of homes there is daily Christian prayer.

In the whole region comprising Natal, Zululand and the Transvaal, there are many other missionary societies at work, "and Mr. Baker, of Johannesburg, carries on at his own expense a mission operating at several points in the Natal and in the South African Republic." It will thus be seen that although multitudes of the native tribes have never heard the gospel, yet a fair and exceedingly promising beginning has been made for the evangelization of the whole region.

We rejoice to hear a writer in the Missionary Review of the World, to whom we are indebted for the substance of this article, say that we need to have no fears regarding the future of these missions because of the present war. He says: "We believe that the result will be favorable to religious and missionary enterprise. The past years of jealousy and discord between the ruling powers has been a serious hindrance to religious progress. The war may be expected to clear the religious atmosphere, settle great questions of government control and usher in an era of peace, with all its attendant blessings and opportunities. Africa has been brought vividly before the world, never again to lapse into its former dark condition."

It can only be at the price of vigilance, however, that good can result from the war, or from any phase of what we call civilization. The same writer says: "At a railway station we came across a distiller's advertisement; it was a large map of the world, and across it was printed the words, 'Our Field is the World!'"

Surely the interest and vigilance of soul-winners should be equal to that of the enterprising distiller. If his field of destruction is the world, how much more should we take the world for our field of salvation!

LITERATURE.

SOME IMPORTANT ARTICLES.

Religious Teaching in Japanese Schools.

J. T. Gracey, writing in the Missionary Review of the World, reviews the recent ruling of the Education Department of State in Japan, whereby religious teaching is excluded from the schools of that country. The question is not of Christian teaching in schools supported by the government, but in schools supported by private subscription or missionary societies. Hitherto these schools have been "recognized" by the government in the sense that their students enjoyed immunity from conscription for military service and certain other privileges in common with the students in the government schools. The order now is that schools in which religion is taught, either as part of the regular curriculum or outside of school hours, shall not be recognized. This amounts to imposing a penalty upon all those who attend these schools, and it is admitted outside of missionary circles that this ruling contravenes the clause of the national constitution which guarantees religious freedom. The order was probably intended, not primarily as a blow at Christianity, but as a means for the concentration of all students into the state schools. It was issued by the Minister of Education after the government had refused to pass a law suppressing all private schools. This ruling, if allowed to stand, will be nearly as effective, because almost all of the private schools have religious teaching.

Kipling, "the Hooligan."

A vigorous, not to say violent, onslaught on Kipling and the ideas which he is conceived to stand for is found in Robert Buchanan's article entitled "The Voice of the Hooligan," in the Contemporary Review. The fault lies not alone with Mr. Kipling, says the author, but with a public so lost to all sense of honor and decency that it could accept such a spokesman. Since the death of Gladstone there has been in England no statesman whom anybody could really respect. Fashionable society is so rotten, root and branch, that even the Queen's influence cannot impart to it the faintest suggestion of purity or even decency. Popular literature has long been past praying for and is seen at its worst in its exaltation of "a writer who adumbrates all that is most deplorable, retrograde and savage in the restless and uninstructed Hooliganism of the time." Kipling's writings are easy to read, says Mr. Buchanan, and they therefore win favor from a lazy public which is averse to sustained intellectual effort. Worse than that, they are brutal. They embody an ideal of personal and of national character which is savage and selfish. His school-boys, as depicted in "Stalky & Co.," are not boys at all, but hideous little men. His "Tommy Atkins," as set forth in "Loot," "Belts," "The Sergeant's Wedding" and the Barrack-Room Ballads generally, is a brutal, thieving, quarrelsome and disreputable scoundrel. The British soldier ought to be indignant, but instead he seems to consider himself honored and the general public applauds—disgusting spectacle! The "Hooligan," in Mr. Buchanan's usage, seems to be a character combining the odious qualities of hoodlum and jingo.

Stevenson's Letters.

Henry James writes in the North American Review of the Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, as recently edited by Mr. Sydney Colvin. The writer calls attention to the fact that Stevenson had to a remarkable degree the faculty of attaching his readers to himself with a sort of personal affection. Without indulging in autobiography or confessions he in some way put his charming personality into all his writings in such a concrete fashion that any one could see it there. There is much discussion about the propriety of admitting the general public to a full view of a great man's private life and correspondence. The publication of the letters of Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett Browning last year was felt by many as an invasion of a field into which the public had no right to enter. But one can not feel so in regard to Stevenson's letters, for they give only "a further push to a door already half open." It cannot be an unmannerly intrusion to read the private letters of a man who was always, though perhaps unconsciously, giving us his personality in all his writings. And what incompatibles were joined in that curious personality—"an incurable rover complicated both with an incurable scribbler and an incurable invalid, a drenched yachtsman haunted with 'style,' a shameless Bohemian haunted with duty, a victim at once of the personal hunger and instinct for adventure and of the critical, constructive, sedentary view of it." It was that roving and adventurous disposition of this gentle, conscientious and invalid buccaneer which made him prefer to live out of doors in exile at Samoa rather than at the health resorts of England and the Continent shut up, as he himself says, "like a weevil in a biscuit."

The Future of the Chinese People.

The future of the Chinese government is one question, says D. Z. Sheffield in the Atlantic Monthly, and the future of the Chinese people is another question. The government is the sick man of the Far East. The Emperor is a prisoner in his own palace; the Western powers are extending their spheres of influence. China can not continue her existence as a nation without a thorough renovation of her national life. But populations are not blotted out by conquering armies and the Chinese people must continue to exist. The race is physically hardy, as shown by its continued existence and constant increase under unsanitary conditions. They are industrious and thrifty, and will, therefore, get their share in the profits arising from the material regeneration of the country. Their well-known willingness to work for small pay and live on next to nothing, while it discourages competition with them, fits them to prosper to an uncommon degree in the commercial and industrial awakening which awaits them. They are skilled workmen and have talent for invention. Weaving and printing were first practiced by them, and many of their artistic products, especially in porcelain and laquerware, are inimitable, but the cheapness of manual labor has prevented the introduction of labor-saving machinery. They have a natural genius for trade which is not inferior to that of the Jew. In intellectual power, handicapped as they are by centuries of one-sided education, they are not to be despised, and to condemn their literature and language as barbarous is merely an outgrowth of our ignorance of them. It is said that the Chinese are untruthful, selfish and sordid, but the ethical ideals expressed in their literature are pure and lofty, and what people lives up to its ideals? Their long adherence to their state religion and the present success of Protestant missions alike testify to their religious capacities. With all these varied capabilities, what China needs is protection and guidance, even a wise compulsion. Though the Chinese national life should disappear for a time the life of the people will continue.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

If you Feel Irritable Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage, and is an invigorating tonic, soothing to the nerves.

OBITUARIES.

BALDWIN.

Died, in Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 8, 1900, Sister Mary Baldwin, in her 74th year. She had the armor on. O. P. SPIEGEL.

DAVIS.

Bro. Ira G. Davis passed from earth scenes on the morning of the 11th inst., at his residence, 3638a Illinois Ave., St. Louis, at the age of 21. The funeral services on Sunday, the 14th, were conducted by B o. Fannon at the First Church, of which Bro. Ira was a consistent member. The remains were laid to rest in Bellefontaine. As a member of Bro. McClain's Sunday-school class he had shown his heart full of love for the church and thereby had rendered acceptable service and endeared himself to a wide circle of people, young and old. He was the eldest son of Bro. and Sister J. R. Davis. In this their hour of bereavement the hearts of many friends beat in sympathy with them and with Dwight, their younger son, as well as with the young wife, upon whom a great sorrow has fallen. M.

PINKERTON.

Entered into rest at her home in Blackburn, Mo., Jan. 2nd, 1900, Mrs. Louisa Davis Pinkerton, wife of Elder Collin M. Pinkerton, one of the distinguished family of preachers so widely known throughout the brotherhood, and especially in Kentucky and Missouri. Sister Pinkerton was born in Woodford county, Ky., Feb. 7th, 1833 and was married to C. M. Pinkerton Sept. 24th, 1850. She confessed her faith in Christ in the spring of 1850, at Midway, Ky., and was baptized by Dr. L. L. Pinkerton in the presence of a large concourse of people in Lee's Branch, near the village. The distinguished evangelist, John T. Johnson, was present at the baptism. She was a woman of unfaltering faith, a faithful wife, a devoted mother and a helpful friend. She came with her husband to Missouri before the war, and resided for some years in Richmond. During the war her husband was in the Southern army, and she and her little children returned to Kentucky until he came home. They returned to Missouri and settled in Saline county, where they resided continually till the day of her death. Four children were born to them and all are living—three daughters, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Steele, Miss Ida, and one son, D. M., cashier of the Blackburn Bank and elder of the church. Hers was the first death in the family, and while they do not "weep as they that have no hope," her death was a great grief to them, but they are all Christians and with their dear father are able to say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." The writer, a friend for more than 40 years, preached the funeral sermon to a large company of neighbors and friends, who feel their loss keenly. "Let not your hearts be troubled. You believe in God, believe also in me."

T. P. HALEY.

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 8, 1900.

TURNER.

On Saturday evening, the 6th, at Independence, Mo., the death-angel visited the home of Bro. and Sister R. J. Turner. Maudie the 11-year-old daughter, the elder of two that God had given to bless that home, had been sick for some weehs with the scarlet fever; her strength spent, she quietly fell asleep.

Only those who have felt the force of such a blow can know how crushed were the hearts of mother, father and little sister and grandmother and aunt and other relatives.

Not frequently is sympathy so generally felt and expressed over one so young. Her roommates at school had keenly felt her absence during the period of her illness and mourned when she was gone. The Band of Mercy, an interdenominational organization, passed resolutions of sympathy. In the Sunday-school, where she has been so prompt and regular in attendance, and had taken part in so many of its entertainments, for she was a sweet singer, there was weeping because she had been called from their midst. The superintendent feelingly referred to her life and death.

On Monday afternoon, the 8th, in the church from which, during nearly forty years, there has been buried each year at least one of the descendants of William and Martha Berryman Thomas, funeral services were held, conducted by Bro. Alex Procter, who during these years has officiated at the marriage altar and at the grave for this large family, but a remnant of which now resides in the "old home town." A number of friends assembled to weep with the family and to offer tokens of sympathy and by their presence and words to emphasize the truths from Scripture which Bro. Procter presented for their comfort and consolation, and then to lay to rest the little form in the city cemetery. B.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

Early in December I sent 144 self-addressed, blank, quarterly report postals to as many auxiliaries, each accompanied by a letter to the workers, calling them to higher, sweeter service for Christ. Many promises have resulted, and I trust many others of which I have heard nothing, but of the 144 cards the greater part of 100 have failed to return. Where are they?

Officers, hunt them up, fill out, and return immediately. We should be just as prompt and exact in the Lord's business as in our own, and I am certain we would not be so unbusiness-like in our own affairs. Sisters, question your officers as to whether they have attended to this duty or whether these unfilled cards are hiding away in some unused book.

A suggestion comes from national headquarters that each state shall adopt some special line toward which to direct its special love, prayers and gifts; and further, this year should find us with some finished work as a memorial of our devotion to the Master. Last year we offered him the Ann Arbor Bible Chair endowed—a beautiful, completed token of our love.

Shall we not bring, next September, the Virginia Bible Lectureship endowed complete, to lay at his feet with thanksgiving? Only $12,000 are needed to do this; all life memberships may be directed toward this fund. Then there is Mexico, poor and needy. Brother and Sister Omer, of Virginia, (the latter sister to Bessie Farrer) are only waiting for money to begin work there. Their request "to go," as well as Miss Bertha Mason's, of Texas, have been acceded to by the board.

Surely, our national officers may depend on us Missouri is loyal clear through. Let each auxiliary do its part to prove it, by accepting one of these lines, and pledge itself to give that work a definite amount, and prayerfully keep that amount before its members, until it is complete and on its way to Indianapolis. Then let an old fashioned praise meeting follow.

This is to be, of course, over and above monthly offerings to general fund and state. God expects much from his handmaids, for he has given much. Very few of us are really unable to give more than 15 cents a month. For auxiliaries who fear to pledge, there are mite boxes, which so often prove a blessing, that may be used to gather up this fund. Mrs. Moses will supply them gladly to any one sending for them. I hope every auxiliary in the state will take action on these thoughts and send me a letter, telling me of it, just as soon as possible.

While we are doing all this, let us never lose sight of our president's call, "6,000 women and $10,000 for Missouri, this year, 1900." Time is precious, dear ones; let us work and not waste time in idle talk. Wishing you all a bright and peaceful year, and that September may find each of us "one of the 6,000,"

The End of the Century Calendar.

The great progress of the printer's art in the nineteenth century is fittingly marked in this closing year by the artistic calendar we have just received from N. W. Ayer & Son, newspaper and magazine advertising agents, Philadelphia. True to their motto of "Keeping everlastingly at it," Messrs. Ayer & Son have so made this calendar, year after year, that a demand has sprung up that always quickly absorbs the edition. This calendar's proportions are commensurate with its dignity as an art work, but its size is determined solely by utility. The figures are of the generous dimenaions that quickly catch the eye and make it a favorite with business men; there are also helpful suggestions accompanying each month's figures, and there is a rich ensemble of color and design. This edition will not last long; while it does, those who send 25 cents to the publishers will receive a copy postpaid.

Good alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Yes, indeed; old as well as new subscribers may be counted in your club.

Is it necessary for us to remark that now is the time to form a club? Well, hardly. If not now, when will you form one?

If you are so situated that you cannot join in the formation of a club, take advantage of some of our special offers as shown above. They are bargains, every one of them.

And still they come; singly and in brigades. Our list is growing with great rapidity. If your church has not a hand in this you are likely to be lonesome very soon.

It is difficult when all are doing so well to tell who is doing the best. As far as figures tell the story Des Moines, Ia., is leading in the race. We received a club of sixty-seven from the University Place Church and another of forty-three from the East Side Church. Central Church will doubtless feel like sending at least as many as both of those already reported. St. Louis will have to watch its laurels closely or the Iowa metropolis will capture them.

Eighty-five is not a bad list of readers in a city the size of Mexico, Mo., and they are not done yet. Fayetteville, Ark., sends us thirty-one as a starter and Delta, Ia., approves this move with thirty. Atlanta, Ill., endorses the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with twenty-six subscribers; Carrollton, Mo., says it can beat that with twenty-nine. Palmyra, Mo., always loyal, reports thus far twenty-seven and Trenton, Mo., chimes in with thirty-five. Cedar Rapids, Ia., sends us thirty-five as a first installment and says that it is not more than half. But time fails us to tell of Carthage, Ill., San Diego, Cal., Side View, Ky., Grand Rapids, Mich., Chillicothe, Mo., Virginia, Ill., La Monte, Mo., Petersburg, Ill., New York City, Bethany, Mo., Brocton, Ill., and a host of other places which seem to have entered into a conspiracy to "snow under" the subscription department. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is most emphatically alive and growing; so is the Christian Church.

Our churches throughout the land do not seem to be a bit slow in grasping the fact that our club rate of one dollar does not mean a paper of the usual dollar kind; but a journal strictly up to date in all its departments and thoroughly first-class in every particular. That the Christian Church is ready for and does appreciate a representative organ of this kind is being testified to in the strongest manner by the list of subscribers received at this office daily. A continuation of this kind of approval is all that is needed.

If no club has yet been formed in your congregation, dear reader, will you not rouse the membership to take advantage of this opportunity. Don't say it is no use to try to raiss a club of twenty-five; a good elder said to an enthusiastic member who undertook the raising of a club of twenty-five in a certain church in Iowa, "You can't possibly do it, but I will promise to be the twenty-fifth member of your club." The club raiser got his subscription and twenty others afterwards. The trouble is we do not realize what we can do when we really try. "Awake, thou that sleepest," and put a Christian paper in every home!

CURRENT EVENTS.

The capture and immediate surrender of Spion Kop by the British have been the events of the week in the war in Natal. It was believed that this hill commanded the approach to Ladysmith from the west, and that its possession would enable the British to operate with advantage against the main position of the Boers. The advantage of occupying it was deemed so great that a risky night attack was made. The attack met little resistance and the hill was taken. But Spion Kop is a ridge, not a peak, and in the morning it was found that the Boers had merely retreated to still higher positions, whence they poured upon Warren's troops a destructive fire. As a result, it soon became necessary to evacuate the position which had been taken. The failure to hold this point of vantage means the failure of the flanking movement in which Buller has been engaged for the past two weeks. Recognizing this fact, the British commanders have withdrawn their forces south of the Tugela River. Only Dundonald's column remains on the north bank, and its exact location has not lately been reported. Ladysmith has already developed unexpected resources for holding out against the besiegers, but it now seems inevitable that White must either surrender or make a bold attempt to cut his way out. It is easy to be wise after the event. It seems now that it would have been best to have allowed Buller to carry out his original plan of striking at once for the capitals of the two republics, without stopping to relieve Ladysmith. Even now it appears to be a choice between attempting to save the beleaguered garrison and following the plan which alone gives any promise of success.

The Roberts case in the House of Representatives has been brought to a conclusion highly creditable alike to the House and to the public opinion which lay back of it. By a vote of 268 to 50 the majority report of the special committee was adopted, and Mr. Roberts was thereby excluded from the House. The degree to which party lines were ignored is especially worthy of notice and commendation. Two-thirds of the Democrats in the House voted with the majority. The debate was one of exceptional interest. Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, defended the majority report, which was ultimately adopted. Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, made a strong speech, representing the minority of the committee, in favor of admitting Mr. Roberts and then expelling him. Mr. Roberts was given an hour and a half in which to plead his own case. He disclaimed any intention of defending polygamy, but did so nevertheless, drawing his chief arguments from the Hebrew patriarchs and Luther's dealings with Philip of Hesse. He said that the Mormons could not at once give up polygamy in obedience to human law, even when supported by a decision of the Supreme Court, for the court was human and fallible. To obey it "would have been deserting the cause of God." He made no attempt to deny the facts which had been proved against him, except by a general statement that polygamy was dead. The brightest and most effective speech of the debate was made by Mr. Landis, of Indiana, in favor of exclusion. He brought evidence of the continuance of polygamy to-day by persons high in the Mormon Church, and charged Utah with breaking faith with the Federal Government. After the vote had been taken, Mr. Roberts gave out a statement in which he admitted that he continued to live with his plural wives, and justified his course on the ground that the obligation of conscience was stronger than that of statute law.

Apparently party lines are playing a more important part in the question of seating Quay in the Senate, than they did in the case of Roberts in the House. The committee on privileges and elections has reported against Quay by a vote of 5 to 4. In the majority there are four Democrats and one Republican. The minority is solidly Republican. In other words, it is a straight party vote, except that one Republican has gone over to the opposition and has thereby shifted the balance of power. The minority report, favoring the seating of Quay, is signed by Senators Hoar, Chandler, Pritchard and McComas. The argument against seating Quay on the governor's appointment is as follows: Under the constitution the governor has the right of filling by appointment only a vacancy which occurs (i. e., comes into being) during a recess of the legislature. If the legislature had an opportunity to elect, but failed to do so, as in this case, it cannot be said that the vacancy occurred, or came into being, during the recess. The vacancy, to fill which Mr. Quay was appointed, was a continuation of the same vacancy which occurred during the session of the legislature. Therefore the constitution gives the governor no right to appoint. The constitution provides for every emergency except the failure of the legislature to perform its duty in filling existing vacancies by election. The failure to provide for this case was intentional and was meant to hold the legislature to its duty, so that the state might be represented, not by an appointee who might be merely the governor's political favorite, but by a man chosen by the people's representatives.

The argument of the minority report in favor of seating Quay is as follows: The primary aim of that clause of the constitution which refers to election and appointment of senators, is that every state should have two senators elected by the legislature if possible, otherwise appointed by the governor. Whether the legislature had no opportunity to elect or whether it tried and failed, is a matter of no consequence. A deadlock in a senatorial election, resulting in a failure to elect, is not a dereliction of duty on the part of the legislature. Like a tie vote, it is simply an occurrence which is nobody's fault, and it should not be punished by disfranchisement of the state in the Senate. Since the governor and the legislature owe their election to the same power, namely, the people, it is fair to suppose that a senator appointed by the governor will represent the popular choice as nearly as one elected by the legislature. Considered merely with reference to the constitutional question involved, it is a case with two sides, and the precedents are cited in favor of both positions. But the strongest argument against the seating of Quay, and the one which appeals most strongly to the popular mind, is Quay himself, his past reputation and present character.

Two lines of operations are being conducted in the Philippines. The expedition led by Gen. Schwan in the southern part of Luzon is achieving a series of small successes, the aggregate of which is large. Operating south of Laguna de Bay he has met and dispersed a body of insurgents which, according to the dispatches of Gen. Otis, is believed to be the last considerable band in the island. The capture of San Diego, a naturally strong and well fortified point, was the most brilliant exploit of this part of the war. Gen. Kobbe has been conducting a successful campaign for the opening of the hemp ports. Beginning in the province of Albay in southeastern Luzon he took several ports, Legaspi being the only one which offered resistance. It is estimated that there are 200,000 bales of hemp ready for shipment in this district and the opening of the ports has broken the corner in binding-twine. Gen. Kobbe is now operating in the islands of Samar and Leyte which produce large quantities of hemp and there is every prospect that his expedition will be a thorough success.

The contested election case in Kentucky grows more and more bitter as the time of the decision approaches. Last week a thousand mountaineers, all more or less armed, came into Frankfort, camped before the state-house and presented a petition to the legislature urging it not to thwart the will of the people by seating Goebel as governor in place of Taylor. Gov. Taylor denied having had anything to do with this demonstration. The tone of the petition was calm and judicial and gives reason to hope that there will not be an attempt to right any wrong which may be committed by a still greater wrong. The case of Van Meter (Dem.) vs. Berry (Rep.) both claiming to represent Fayette County in the legislature was decided on Saturday in favor of Van Meter, by a vote of 51 to 45, six Democrats voting with the Republican minority. This was considered a test vote, since it involves the same questions as Goebel's contest, and reveals the strength of the Democratic revolt against Goebelism. The final evidence in the case was presented on Monday. By agreement each side will have ten hours for argument, after which the vote will be taken. The Berry-Van Meter case is an evil omen for Taylor and largely increases the probability of his being unseated.———As we go to press there comes a report that Goebel has been assassinated. This, if true, is a most unfortunate occurrence, for it will be more than ever difficult to judge the election case on its merits.

It seems impossible longer to doubt the report that, through the machinations of the Dowager Empress, the Emperor of China has been deposed. It is added, though not without denial in some quarters, that Russia and France were implicated in this coup. The Empress has long and vigorously opposed Western influences and innovations, whether political, commercial or industrial. She has, in the face of events, attempted to maintain the traditional policy—China for the Chinese and no entangling alliance with anybody. She was therefore opposed both to the "open door" and to the "sphere of influence" arrangement. As advocates of the former, she hated England, Japan and the United States. As representatives of the latter, she had no love for Russia and France. If it shall turn out that Russia and France are really implicated in the removal of the Emperor, it will mean that the Empress has been driven to use her less dangerous enemies against those whom she considers more dangerous. The late Emperor was always friendly to England and the United States and the triumph of the opposition appears, on the surface, to jeopardize our interests in China. At this time, therefore, there is much to be comfort derived from the written assurances which were lately secured from Japan, England, Germany, Russia and France, that they would grant us free trade so far as their power extended in China, now or in the future. The Empress may want to keep everybody out, but Russia and France cannot help her to keep us out without violating their written promise.

Mr. Bryan's recent trip to New York has been variously reported as a chilly reception or a splendid ovation. The recognition of the importance of the event and of the importance of Mr. Bryan as a factor in the coming presidential campaign is not confined to those papers which support him. The New York Evening Post, which is not open to the charge of prejudice in favor of free silver or any of its advocates, makes this significant admission: "One might as well try to whistle down the wind as to oppose the Nebraskan's renomination for the presidency by the Democratic party. The Post, it is needless to say, expresses this opinion with regret, since it is diametrically opposed to most of the political program which is embodied in 'Bryanism.' "

The French courts have taken a radical measure in dissolving the Catholic order of Assumptionist Fathers. The decree disbanding the entire order is the corollary to the decision of a case in which twelve of the Assumptionists were tried for belonging to an illicit society of more than twenty persons, for "evading the payment of taxes, instilling pernicious precepts in the minds of the young and participating in political movements to the detriment of the republic's interests." It is claimed that the order has been an active participant in royalist plots looking to the overthrow of the republic. The chapel and convent of the order in Paris have been closed and sealed by the government, but the priests declare that they will neither disband nor leave France. The Pope has assured them of his approval and the case has been appealed to a higher court.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

II. NATURE AND CONSEQUENCES OF SIN.

On the background of God's character for holiness and man's accountability to Him must be painted the true nature of sin and its consequences. If God Himself is holy and righteous, it follows that in the creation of man in His image, He designed him to be holy and rigtheous also, to the end that there might be communion and fellowship between the Creator and His creature, man. The very fact that man has a moral nature, which approves the right and disapproves the wrong, is evidence that God intended him to be righteous. If this were God's purpose in man's creation and endowment, it follows that man can only attain the end for which he was created, and realize the happiness which God designed him to enjoy, by attaining to holiness of character. The history of the race, as well as our own observation and experience, teach us that man has violated the law of his being, and has been false to the divine ideal, written in his moral constitution and revealed in the Holy Scriptures. In other words, man is a sinner. This is the terrible fact that confronts every man who looks into the history of the race or into his own conscience.

What, then, is sin? It is choosing the lower instead of the higher. It is violating God's law as written in His Word and in our own consciences. It is missing the mark. It is rebellion against the authority of Heaven. How could sin enter into a world created by God? Man was created free; sin is the abuse of his moral freedom. Man fell, first, when he did what he knew God had forbidden him. When Adam and Eve decided to override God's prohibitive command and to follow their own will instead of the divine will, they fell from the condition of conscious innocency into a condition of conscious guilt. That experience has been repeated in the history of every descendant of our first parents except in the solitary case of Jesus of Nazareth, the sinless One, who came into the world to save men from their sins. We came into this world more or less depraved in nature, through the law of heredity, but no man comes into the world inheriting Adam's guilt or the guilt of any one else. He stands innocent in the sight of God until he himself chooses the wrong in preference to the right.

It is seen, then, that sin is nothing less than the violation of the law of man's being, the disruption of that union between man and God which is essential to man's well-being and happiness. The gravity of sin lies in this—that it alienates man from God, cuts him off from the source of spiritual life and leaves him a prey to his lower nature and to the evil influences that are about him. In its last analysis sin is selfishness. It disregards God's wish and the divine wisdom, the welfare of others and the soul's relation to God, and seeks present personal gratification. It repays God's love with ingratitude and disobedience. It is essentially short-sighted. It prefers a mess of pottage now to a future inheritance. It gratifies an ignoble passion, offering a fleeting pleasure, at the expense of purity of soul and loss of self-respect and the marring of moral manhood.

If the Bible nowhere stated the ruinous consequences of sin the fact would still be apparent because of what we have seen of its blighting effects in individual lives, in the home and in every department of human life. It deadens the conscience, weakens the will, warps the judgment, clouds the intellect, corrupts the heart, enfeebles the body, and when persisted in, produces a general atrophy of the moral faculties. It separates from God, and because of this it produces strife and discord among men. Mankind has its unity in God, and in conformity with His will. Sin is the disorganizing, disintegrating, strife-producing and division-breeding element in the home, in the state, in the church, in society, in the world. The nations will never be at peace among themselves until they are at peace with God.

In view of these manifest and inevitable consequences of sin, how inconsequential and out of place are the old-time arguments about whether God will punish sin and how long. As if punishment in the divine government were something arbitrary. Sin contains within itself the seeds of suffering, sorrow, anguish, death. The law of cause and effect holds good in the spiritual realm. "For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he tha soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." The question of what we are to reap, then, depends upon what we are sowing. Those who are living in the flesh and who are ministering to it rather than to the Spirit, and who yet hope by some stroke of good luck to escape the consequences of their fleshly sowing, will some day wake up to the fact that "God is not mocked," and that his justice does not sleep forever.

We know of no truth that needs more emphasis at this time than the reality, the heinous character and the awful consequences of sin. The closing part of the century has many advantages over the earlier part of it, but among its disadvantages, as it seems to us, is the weakened and diluted idea of sin and its consequences which now prevails. This comes about, no doubt, from the fact that the old idea of a literal lake of fire, and of men being plunged into it by an arbitrary decree of God, as taught in the old doctrine of election and reprobation, has been overthrown, and the true idea of punishment and its relation to sin has not yet fully taken its place. There must be a change of emphasis from the literal lake of fire and brimstone, located somewhere in the future world, to the hell that is now and here, kindled by sin in the hearts and lives of its votaries, the flames of which can only be quenched by the tears of penitence. From the hell which sin kindles here on earth, in disordered intellects, in inflamed passions, diseased bodies and tortured consciences, it is not difficult to infer the existence of a similar hell beyond the line of death. The figurative language of the Bible is not too strong to describe the awful wreck and ruin which sin works out in the human soul when it is allowed to run its course.

Let no one infer the unreality of sin's punishment from the figurative character of the language employed in the Bible to describe it. When men are made to see that sin contains in itself the fires of hell, and that within it are the seeds of man's utter destruction, separating him from God here and hereafter, and thwarting the purpose for which he was created, blotting out every star of hope in the firmament of life, leaving the soul to face a rayless future, then they will cease to toy with it as a harmless thing, and will understand that the only way to avoid sin's punishment is to get rid of sin itself.

MR. SHELDON'S EXPERIMENT.

The proposition of the Topeka Capital, of Topeka, Kas., to place its plant and the entire editorial and business control of the paper in the hands of the Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," for one week, beginning March 13, that he may exemplify his idea of what a Christian daily newspaper ought to be, is creating widespread interest throughout the country. In a speech at the Christian Endeavor Convention at Detroit, last summer, Mr. Sheldon urged the need of a daily religious paper, and asked why some one should not offer a million dollars to endow such a daily. He believed the time would come when it would be done. No one, it seems, has yet offered the million dollars, but the Topeka Capital has offered its entire plant for the experiment for one week. The editor of the Capital says, in a letter to the editor of this paper: "The experiment which this decision on our part makes possible may carry with it far reaching influences upon the press. We would not venture a prediction as to specific results. We are content to make possible the experiment in an absolutely unfettered way."

Of course, this is a great advertising scheme for the journal above mentioned, but we have no right to suppose that this is the only motive which has actuated them in making this decision. If the experiment should prove to be successful it is altogether probable that Mr. Sheldon will be asked to take permanent editorial control of the paper. It occurs to us that a week is rather too short a time to demonstrate fully even the ideal of what a daily paper should be, conducted strictly according to Christian principles, much less the practicability of the enterprise. This brief time, however, will suffice to give Mr. Sheldon an opportunity of illustrating, partially at least, his idea of what such a paper should be. It will serve also to attract public attention to the question as to the practicability of running a daily paper on a Christian basis, and this itself will do much to solve the problem. We are glad the experiment is to be made, and it will be watched with deep interest throughout the Christian world.

REV. CHAS. M. SHELDON.
Author of "In His Steps."

We see a great many prophecies of failure for this experiment. But why should it be thought a thing incredible that a daily paper should be run on religious principles? No one who has a true conception of what religion is will expect the paper to be largely theological or to be limited to such themes as are called religious. It will deal with politics, business, social life, amusements, the current events of the day, and whatever touches upon and affects human life, but these subjects will be treated, as far as the editor knows how, in the spirit of Jesus Christ. It will report the news, but will not do it in such a way as to pander to vice. It will advertise legitimate business, but it will knowingly advertise nothing that is harmful to the public. It will discuss government issues, but it will do so in the spirit of fairness and candor. It will deal with the problems of the church, but it will do so in an unsectarian way. Would it not be strange if there are not enough people in the United States who believe in such a journal as that to give it wide patronage and liberal support? Such a paper, we have reason to believe, would circulate beyond the ordinary limits of the average daily, because thousands of people living at remote distances from it would patronize it.

Let us not suppose, however, that Mr. Sheldon is going to make a paper that every religious crank in the country will approve. Perhaps very few of us will approve every thing in it. Mr. Sheldon's idea of what Christ would publish if He were running a daily paper will certainly differ, in many respects, from the ideas of a good many people, but no one doubts that Mr. Sheldon will make an honest and sincere effort to be true to his convictions of right and duty, and that he will make a clean, wholesome sheet which can safely be admitted into all our families. We wish the experiment success, and we congratulate the proprietors of the Topeka Capital on their enterprise in offering an opportunity for the experiment.

Hour of Prayer.

THE GOSPEL FOR ALL NATIONS.

(Jno. 3:16 10:16; Luke 24:46 47; Matt. 28:18-20.)

Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions.
(Uniform Midweek Prayer meeting Topic, Feb. 7.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The gospel being designed to meet universal human needs is a gospel for all nations and for all time. It is, therefore, the duty of those who have it to send it to those who have it not.

"God so loved the world!" This is the proper beginning-place. The heart of God is the fountain of missionary activity. God did not love a single race or tribe or nation, simply, but He loved the world, the whole race of man. It follows that his gospel, born of his love, is designed for all men. Any other than a universal gospel would be inconsistent with God's character and his relation to men as the universal Father.

Jesus loved the sheep of his Jewish fold, but as He looked out over the Gentile world He said: "Other sheep I have that are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and they shall become one flock, one Shepherd." This process has been going on through all the Christian centuries. And still there are millions of Christ's sheep, that is, people, who would gladly become his followers, who have never heard his voice speaking to them in the pleading tones of the gospel. Christ is not responsible for this, but His church, to which He has committed the trust of extending the gospel to "all nations" and to "every creature."

It was necessary, said Jesus, "that the Christ should suffer and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning from Jerusalem." Here, then, is a divine program. First, Christ should "suffer and rise from the dead;" after that, "repentance and remission of sins should be preached among all nations," starting at Jerusalem. Has the church been faithful to this program? Have we, as individual Christians, been loyal to this divine order of things?

But not only was there a divine program to be carried out, but a divine mandate to the church to carry it out. It is the risen Christ who, upon a mountain top in Galilee, gave the command with such vast significance: "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Notice the universality of this great commission. "All authority," "all the nations," "all things," "alway."

This is the marching order of the church. This is the royal mandate of one who proposes universal dominion. His promise to be with His church alway is conditioned on compliance with His command to make disciples of all the nations. It is only as the church is seeking to carry out this command of Christ that it can claim His presence, authority and blessing.

But in addition to that command is the constraining power of love—love to Christ and to our fellowmen. If Christ so loved the world as to give Himself for it, ought we not to love the world well enough to send it the gospel of His grace, offering forgiveness of sin and life eternal? If we really love Christ, ought not this love for Him to make us partners with Him in His efforts to save a lost world? It was this view of things that led Paul to say: "The love of Christ constraineth me."

If we stop to think of the condition of the heathen world—without God and without hope—if we think of the degradation, the abominable idolatries, the wretchedness and despair which abound where Christ is not known, surely our hearts would be moved with pity for those who sit in the region of the shadow of death.

In this concert of prayer let us pray for those who are without the gospel, and for those who have it, that they may realize their responsibility in sending it to others, and for the missionaries, who are torch-bearers to those who sit in darkness.

PRAYER.

O Thou God of all grace, who didst so love the world as to give Thine only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish but have everlasting life: Fill us, we beseech Thee, with that same spirit of love that will constrain us to send this glorious gospel unto all nations and to every creature. Arouse Thy church from its slumber of inactivity and stir it up with renewed zeal to carry out the command of its Lord and Savior to make disciples of all nations. Bless the missionaries of the cross who have left home and friends to tell the good news of salvation through Christ to the perishing millions in distant lands. Protect them by Thy providence, enrich them by Thy grace and make them a blessing to the peoples among whom they live and labor. And hasten the time when the whole world shall have heard the gospel, and when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the face of the great deep. In Christ's name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day.
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away.
Change and decay in all around I see:
O, Thou who changest not, abide with me!"

So we sing. And yet it takes a concrete fact to make us realize the sentiment of the lines. We have just stood beside the casket containing the remains of a dear friend, a brother editor, a strong, stalwart man who, a few days ago, had the promise of many years of usefulness. Dr. David M. Harris, editor of the Observer, of this city, an organ of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, passed away on Saturday of last week after a brief illness. He had undergone a surgical operation for appendicitis, and after several hours of unconsciousness he came to himself, took in the situation fully, and spoke to his friends freely of life and death, of the great interests of the church, sent loving messages to his friends, and passed out through the gate which men call death, but which in his case was made luminous by his faith in God. Dr. Harris was a man of large mold. He was a scholar of wide learning, of varied resources, a clear, bold thinker, and withal a man of simple, childlike faith. He was a lovable man. When we met him he always inspired within us the feeling of brotherhood. We felt that he was our brother, whatever religious name he might choose to wear. He was a leader in his church. He was a great editor. He cannot but be missed greatly in the religious body to which he belonged. He visited the editor of this paper twice during the past few months while we were passing through a period of anxiety and uncertainty, once at our home and once at the office, to express his brotherly appreciation and sympathy. We always felt that we wished to know him better, but now that he has passed into the unseen, that more intimate acquaintanceship must be postponed until we meet in the city of God.

It was a remarkable funeral. There was a large company of sympathizing friends present. The editors of the religious papers of the city occupied the platform and took part in the brief and simple services. Instead of a sermon, the pastor of the church, Dr. Fullerton, read to the people the messages of wisdom and affectionate counsel which Dr. Harris had spoken in his last hours. These were remarkable utterances from a man in the immediate presence of death, looking into the future with unclouded intellect and with unwavering faith. They indicated a man of ripe scholarship, of philosophic insight into the meaning and mystery of life, of supreme interest in the kingdom of God, of deep and tender affection for his friends and brethren. We hope to print some of these in our issue of next week. A religious faith that will enable a man to die like that, with calm dignity, with cheerful resignation, laying down his great life-task with no diminished interest in the great problems of Christianity and with an unfearing heart, is certainly beyond price. It is its own vindication. In the largeness of his heart he sent messages of love to those who had stood by him and co-operated with him, to those who had differed from him, and even to those who had opposed him. "Enemies I may have," he said, "but I have no enmities." No wonder the church mourns the loss of such a man, and no wonder his pastor feels that his chief earthly support has been taken from him. Religious journalism has lost one of its brightest ornaments; the church to which he belonged one of its noblest representatives, and Christianity itself and the cause of human rights and religious progress a fearless champion and able advocate. We shall always think more of the people he represented because of our knowledge and appreciation of his pure character and of his eniment ability.

Our brother, whose departure we mourn as a personal loss, was perhaps not so widely known outside of his own religious denomination as he ought to have been. This is often the case. It is one of the most unfortunate things about our denominationalism that it prevents that largeness of Christian fellowship and acquaintanceship which a man of eminent character and ability would enjoy without this barrier. The whole religious world would have been benefited by knowing Dr. Harris better and by coming in contact with his thought and spirit. This is true of many another man who yet lives, whose influence is more or less "cribbed, cabined and confined" by denominational lines. It will not always be so. It cannot but be that the time will come when there shall be a freer interflow of religious thought and fellowship and a wider acquaintanceship among the true servants of God, in spite of doctrinal differences and divergent forms of ecclesiastical organization. The very fact that there are so many men to-day who, in their catholicity of spirit, breadth of sympathy and fellowship, transcend all denominational lines and enter into the larger fellowship of elect spirits who recognize the spirit of Christ and his image wherever they see it, is evidence itself of the coming time when our denominational barriers must give way before the rising tide of brotherly love, and when Christ's followers shall be one in a deeper and truer sense than has ever yet been realized. For every prophecy of such a coming consummation, we thank God and take courage.

Yes, "life's little day" ebbs swiftly to its close! There is no time for little jealousies, sectarian wrangles and unbrotherly dissensions. Eternity looms up before us with its tremendous issues. Life's battle with evil presses hard upon us. Many of the things which seem large to us, would vastly diminish in value if we would let in the light of eternity upon them. What regrets must come to us all, when we near the end, that we have not devoted our time and strength more exclusively to the things of eternal value! What we do must be done soon. With some of us the sun has passed his meridian and hastens downward to the golden west. But the sun of life often sets at noonday. And even when it runs its full course, it is only a "little day," a brief prelude to the life beyond the veil. Alas for us when this brief span is not made sublime by faith, radiant by hope and beautiful by love!

Questions and Answers.

1. What gave rise to the expression, "shepherd kings?"

2. How many such kings were there?

3. What were their names?

4. What was the length of each individual reign?

5. Over what people or peoples did they reign?

6. At what time or period in the world's history did they flourish? C. J. K.

St. Louis, Mo.

1. The name is given to a series of kings in Egypt, covering the XVI, and perhaps part of the XVII dynasties, though there is a great difference of opinion as to the period of their reign. Josephus makes the period 511 years. They were probably so called because they were invaders from the East and represented a shepherd people. They are also called the Hyksos kings.

2. This is not definitely known, but if Josephus is right as to the period of their reign there must have been not less than ten, probably more. Eusebius makes it much less.

3. All the names are not known. It is generally admitted that Set or Saites was the first of these kings and Apepi or Apophis the last. Dr. Brugsch has shown pretty conclusively that Joseph governed Egypt under the last of the shepherd kings.

4. Not known. Egyptian chronology, beyond the "New Empire" is very uncertain.

5. The people of Egypt.

6. Here again there is considerable variation among historians, some holding that the first of these began his reign as early 2,200 B. C., while others make it as late as 1,720 B. C.

How many orphan homes has our brotherhood under its care, where located and how many orphans do they support?

T. F. George.

Bozoto, Ill.

There are only two orphan homes which we know of that are specially supported by us, namely, the Christian Orphans' Home in St. Louis and the one in Louisville, Ky. The one in St. Louis has about 80 children in it at present, and the home in Louisville probably has half as many. It must be remembered, however, that these children are being sent out as fast as good homes can be found for them. The benevolent work among us has not been carried on in any organized, practical way until recently. The Christian women of our churches in St. Louis have formed a "Benevolent Association of the Christian Church," the object of which is to establish orphan homes wherever needed, co-operating with state benevolent organizations in such states as desire to establish such homes. They have also established an "Old Folks' Home" in this city, and a "Babies' Home." They are perfecting their organization and wish to enlist our people throughout the country in benevolent work. It is now no longer necessary to go into any of the benevolent orders in order to do benevolent work. Our churches have determined to restore that neglected feature of New Testament Christianity, and the fact that Christian women are leading in this great work gives assurance that it will be carried forward to success.

Current Religious Thought.

It may encourage us in dealing with the problem of Ministerial Relief, the care of invalid and superannuated preachers, to know that other religious bodies are discussing the same question. The following suggestions for provision for the superannuates in the Twentieth Century Thank Offering are made in the Central Christian Advocate (Methodist):

1. Let the next General Conference do a little wise legislation by way of making some few changes in the "Chartered Fund" administration, so as to divide the dividend as the Book Concern dividend is divided.

2. Then let each conference have some one to look after this part of the Thank Offering and add at least one million dollars to the "Chartered Fund," and let each conference build up a fund to be administered by the conference as now provided by the Discipline. I see the Michigan and Detroit Conferences are moving in this interest vigorously. Every conference in Methodism ought to move in this matter by making ample provision for the support of our superannuates and the widows and children of deceased ministers. It would help worthy young men into the work, and help faithful men when in the ministry; last but not least it would help men when their effective days are over out of the active work. Shall we not as a church seize this golden opportunity to make the long-needed and richly deserved provision for these claimants?

Sunday, February 11, has been set apart by the World's Student Christian Association as the day for prayer for students. This body represents 1,300 student societies and over 55,000 students and professors. The day of prayer is observed in thirty countries. The following suggestions for its observance, which we clip from the Standard (Chicago), emanate from the chairman of the committee at Stockholm, Sweden:

1. Arrange to have the day observed, not only by bands of Christian students, but also in the churches. To this end advertise it in the religious papers. Call on pastors of as many churches as possible, especially in student communities, and request them to preach sermons appropriate to the purpose of the day, and to call forth prayer on behalf of students all over the world.

2. The perils attending the observance of such a day should be avoided; the peril of formality, due as a rule to the lack of spiritual preparation; the peril of indefiniteness, due often to not having in mind actual reasons for prayer and intercession; the peril of selfishness, shown in limiting our prayers to ourselves and not pervading them with the world-wide spirit which characterized the prayers of Christ; the peril of missing the purpose of the day by devoting too much time in the meetings to addresses and not enough to prayer to God, and the deadly peril of entering upon the observance of the day in a wrong spirit—a critical, doubting, unthankful spirit, instead of a spirit abounding with sympathy, faith and gratitude.

It has long been a fashion among a certain class of Protestants to emphasize continually the defects of Protestantism and point to the excellences of Romanism. This is on the same principle which leads a fisherman to think that the best holes are on the other side of the stream, and which persuades even the patient cow that the best grazing is on the other side of the fence. We have no interest in denying to Romanism full credit for all its good points. But when all that has been granted, there remain some specific and incontrovertible charges which Romanists must answer, but cannot. The following dispassionate statement is from the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

I charge Rome with failure in three most important items.

1. She has failed to teach the people concerning Christ. Outside of a few dogmatic utterances of the church, her people are ignorant of the life and teachings of the Son of God. This is more than true of the Holy Spirit; and this condition of affairs exists, not alone where she has had full sway, but even where competition with Protestant churches has improved her 500 per cent.

2. Rome has failed to develop a well-flavored people, morally. One or two phases of morality may be exempted. No Roman Catholic country is known for its high moral standards, and Roman Catholic citizens in Protestant countries lag considerably behind the membership of other churches in all questions of public morals; witness, all who have taken special interest in temperance reforms.

3. Rome has failed to put her people abreast of the culture and progress of the times. She has largely failed in secular education. Her schools are not comparable with other institutions of learning, notwithstanding the vastness of resources. Her people are notable for their intellectual defectiveness.

Most pastors have, at one time or another, felt as a burden the requirement to preach and conduct an entire service twice in the same day, in the same place and before the same people, and have wondered whether the people did not get tired of them. The Evangelist, in an article on "The One-man Ministry," declares that present conditions demand a change and that the custom of having one minister to a church must be set aside.

The system of "the one-man ministry" should be changed for the sake of the ministers themselves. It imposes burdens on them that save in exceptional cases must soon wear them out in mind or body, if not in both. The number of clerical break-downs, with all the damage involved to the interests of congregations, and of suffering to the families of ministers, is continually increasing.

"The system should cease for the sake of the congregations. Restlessness is the most marked characteristic of the people of to-day. They can not be satisfied with one thing at a time. Few would be attracted to a concert where there was to be an hour and a half of one singer, even though of the first class. The very atmosphere of present-day life is against a system which "gives to a congregation, through all its services, nothing but the sound of one voice, and the product of one brain, and that brain too often weary and overtaxed."

In place of the system prevailing among us to-day, we would suggest a grouping of churches and a partnership of their ministers. In a town where there are four or five Presbyterian Churches, or in a section of a large city, like New York, where there are the same number, these churches might enter into a definite union of ministry, of finance, of everything. Thus, in that town, or in that section of the city, there would be simply one Presbyterian Church with various buildings in which to carry on its operations. The results of such a change could not but be highly beneficial to the cause of religion.

THE HOME OF RUSKIN.

W. E. G.

One who has breathed the air of Concord and has felt himself in the presence of the group of American men of letters who called that village home—Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, Alcott—will have no difficulty in understanding the state of mind of the literary pilgrim who finds himself in the midst of the English Lake District. If Concord claims the distinction of historical as well as literary associations, the English Lake Disrict can boast the added charm of a picturesqueness unknown to the Massachusetts town. It is a mere patch, a bit of territory at most twenty miles square. There are green hills of soft and rounded outline in the eastern half; in the west, mountains not large as mountains go, but rocky and rugged and with a scenic value out of all proportion to their size. In every hollow is a lake, in every valley a stream and on every hillside a thousand chattering rivulets. It was here that Wordsworth was born, lived and died, and nowhere else does one get so close to the heart of the great man who wrote about little things in an eternal way, as at his home at Rydal Mount, half-way up a hillside with a wide outlook over the valley, unless it is at the little rose-embowered Dove Cottage nestling at the foot of the hill, where the poet lived in his earlier years. Memories of Southey and Coleridge, too, haunt the region. The house of Harriet Martineau stands by the roadside near Wordsworth's, and John Wilson, the critic ("Christopher North") Tennyson's "crusty Christopher," lived not five miles from the spot where Tennyson himself afterward spent a few seasons.

This was the region, "Wordsworthshire" Lowell calls it, into which John Ruskin retired to spend his last years, and these men were his neighbors—dead long since, of course, but still more really and potently present than any other people in the district. Ruskin chose a spot on the shore of Lake Coniston, where the wild grandeur of the western country, Wast Water and Scafell Pike, softens down to meet the quieter beauty of Windemere, and there he made his home. "Brantwood," he called it.

Nine miles I had tramped one day in August, over the mountains where there was no road and scarcely a path, crossing on the way Scafell Pike, the highest mountain in England. Then a valley opened up and a road appeared in it. It winds aimlessly for a few miles, then passes through a glen and emerges at the head of Lake Coniston. The little town of Coniston lies a step to the right; to the left runs a shady road by the lakeside, yet not quite at the water's edge, for a long, sloping meadow lies between, dipping down to the lake.

Tennyson's house is passed almost immediately. Ruskin's is a mile farther on and the road still runs by the lake. Stopping at a cottage, I inquire which is Ruskin's house. It is the next one and just around a bend in the road. But my informant, interested in my interest, volunteers a word or two and is easily lured into telling all he knows about his distinguished neighbor. It was not much that he knew about Ruskin's theories of art, his influence on Preraphaelitism, his social philosophy, his political economy or the rich eloquence of his prose style, for he was only a plain countryman who did not take much to books. But he knew that his neighbor, "The Professor," as he called him constantly, was esteemed a great man by the world and that, wearing lightly the honors with which the world had crowned him, he had moved among the humble people of the countryside with a strengthening sympathy, a sweet simplicity and a gentle dignity of character which made them love him.

It was not without a pardonable pride that he told me how "The Professor" used often to drop in at his cottage on summer evenings for a cup of tea and a talk.

But all that was even then a thing of the past. While yet he lived among them, he became but a shadow and a memory. The feebleness of old age came on. Still he walked out daily, but only with the assistance of his valet. And worse than the weakening of the body was the failure of the mind, until now he no longer recognized his friends, except the one or two who constantly attended him. He still lived, but already the black curtain had fallen which shut out the world. There was genuine pathos in the words as his humble friend spoke of what The Professor used to do and say "when he was all right."

Ruskin's home stands, as the picture shows it, facing the road but looking over it, down across the meadow to Lake Coniston. Beyond the lake and rising just behind the village on its shore, stands the mountain which is affectionately termed the "Old Man of Coniston." It might have been possible, by pushing into the garden through the open gate, to have gotten a glimpse, or even a a snap-shot, of Ruskin at his window, but after what I had heard I felt too sympathetic to be intrusive. I could no more do it than I could climb up to peep over the stone wall to get a look at Mrs. Gladstone walking in her private garden at Hawarden Castle, a few months after the death of the Grand Old Man. I saw some Englishmen do that thing and, I grieve to state, one American. But I had spent the morning talking to an old woman in the village. She had told me with tears in her eyes and a choke in her voice how good "The Old Gentleman" was, and how the whole village loved him like a father; and somehow I did not feel like clambering up a wall to stare at his widow. And I thank the countryman at Coniston for giving me such a view of the man Ruskin that I did not care to treat him with less respect than any other man would receive in his own home. So, after all, my visit to Ruskin was only a visit to his nearest neighbor.

A keen observer of men and things has recently called attention to the fact that the use of the telephone is frequently attended by a neglect of courtesy, not to say decency, which does no credit to the finer sentiments of the people who use telephones. Perhaps the observer referred to has had a series of unfortunate experiences which lead him to overestimate the prevalence of the evil, but it exists, nevertheless. Men who would blush to utter a discourteous word to your face will talk to you by telephone as if you were a ruffian—or as if they were one. Apparently it is considered businesslike to be gruff and snappy over the wire, and the telephone is a great encourager of businesslike procedure. The keen observer suggested that the need of the hour was for some means of "teaching politeness to the man at the other end of the telephone." Perhaps it would be even more pertinent to suggest that we begin by teaching politeness to the man at our own end of the line, and it may make the lesson easier if we remember that, while the rush of our modern commercial life demands a reasonable brevity of utterance, gruffness and discourtesy are no part of a businesslike method of conversation.

USES OF THE RELIGIOUS PAPER.—III.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

It has been the purpose of these articles to notice some of the uses of the religious paper which have not usually been dwelt upon. I shall therefore pass without special consideration the vast service of the religious press to the temperance cause and other vital moral interests, concerning which a subsidized secular press is discreetly silent; its immense power in marshaling missionary forces and quickening the liberality of the church to the support of world-wide missions; its great value as an educator, and in securing a more intelligent Christian membership; its efficient help, both to the minister and to the people, in the services of the prayer-meeting, the Christian Endeavor meeting and other church work; its benign influence in the family, and numerous other services which are commonly recognized and which are not less valuable in the church and individual life of the membership. These I shall pass, not because they are less important, but because they are better known—and shall consider briefly one or two other uses of the religious paper which should not be overlooked.

The religious paper fosters religious thinking. It has already been noticed that he who reads is more reflective than he who listens to speaking. But, beyond this, the religious paper is specially adapted to stimulate thought on religious subjects. When Coleridge wrote his work on "Aids to Reflection" he did not discuss the conditions of reflection, but compiled a book of aphorisms, or short, pithy sayings provocative of thought, saying just enough to give the mind its pace and then leaving it to do its own thinking. The esteem in which the book has ever been held is evidence of the value of this method. It is in this direction that the religious paper excels. It is not a long dissertation on any single subject, but a potpourri of religious matter. Its short, pithy discussions of living issues; its queries and answers; its spicy letters from different sections; its bright thoughts of a million minds; its stories for those who care for such presentations of truth—and most people do; its chinking of bright aphorisms, gleaned from all literature; its studies in great subjects; and its news, general and personal, answering to our keenest mental appetite, that for fiction not excepted—all make up an assemblage of features which has no rival in quickening religious thought. It assails the mind on every side of interest, and that in the most effective way. Then, with those who read a religious paper, the thinking is not confined to the stated services of the church and then abandoned in the rush of week-day cares and pleasures; but readings are done from time to time throughout the week that throw into the mind subjects for reflection during the hours of daily toil. The incalculable value of such a service will be seen when we remember that reflection is mental digestion, and the indispensable condition of all growth and of all worship. Like food without assimilation, religious matter which is not appropriated by reflection is valueless for the purposes of spiritual nourishment. And herein lies one of the greatest perils of our time. Life is overfull and men have no time to think, and they have lost the inclination. The mental malady of our civilizatian is that thinking has become intolerable. The hour-long sermon could not live in this day; men cannot endure to think so long. In this marvelous intellectual dyspepsia only highly seasoned tidbits are relished. Short and sharp is now the law of all mental approach; and the religious paper, like other journalism, conforms to this law, and in view of changed conditions is, if properly conducted, one of the best if not the best agency of spiritual culture. To shut our eyes to this remarkable mental change, due to modern civilization, is to be lost. As modern appliances of war have rendered the walled city no longer safe; so the conditions of modern civilization have rendered the old-time methods of spiritual supply no longer sufficient. It is best that we see this before it is too late, for there are strange enemies at work in the unseen depths of human life.

He who takes a religious paper is brought into contact with the unseen. The apostle John uttered a profound saying when he said, "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." The difficulty of the heart in passing the bound of the seen is all too real. The savage who saw the missionary pray to the Unseen was seized with uncontrollable laughter. When asked why he laughed, "why," said he, "there was no one there." It is the difficulty which idolatry has ever sought to bridge. If the idol could have remained an eye-glass to the heart and not become a fetich, idolatry would have done no harm. An elaborate ritual has sought the same end; but it, too, has always tended to fall from its high purpose. Yet, the difficulty remains to be mastered. Worship is adoration, and adoration is love. In order to worship, the heart must learn to love in the unseen. Do you love God? "I try to." Ah! but do you? The difficulties are not all of the will. Is your faith strong enough to live and love in the unseen? Where idolatry and ritualism have failed, literature may help. The hero of the novel is not seen; yet, we weep with his sorrow and laugh with his joy. The chasm has been bridged; the heart passes over and loves. What is this art that outdoes millenniums of idolatry and centuries of ritualism? The novelist weaves about his characters a web of incident, and lets them speak and move and feel as in actual life, and our heart is there with its laughter and tears. It is this which the religious paper does for a great brotherhood. We see not, but we hear of our distant kinsmen in the spirit—the incidents which befall them, their sorrows, their joys, their successes, and their very thoughts. They speak to us in words that come fresh from the heart, and their lives grow precious to us. It is a splendid service of the imagination. The religious paper is a true romance ever unfolding. Fresh news and fiction fascinate for the same reason. The religious paper carries our life and our love into the unseen.

And here we reach another thought. The advent of motherhood is a species of conversion. It opens the heart to all human love. It is a baptism from Heaven, and the face shines with a new splendor. The child is born, but the mother is new-born. By loving one she finds the way to loving all. It is Christ's way. He would convert all hearts to him; and in loving him passionately they find the way to all love, even that of enemies. But there is a difficulty even in this: we see him not. True, he stepped into our world of incident (beware how you touch the historic Christ! for without him the heart loses its hold on God) and acted and moved and spake among men; but nineteen centuries have gone since then, and it is not so easy to love across the centuries. It is this that gives the humor to Mark Twain's weeping at the grave of Adam. Christ now lives, it is true, but in the unseen; and we have no incidents or happenings in his present life to help the heart. The early Christians were near to his time, and had not this distance to span. While it is vastly easier to love God through Christ, who entered into human history to give the heart its purchase, it must be confessed that there are difficulties to a personal, passionate love of Christ that did not exist with the early Christians. How shall we surmount these? John would say that by loving our brethren, whom we have seen; we shall be helped to love Christ whom we have not seen. But there is now better help than this. The fellowship of the larger brotherhood, of which the religious paper is the medium, is a fellowship of the unseen. If I can love a thousand brothers whom I have not seen, but who are very near to me by living in my time and walking at my side and speaking to me with only a thin veil of miles between (never so thin before), I can easily love the Elder Brother who is also in the unseen. The reading of a religious paper is a perpetual exercise of faith in its grasp of the unseen, and a powerful educator of that love which can only exist by laying hold on the unseen.

The love of the enemy is only possible through the grasp of the unseen. What he is doing to you can never inspire anything but hatred. Even Christ did not say, "Father, forgive them, for they are very bad," but, "For they know not what they do." Piteous picture! Acting like demons in the dark! "Did they only know, they would give me tears and kindness. Theirs is the greater calamity." And so—he loved them, looking beneath the seen. He who has grown strong in his fellowship with the larger brotherhood has gone far in the great lesson of love. It is he who can best see the unseen and follow it with his sympathy. It is one of the greatest services of the religious paper that it spiritualizes love, and gives the heart power to love both God and the most degraded of our fellowmen. It is a shining ladder by which we climb up to worship and down to pity.

The world of literature is a world of the unseen, and the religious paper is the educator of a heart-life in the unseen.

REMINISCENCES OF JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.

MRS. DECIMA CAMPBELL BARCLAY.

The newspaper talk about bringing home the remains of John Paul Jones from France for interment in Arlington Cemetery recalls a very sad incident and fatal accident in connection with the bringing home the remains of John Howard Payne from Tunis, known only perhaps to a very few people in this country. John Howard Payne was born in Boston, Mass., in 1792, the very year that John Paul Jones died and was buried at Paris. He was twice U. S. Consul at Tunis, the first time from May, 1843, to September, 1845, and again from June, 1851, to April, 1852, when he died and was buried there, a monument being erected to his memory "by a grateful country," and on the slab of Italian marble was inscribed the following verse:

"Sure, when thy gentle spirit fled
To realms beyond the azure dome,
With arms outstretched, God's angel said,
Welcome to Heaven's home, 'Sweet Home.'"

It is forty-eight years since he died, "an exile from home," and the only woman, it is said, that he ever loved and really wished to marry, lives to-day, a gentle, sad-faced widow—twice wedded and twice widowed—at Tangier, Morocco. For thirty years his ashes reposed in African soil, until the munificent and benevolent Mr. Corcoran, who knew Mr. Payne personally, conceived the philanthropic idea of bringing them at his own expense to this country, and placing over them in Oak Hill Cemetery near Washington, a fitting monument, worthy the poet and scholar. Every one felt and appreciated the generous deed, and a responsive chord was touched in all hearts that echoed the melody of "Home, Sweet Home." In the spring of 1883, with flags at half mast, the coffin holding the dust of John Howard Payne, covered with the United States flag, was removed from the vessel at New York and borne through the streets of the city in a hearse drawn by four black horses on its way to Washington, while Gilmore's famous band played the pathetic strains of "Home, Sweet Home." This "old, sweet song" was first published in London in 1823, as an interlude in the opera of "Clari, the Maid of Milan," and was performed at Covent Garden Theatre on May 8th, 1823, by John Howard Payne. The copyright of this opera was sold to John Miller, U. S. dispatch agent at London, to whom Mr. Payne was introduced by Washington Irving, for the sum of fifty pounds sterling. Just when and where the verses were first written historians differ. It is said in his wanderings in Italy he heard the air sung by a peasant "flower girl," and wrote the words, adapting them to the tender pathos of the melody. One thing is sure: this song has melted the heart of the world, and is "the one touch of nature which has made the whole world kin." I heard a lady in Africa say, about three years ago, that her uncle in England had the original manuscript of the two little verses, which had been given to him by Mr. Payne himself, and I thought, What a treasure they would be for our "Historical Society," and what a round sum they would bring if sold at public auction, like "Gray's Elegy," which when the auctioneer produced the small sheets of paper torn and mutilated, calling it an "interesting article," one man bid ten pounds, another fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, and so on up to sixty-five pounds, when an amateur exclaimed, "It is mine!" but another cried out seventy! and on it went up and up, to one hundred pounds sterling! This I imagine would be the case with the manuscript of "Home, Sweet Home," should it ever be offered for sale, either in England or America. Almost fifty years ago, on the 17th of December, 1850, when Jenny Lind sang to one of the most distinguished audiences ever assembled in the city of Washington, her famous "Bird Song" and her "Greeting to America," Daniel Webster arose almost involuntarily from his seat, making a profound bow, as if in response for the country to her greeting, and President Fillmore, General Scott, Henry Clay and John Howard Payne, all sat before her entranced, but it was not until in response to an encore that she turned her face and eyes full upon Mr. Payne, and sang to him his "Home, Sweet Home," with all the tenderness, purity and sweetness of her magical voice, and before the first verse was finished, the whole audience went fairly mad with the most wild and enthusiastic, the most excited and appreciative applause that ever greeted a prima donna on an American stage. All eyes were turned upon Mr. Payne, who sat blushing and bewildered at the noteriety of his position, but the marvelous voice trilled on in a "ringing shower of limpid music—

"The birds singing gaily that came at my call," until it was as if all the birds of spring warbled together, or a choir of larks sang at heaven's gate!" In conversations with Lady Green, widow of Sir William Kirby Green, late ex-British Minister to the Court of Morocco, she gave me many interesting facts in the life of Mr. Payne while he lived at Tunis, where her father, Sir Thomas Reade, was British Consul-General for twenty-five years. She said he was a daily visitor at their house, a warm friend of her father and brother, and had devotedly loved and wanted to marry her younger sister, Maggie. When I learned that my friend, Mrs. Margaret Carleton, at "sweet sixteen," had been the veritable "sweetheart" and idol of the dead poet's heart, I hastened to her home and "begged her to tell me all about it." She laughed and said, "Mary [Lady Green] ought not to have told you of his love for me; we were very great friends, but he was an old bachelor and I a very young girl, and I never once thought of marrying him; he was kind enough to come to my wedding at Tunis when I married my first husband, Mr. Crow." She is an old lady now, and widowed the second time, but while her face bears traces of sorrow, deep and lasting, she has always a cheerful smile and kind word for those who visit her in her quiet home. She told me that Mr. Payne gave her all of his books, which were afterwards unfortunately sold by mistake with some books of her sister's, while they were both absent in England. But the sad incident remains yet to be told. When a "man o' war" of the United States was anchored in the port at Tunis for the purpose of bringing to America the remains of Mr. Payne, the U. S. Consulate at Tunis having been abolished and no American Consul there, Sir Thomas Reade, Jr., son of the former British Consul-General, who was then himself Consul-General, was requested by our government to take charge of the matter, have the body of his old friend exhumed, coffined and placed on board the vessel, etc., to all of which he most kindly and promptly attended, and when he was leaving the ship to go ashore, after all was finished, just as he stepped into the little boat which lay at the foot of the ship's ladder, a sudden wave gave the boat a lurch, throwing him forward, and he fell upon his side, receiving a severe blow, which so bruised and injured him that a virulent cancer was produced which terminated his life most sadly and unexpectedly in a few months, bringing untold sorrow and sadness upon his family, who yet deeply mourn his untimely death. It was indeed a rare treat to talk with those who had known intimately and well the poet who had written the immortal verses which close with the lines—

"Be it ever so humble,
There is no place like home."

Illinois Missions For 1900.

The Illinois State Board is making a special effort to do more during this closing year of the nineteenth century for the conversion of men and women in the state than has been done any previous year. It is greatly desired to secure ten thousand conversions in the state through the agents of the state board before the beginning of the new century. To succeed in this great undertaking it will be necessary to have the co-operation of a number of churches which have hitherto not given much support to this work; also those churches which have co-operated must rally their forces and do more, if possible, this year.

It is greatly desired to have every county in the state, where we have a number of churches sufficient for a county organization, to organize for this work. The county organization ought to remain a permanent organization for future work. All these county organizations ought to co-operate with the district organization, and in this way help with the state work. More money is needed to carry on this work. There is a large number of churches in the state which ought to wheel into line for this forward movement, which have hitherto done little or nothing for the state work.

The object of these lines is to call the attention of our Illinois churches to this work, and to urge them to immediate action. The sooner the help comes the more good will it do this year. We trust that the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in Illinois and the churches which have not been helping in this work, will do so at an early dsy. Let the churches which have not taken a contribution for Illinois work during the past year do so at once. Individuals who can send a dollar, five dollars and up to a hundred, ought to send the amount without delay. Send all money to J. P. Darst, Peoria, Ill. J. H. SMART.

Centralia, Ill., Jan. 22, 1900.

Our Budget.

—Foreign Missions first Lord's day in March.

—The motto this year is $200,000 for Foreign Missions.

—This is not a large sum for so large a body of people.

—But it will require preparation, organization, consecration.

—Churches should lay their plans at once, if they have not already done so, and begin the canvass.

—This is the silver anniversary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. No coppers will be in order from those able to give silver.

—Next week we publish a trumpet-blast from the president of the Foreign Society, rallying the hosts to the March offering.

—Among other good things we offer our readers this week, is a very interesting article from Mrs. Decima Campbell-Barclay—daughter of Alexander Campdell—on "Reminiscences of John Howard Payne." Sister Barclay had opportunity of gathering her information at first hand, while her husband was U. S. Consul at Tangiers.

—We are grateful to our friends who are cooperating in raising clubs for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Under our club offer churches should not wait for us to take the initiative, but should appoint a committee of one or more to make a thorough canvass of the church, in order to avail themselves of the club rate. This is the point of our offer, to secure the churches to act as our agent and to give them the benefit of our commission to agents.

—The ministers of the leading Protestant churches and the leading business men of the Hawaiian Islands have petitioned the Congress of the United States to enact and place in the constitution now being prepared for those islands the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, opium and the prohibition of gambling. These are advanced steps toward a higher civilization and it is to be hoped that the prayer of these petitioners will be heard. If so there would then be hope for an amendment to our own constitution to bring it up to the level of that of the Hawaiian Islands. But the fear of self-condemnation may defeat the petition from Hawaii. Had England not so disregarded these fundamental elements of a Christian civilization in the government of her colonies and not accompanied her missionaries to heathen lands with ships loaded with intoxicating liquors she might not now be suffering the humiliation that has overtaken her because of her war in South Africa. Let us heed the lesson as a nation while the opportunity is at hand.

—The Christian Century, late the Christian Oracle, of Chicago, having assumed its new name at the beginning of the new year, is maintaining the dignity of its name in a very commendable way. Just before the expiration of last year, Chas. A. Young, Geo. A. Campbell and Angus McKinnon purchased the interest in the Oracle Pub. Co. owned by J. H. Garrison, of this paper, giving them a controlling interest in the paper and company. Chas. A. Young, well known to our readers, has been elected president of the company and together with J. H. Hardin, A. M. Haggard and F. D. Power, has become an editorial contributor of the paper, Geo. A. Campbell being the editor. The last number of the paper contains the good Scotch face of Rev. J. M. Campbell, the colaborator with Prof. Willett in the authorship of the "Teaching of the Book." We congratulate the Christian Century on its excellent beginning under its new auspices and wish it the largest success.

—We had expected to receive the completed program of the Congress of Disciples which is to meet at Indianapolis, March 27-29, in time for publication in this week's paper. At the time of going to press, however, it has not reached us. We hope soon to be able to publish it. Meanwhile, those who are interested may depend upon it that our second Congress will not fall behind the first one in what it shall offer to the public. Let the time and place of the Congress be borne in mind, so that nothing may interfere with your attendance.

—In a letter to us from B. B. Tyler, who is conducting a protracted Bible study meeting in Kansas City, writes us as follows about the meeting: "The meeting in Kansas City, Mo., is to my liking. There is no excitement. The audiences are large and unusually intelligent. There is a good, wholesome interest.

—B. B. Tyler has issued a new and revised edition of his historical leaflet or tract on "The Disciples of Christ." In this new edition the statistics are brought up to the Jubilee Convention. This tract could be studied with great profit by the majority of our own people as well as strangers. Its liberal distribution among our religious neigbors and unconverted friends would also be valuable missionary work.

—In our evangelistic report last week the name of W. J. Lhamon, of Allegheny, Pa., appeared in error as W. J. Thomas and that of F. N. Calvin, Milwaukee, as F. N. Calim. Brother Scoville's meeting with Brother Lhamon in Allegheny at last accounts, had reached 116 additions. There are a number of meetings with a large number of additions reported in our columns this week. The evangelistic spirit is abundantly in evidence in our churches this winter.

—We are under obligations to the Y. M. C. A. of St. Louis for the courtesy of a ticket entitling us to all the privileges of the Association for 1900. The Y. M. C. A. of St. Louis is one of the strongholds of righteousness of the city and also one of its energetic and influential factors in opposing iniquity. By this association the people of St. Louis are permitted to hear some of the ablest preachers and lecturers which the city and country affords. We believe in the Y. M. C. A. and the good work that it is doing in this and other cities, and especially in the army and navy.

—Mrs. E. D. Davis, of Italy, Texas, has just made a $5,000 gift to Church Extension, on the annuity plan. So Bro. Muckley writes, and of course, he is feeling good about it. The points which seem to have influenced Sister Davis were (1) the pressing need for this fund to house unhoused churches, (2) the perpetual nature of the fund, and (3) its wise business management. She was attracted by the annuity plan because it enabled her to put it where it would be doing the Lord's work while earning the necessary income for herself. We commend the wisdom of Sister D. in administering on her own estate and trust that many more may do likewise. It is hinted that this is only a part of what she intends to do in this direction.

—Rev. C. D. Crouch, of England, has solved the problem of the ministerial salary in his own way. He has gone into business "so that he may be free to apply himself to the work of the ministry without payment from his flock." According to the London Chronicle, "he has just issued his annual circular to his congregation, in which he states that his efforts have been so signally blessed that he was able to return their offerings at the rate of £50 in the first year, £100 in the second, and in the year upon which they are just entering the return will be £150. 'Considerable criticism,' adds the reverned gentleman, 'is aroused by the course which I have felt led to take, but the conviction that I am in the way of the Lord's will for me determines me to go forward.' Mr. Crouch was an old pupil of the late Mr. Spurgeon, with whom he was on the most friendly terms. For some years Mr. Crouch was a Baptist pastor, but four years ago he cut himself adrift from denominationalism, and now carries on divine worship at the tabernacle at Worthing, with what success the preceding information will indicate. The particular business to which he applies himself during the week is fruit-growing, of which Worthing is the great center in the south." This is all right provided the church is not able to pay his salary, or provided it pays the money it would pay the preacher to the Lord's work in some other way. Not many preachers, however, could succeed so well as Mr. Crouch seems to have done.

—The whole brotherhood is debtor to Bro. N. J. Aylsworth for his able series of articles on "The Uses of a Religious Paper." Preachers would do well to read them, or use liberal excerpts from them to their congregations. There has hitherto been no adequate appreciation of the religious value of a Christian paper in every family. There are signs of an awakening on this subject, and these able articles of Bro. Aylsworth will do much in this direction. At the present cost of producing a religious paper there is bound to be one of three things: They must have a larger patronage, or increase their present prices, or lower their quality, both in material used and in the standard of literature.

—Those who wish to receive the Topeka Capital for the week in which Mr. Sheldon is to edit it, March 13-20, can have that privilege by remitting 25 cents to the paper.

—If Mr. Sheldon succeeds in running a daily secular journal as Christ would have him run it, we hope the experiment will be tried by the religious press generally. It would make a decided change in some of them.

—The provincialism of Eastern journalism is well illustrated in the offer of a New York religious journal to a religious weekly published in the Central West, in response to a proposition for exchange, to knock off fifteen cents from its regular price in consideration of receiving a journal which has probably a larger circulation and represents a wider constituency. What does a paper west of the Alleghenies amount to, any way?

—We regret to learn, in a note just received from W. T. Moore, that Mrs. St. Clair, of Christian College, has just lost her only child, Annilee, a little girl twelve years of age, who died on the 13th ult., with inflammatory rheumatism. Our sincere sympathies are extended to Mrs. St. Clair in this sad bereavement.

—The Rev. J. C. MacInnes, of the Oak Leaf Congregational Chapel at Oakland, Cal., has decided to give up the ministry, so the associated press dispatch tells us, because he "believes in dancing and a long list of other things that are tabooed by church goers when indulged in by ministers." No doubt Mr. MacInnes has come to a wise decision. Why should a nice young man be asked to make such sacrifices as the giving up of dancing, drinking and card playing, just for the privilege of saving a few people from everlasting ruin! If there could be a weeding out of all such selfish, worldly-minded, unconverted, pleasure-seeking, self-indulging men from the ministry it would be great gain to the church.

—The churches in Frankfort, Ky., have been holding a day of prayer and humiliation in the Episcopal Church. The house was crowded and speeches were made by Rev. Mr. Tallieferro, George Darsie and Rev. W. Crowe, pleading for moderation and the reign of reason and good feeling. Kentucky is being tried now as by fire.

—The Indianapolis Journal for January 22 contains an introduction to the brief of a sermon preached by Allan B. Philputt, pastor Central Church of Christ, Indianapolis, Ind., which it publishes, that is interesting for the uniqueness of the method or way of going at a thing of so much importance which it reveals, as well as a news item. Here is what the Journal says:

As the Rev. Allan B. Philputt, pastor of the Central Christian Church, rose to preach yesterday morning and noted the crowded condition of the church, he said: "When people come to see me I always like to give them a comfortable seat. We have not room enough here. Is there not some one who will give us $10,000 to enlarge and change this audience room? Some of you would hardly miss it, and it would mean a great deal to us." The request created something of a sensation in the audience, but at the close the pastor found that a number of members were disposed to take his request seriously, a few going so far as to say what they would give if the plan of enlargement were undertaken.

—Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, has been striking out from the shoulder again, at the iniquity of his own city. In his last Sunday's sermon he said:

Christians are Christians on Sunday, work like slaves six days out of the week making money and leave the city to be ruled by a race of thieves and vagabonds, and the consequence is that more children are being started in the direct road to hell every week than all the churches, missions and Sunday-schools combined are saving in a year.

This is just as true, only perhaps in a little less degree, of every large city in this country as it is of New York. Respectable citizens devote themselves to money-making and let the thieves and spoilsmen run the cities. And what a shame it is!

—The editors of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Oracle (now the Century) have both expressed incredulity at a recent intimation on my part that I have mastered higher criticism. This is not very surprising. The little boys at school, while struggling with the multiplication table, are not easily convinced that some of the big boys have mastered arithmetic; but if they are good boys, and study hard for a few years, they find out that the thing can be done. So, these editors will yet find out, I trust, that no man can dig a hole so deep that some other may not climb to the bottom of it.—J. W. McGarvey, in Christian Standard.

We have been convinced for some time that Bro. McGarvey was in a hole, a very deep hole, near the bottom of it, but we did not know that he was conscious of it.

—Speaking on the death of John Ruskin, last Sunday, Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus said:

John Ruskin was the Elijah of the nineteenth century. He lived his pure life, and, seeing the end, cried out, "Let me die," and his appeal has been heard. No greater life has been lived in the century; no man's ardor has been so matchless. He sweetened the world with poetry. He will be remembered for all time for the beauty of his religion, for in nature he knew God and by his life taught each of us higher and nobler deeds. After the wrecks left by Napoleon and the French revolution, when the world was chaotic, Ruskin came with his poetry and his peace. Ruskin left his inspiration, and it was felt everywhere. Browning said he had learned his love of pictures from Ruskin; Gladstone found his eloquence for the Armenians in him, and in the government of a great city the London council found its inspiration in him. Moody and Ruskin are to-day looking into the same face. One found his faith in the worship of the gospel, the other in the worship of the beautiful.

But Ruskin saw the beautiful in Christ as well as in nature, and knelt adoringly before the peerless One.

—I am sorry to report that our church building caught fire this afternoon from the furnace, and was considerably damaged. We are fully covered by insurance, however, and hope to have our house ready for use again in a few weeks.

Yours sincerely,
W. N. BRINEY.

Paris, Mo., Jan. 28.

—Our CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST seems to have adopted our old Kansas state motto: "Ad astra per aspera." Amen! J. SPRINGER.

Yes, we have had our share of the aspera, and we are trying to move ad astra.

—Apropos to the above, it is said that once when a learned and distinguished English jurist was visiting the capitol of Kansas, and was being banqueted by the state functionaries, he picked up a menu card containing the above motto, and smiling said, "Very appropriate indeed." A state official, more noted for "practical politics" than for his literary attainments, sitting beside the jurist, looked very knowing and remarked, "Them's Latin words!" Of course that was a long time ago!

—Let no one fail to read the poem in Our Family Circle this week on "How My Boy Went Down." It may not be new, but it cannot fail to touch the heart of any sincere person. And in answer to the closing lines, "Oh, can nothing destroy this great evil," etc., be it said that there is a remedy at hand—the vote of the Christian land—but to the shame of the Christian voter of the land be it said, they refuse to apply the remedy and stay this awful destruction of our young men. And not of our young men only, but of men and women, both old and young.

—Christmas evening, '99, was observed in the home of Bro. H. S. Earl, Irvington, Ind., with a special little joyful celebration, the marriage of his only daughter, Mabel, to Mr. Virgil B. Ging, of Irvington. The bride's only attendant was little Kenneth Harker, who acted as ring-bearer. There was no ostentatious display, no merry-making; only the genuine joy of a happy marriage. Only a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony. The dear, loving mother was missed, but they knew her blessing was with them, and all else gladdened their golden hour. MRS. PEARREE.

Irvington, Ind.

We wish to add our congratulations and best wishes.

—The Rev. Dr. de Costa, who left the Episcopal fold because Prof. Briggs was admitted to that body, and who soothed his troubled soul by entering the Roman Catholic Church, has recently preached his first sermon as a Catholic. In that sermon, with the proverbial zeal of the new convert, he said:

The Protestant Church is fast crumbling to its foundations and cannot stand for a long period. The time has come when the Protestant Church will have to topple. It is fast being discovered that the Catholic Church is a diamond of the purest water.

Now this is too bad! And all, too, just because the Rev. Dr. de Costa had to leave it! And the Church of Rome is "a diamond of the purest water!" The simile is not altogether inappropriate, for the diamond is a very hard substance and neither lives nor grows. It is crystallized. The kingdom of heaven is like a seed—a thing which has in it the potentiality of life and growth.

—A Chicago paper contains the following:

Judge Smith yesterday decided that the trustees of the Central Church of Christ exceeded their powers in signing the note of $10,000 given to John Gunzenhauser. The church is at 37th Street and Indiana Avenue and efforts were being made to foreclose on the note. An execution was issued Jan. 11. When the decision is entered to-day the church property will be free from the levy against it.

The building referred to is one in which W. F. Black preaches. The congregation has been in a condition of disintegration for some time, owing to objections to the pastor. John Gunzenhauser was the leading financial man in the church, but he has ceased to attend there for some time, and recently brought suit to foreclose the mortgage, with what result the above shows. Whether there will be an appeal to a higher court we do not know.

B. H. Smith.

We are glad to furnish our readers this week with a good picture of one of the surviving veterans of a generation of preachers, only a few of whom remain.

B. H. Smith was born in Richmond, Va., March 1, 1829. He came to Glasgow, Mo., with his father in 1838, and lived in Glasgow until he was 18 years of age, when he became deputy clerk of the county and circuit clerk of Grundy County, Missouri. He was a practicing lawyer for six years. In 1854 he united with the Christian Church and commenced preaching. He entered Bethany College 1856 and graduated 1359. Immediately after, he became president of Bloomington (Ill.) Female College, serving as such for a year, and then was called to the charge of the church in Brunswick, Mo. After two years' service in Brunswick, he was called to the pastorate of the First Christian Church, St. Louis. Here he ministered for four years, after which he preached for the church in Chicago, resigning this position for the presidency of Christian University, Canton, Mo. He served in this position for ten years, then resigned to accept the presidency of Hesperian College, Woodland, California. After three years' service with Hesperian College, he preached one year for the church in Oakland, Cal., then returned to Canton, Mo., where he still resides.

Brother Smith has been in the ministry forty-six years, in the course of which he has preached in thirteen states of the Union, and in nearly every county in Missouri, and baptized over 5,000 converts. He is one of a very few of the pioneers left, and in his prime was ranked as one of our ablest preachers. And now, in much affliction, but in strong faith, he is waiting the call of the Master.

Baxter Waters, pastor of the Central Christian Church, this city, gives the following account of a recent visit to Bro. Smith:

"I spent a few days last week at Canton, Mo. It was a memorable privilege to visit Brother B. H. Smith, who has several years been confined to his room. He sits in his chair during the day, and while he has little comfort or ease, yet his hopefulness and his joy in the Lord are an uplift. He said to me, 'I am learning anew every day that "all things"—not simply part—"all things work together for good to those who love God." ' 'I can see it in my own case,' he said. He is learning the lesson of submission and is growing 'perfect through suffering.' While the outward man is decaying, the inner man is renewed from day to day. His life has been sweetened by his constant communion with his Savior, and he now clings to the tenderer and sunnier side of life. He said to me, 'It is the direct communion with God that fills me with joy and that satisfies me. I want nothing between me and my Lord.' It is this open, direct communion that is the essence of our religion. 'I dwell with him and walk with him day after day.' He believes that it is this indwelling Christ that compells us to the truest and highest service. He remarked, 'I never believed much in doing things simply because it was my duty.' Duty was transformed into privilege.

"Here, then, is this father of Israel; a prophet In his day; a stronghold in the time of many needs. Throughout this land he has many friends deeply anxious for his welfare; many others whom he has won to Christ, many students who have passed under the influence of his invigoring personality; all sympathize with him in his heavy affliction, but they rejoice in his staunch faith, now becoming so simple, so sincere, so childlike. Already he lives in the heavenly world; the earth is fast receding and the heavens are opening wider each day to receive his soul.

"No word of praise could be too strong for that lovely, saintly, Christian woman, Sister Smith, who ministers to him out of the rich abundance of her own life. Thank God for such noble lives, which have made the world richer and purer and better."

PERSONAL MENTION.

Isaac Selby's address is now 696 McAlister St., San Francisco, Cal.

J. E. Pickett has decided to remain in Boulder, Colorado. This will be his fifth year in that place.

The work of Clay T. Runyon, at Lawson and Los Animas, Colorado, is prospering. Many young men hear him.

Word comes to us that E. F. Harris has large audiences at Longmont, Colorado, and that there are additions almost every Lord's day.

Walter Kline began his ministry with the church in Clay City, Ill., Jan. 14th, and reports things there in a prosperous condition.

James Stone Helm would be glad to communicate with those needing the services of a singing evangelist. Address him, Elwood, Ind.

J. S. Copper has accepted a call to minister unto the East Side Church of Christ, Moberly, Mo. He was at De Soto, Mo.

F. L. Davis, of Charles City, Ia., would like to hold a meeting for some church where their pastor could supply his pulpit on Lord's day.

A. F. Holden, formerly of West Plains, Mo., has been called to the pastorate of the East Side Church, Denver, Col.

There are frequent additions to the Central Church, in Pueblo, Colorado, under the ministry of Charles S. Earley. He is a young man of the right stamp.

W. G. Walker has succeeded W. F. Donaldson at Newton, Ky. Bro. Walker has been preaching for several years in Virginia. He will make his home in Lexington and attend the university.

The press dispatch news this week reported C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., as dangerously sick of typhoid fever. We regret to hear of the sickness of Brother Chilton, but hope for his recovery.

Brother Oeschger of Fairfield, Neb., called at this office last Friday on his way to Vincennes, Indiana, where he is to preach a few sermons. We understand that the church is seeking the employment of Brother Oeschger.

The Highland and Wilsey Churches in Morris County, Kansas have extended a unanimous call to Bro. Imri C. Zumbwalt to remain with them another year at an increased salary. His work is said to be satisfactory in every respect.

The Mesa Church, at Pueblo, Colorado, is prospering under the ministry of Clyde Darsie. They have almost $350.00 in their building fund, and will create a sinking fund at once. They will endeavor to raise $50.00 a month.

G. B. Van Arsdall, of South Bend, Ind., has resigned and will be succeeded by Victor Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky. Brother Van Arsdall was called to remain in South Bend, but he feels that he must have a field where he can devote more time to study.

I. W. Cameron, Sioux City, Ia., is open for trips or settled work with any church in Iowa, Dakota, Nebraska or Kansas. He is a minister of experience and efficiency and would be glad to correspond with any church in need of a minister or an evangelist.

A. F. Holden, of West Plains, Mo., finding a different climate essential to his health, has resigned his ministry in that city, but remained long enough to introduce his successor, R. L. Lotz, to the brethren. He is now with the East Side Church in Denver, Colorado.

H. L. Willett gave a course of Bible lectures at Bloomington, Ill., last week. A brother from Normal writes: "About one hundred attend nightly from here. The audiences are immense; the interest wonderful! Many say they never saw so much of God before. There could be no better preparation for a revival in any community than the work he is doing."

Sam B. Ross, of Oelwein, Iowa, is just rounding out three years and a half of work in that new field, being its first and only minister. There have been added there during this time 150 persons. Bro. Ross says that he is now at liberty to engage with any congregation needing such help as he is able to render. Reference made to Margretts Wood Clark, of that congregation, B. S. Denny, state secretary for Iowa, or A. M. Haggard, Dean of Drake University, if needed,

After five years' delightful service as pastor of Independence (Ill.) Church, J. M. Bovee has resigned and would like a church about fifty miles from Quincy, or Jacksonville, or Carrollton, or within that radius. He can hold a meeting, sing his own solos nightly where agreeable and raise his own wages mostly. Address him at Mozier, Ill., his permanent home.

C. E. Bush has recently entered upon the ninth year of his ministry for the church in Windsor, Mo. This fact alone is a fine comment upon his standing and work as a Christian and a minister. During the last year there were 94 additions to the church. This church last year gave almost $250 to the various mission and benevolent departments of our work.

There was a quiet wedding at Saybrook, Ill., Jan. 24 in which several preaching brethren were interested. W. O. Lappin, late pastor at that place, was the groom and Miss Cora Dahl the bride. S. S. Lapin, state evangelist, officiated; J. C. Lappin, pastor at Saunemin, and R. E. Thomas, pastor at Petersburg, were in attendance. Mrs. Thomas is sister to the bride.

A. P. Cobb, who has recently built him a home and located at Decatur, Ill., intends to devote his time during the winter and spring to evangelistic work. Bro. Cobb has been very successful in his work as an evangelist, having held successful meetings with many of our leading churches. Churches desiring his services may address him as above. At last account he was in a meeting at Barry, Ill.

A. W. Gehres closed a two years' successful ministry at Spring Creek and Hopewell Churches, Indiana, in December. He is now living at Irvington, Ind. He began work with the church at Fairfield, Ind., making his first visit Jan. 7, which resulted in one confession at the regular Sunday evening service. He preaches at Fairfield twice a month, but has not as yet made satisfactory arrangements for the remainder of his time.

J. H. Jones, pastor of the church in Garden City, Mo., has added the editorial chair to his work in that city. He has begun the publication of a church organ called the Christian Visitor, the first number of which is just to hand. The Christian Visitor is a bright looking paper with its four pages of carefully selected matter. We hope that Brother Jones will find the Visitor a valuable help to his ministry in Garden City.

H. C. Patterson, a former pastor of the Winchester Church, Winchester, Ind., was the guest of Editor J. L. Smith over Sunday, Jan. 21, and preached two fine discourses to large and appreciative audiences. His old friends were rejoiced to again have the privilege of hearing him and were exceedingly well pleased with the sermons. Elder A. S. Morrison, of Bellfontaine, O., has been called to the church at this place.

The annual report of the Englewood Church, Indianapolis, shows a good year's work, with all departments in good working order. There were 106 additions, 50 baptisms, with a loss of 20. The present membership is 302. The pastor, A. L. Orcutt, assisted in two short meetings away from home, preaching in all 158 sermons with 145 additions, 80 baptisms. He began a meeting Jan. 21st at home with home forces.

G. F. Assister, of New Franklin, Mo., writes that he expects to sail for England in March to engage in special work there in the interest of our cause. In the meantime, he is on a lecture tour that will occupy two weeks, during which he will visit Chillicothe, St. Joseph, Des Moines and other cities. On his return he states that he can add one protracted meeting to his engagements. Letters addressed to him at New Franklin will be forward to him without delay.

Earle Wilfley writing us from Pittsburg, Pa., says that he is looking forward with the keenest pleasure to a lecture trip to begin on Tuesday of the present week. On this trip he will stop at his old field of labor, Wabash, Ind., and from there to Kansas City by February 4th, where he will visit his father and his old home church, the First. He will spend about two weeks in the state under the direction of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, but return in time to begin his new work in New Castle, Pa., on Feb. 18th.

The Pasadena News, Pasadena, Cal., for Dec. 29th contains an excellent report of the ministry of H. Elliott Ward in that city for five years. Brother Ward is now pastor of the East 8th St. Church, Los Angeles, Cal. While in Pasadena during his two and a quarter years ministry for the First Church there were over 200 additions, the church debt reduced one-half, a new mission established on the East Side and a chapel built for its use, besides many improvements on the First Church property. He then became pastor of the East Side Church and saw it comfortably housed in a beautiful church on its own lot and all free from debt. He was also the evangelistic secretary for Southern California for four years and has held many protracted meetings in other places in that time. The prayers and good wishes of the brethren in Pasadena will follow Brother Ward and his family to Los Angeles, where he is now at work with his accustomed zeal.

The Stanford church, recently destroyed by fire, will be rebuilt at once.

Bro. G. M. Goode, of Normal, is in a good meeting at Mackinaw.

The remodeled church at Farmer City was dedicated by Bro. J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, Jan. 7th; $400 of the total amount, $2,200, raised to cover the indebtedness, was given by Bro. T. G. Bondurant, of DeLand, the friend of every good cause.

The church at Cooksville was demolished by a wind storm in December. It is not likely that it will be rebuilt.

A new building at Colfax, where P. Baker ministers, is being talked of. The work there prospers.

Bro. W. O. Lappin has resigned at Saybrook.

David Lindsay has resigned at Shirley and accepted a call to Emden.

Dr. H. L. Willett is giving a week's lectures in Bloomington, on "The Beginnings of Christianity." The church gives the lectures to the public free. On the opening night, Sunday, the large edifice was crowded to the doors to hear the lecture on "The Preparation of the World for Christ." Everybody was filled with admiration for the man and instructed by his message. The address is said to be one of the best ever delivered in the city. Bro. Willett leaves the first of April for three months of lecture work at London, Liverpool, Oxford and other English cities, under the direction of a committee of English ministers and professors, of which Dr. Clifford, Hugh Price Hughes and Principal Fairbairn are members.

New York Letter.

The George Junior Republic at Freeville, N. Y., has established its claims as a wise reformatory agency for the vagrant boys brought under its influence. At a meeting held in its interests in New York a few days ago Mr. Osborne, of Auburn, N. Y., and Mr. George, of this city, made addresses setting forth the character of the minature republic, the work it has done and its great needs. Several years ago Mr. George, a philanthropic young man and a great lover of boys, conceived the idea of establishing a republic in which homeless or truant boys might be placed and taught all the lessons of industry and good citizenship. Through the generosity of a number of charitable people a farm was bought at Freeville and the experiment was tried. Many boys from the East Side, New York City, were placed in the republic for the summer. They were made to work, to earn their own way, and were taught to conduct business on business principles. A genuine republic was organized after the model of the United States Government, with its various departments and branches. Laws were enacted and enforced, and as a consequence marvelous changes came over the boys, even within a few weeks. The friends of the enterprise then determined to make the work permanent, and have done so. Boys are kept there now all the year and drilled and taught the principles of good citizenship. Seventy boys have gone out from this little community into the world, and but one has retrograded. Two of them are at Cornell, one enters Harvard next year and four are studying for the ministry, others are farmers, mill hands or in good positions in New York. Three distinct lessons are taught that balance and counteract their evils. They are: (1) The necessity and dignity of labor, and this strikes at the very root of pauperism; (2) the rights of ownership by being encouraged in every way to acquire property of their own. This arouses every instinct in them in defense of their own—and criminal propensities are lessened thereby, and (3) every function of government in the great republic is duplicated and the citizens born to respect law, see what it means to have power in government, realize the respectability of suffrage and so their whole political ideal is elevated. They learn that a vote is not to be sold, but a privilege to be defended. The George Junior Republic certainly is doing a splendid service. Why could not every large city have one or several similar institutions, in which they might place hopeless vagrant and vicious boys?

The Rev. Dr. G. W. F. Birch, who led the prosecution against Prof. Chas. A. Biggs and finally drove him out of the Presbyterian Church, at a recent meeting of the Presbytery of New York preferred charges against Prof. A. C. McGiffert, author of "A History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age." The charges and specifications fill a pamphlet of forty closely printed pages, which required three hours for the reading. Dr. Birch considers the action of the Presbytery on this matter on Dec. 18th to be inadequate, and prefers five formal charges for the judicial consideration of that body. In brief, they are as follows: (1) The denial of the inspiration of Holy Scriptures, with fourteen specifications; (2) Denial of the divine mediation of Christ; (3) denial of the Lord's Supper; (4) denial of the doctrine concerning the justification of the believer before God through Christ, and (5) a violation of his ordination vows. Several efforts were made to table the charges, but to no avail. It was thought, two weeks ago, that the McGiffert case would be left in the hands of the General Assembly, but now it will have to be acted upon in a judicial capacity by the New York Presbytery first, and will more than likely go to the Assembly also.

The New York Independent severely arraigns Dr. Birch, in a lengthy editorial, saying that the Presbyterian Church generally is tired and sick of theological controversy and wants to avoid it. It also shows that Dr. Birch's church, though in a growing section of New York, was six less in membership at the end of the year than at the beginning, and that though his Sunday-school has an enrollment of 571, only three persons were added to the church last year on confession of faith. The editor says: "We think it would have been well if Dr. Birch felt it necessary to bring a fellow-presbyter to trial for heresy, for him to have found some pastor to do it whose record of success in his church did not raise the question whether he was himself beyond criticism. The editor also figures that 2,470 people confirmed in the Episcopal Church last year came to the Presbyterian Church. The Independent intimates that doctrinal controversies in the Presbyterian Church is driving men out and keeping men outside away. Doubtless this is all true, but from the view of Presbyterianism and the Westminster Confession of Faith Dr. Birch is justified in his efforts to keep his church pure. Yet, there is no question, if that church is compelled to fight through another distressing heresy trial, that direful results will inevitably follow.

Many of the pastors of Bronx Borough have signed the following statement of Christian belief:

We believe in God the Father, Creator of all things.

We believe in Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, who for our salvation came down from heaven, was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, was crucified, rose from the dead and ascended to the Father. He shall come again to judge the living and the dead.

We believe in the Holy Ghost, or Holy Spirit, the inspirer of the Bible Scriptures, who is God present in the world, sanctifying his children and filling them with divine life.

This triune God we worship as Father, Son and Holy Spirit, only one God.

Our true life is to serve him, through faith in and after the example of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We believe that what are known as the Ordinances or Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper are of our Lord's ordering and are of permanent value in his church.

We believe that the Bible is inspired of God and contains all the truths necessary to salvation.

We believe in the Holy Catholic or Universal Church as described in the following statement: "It is that holy society of believers in Christ Jesus which he founded, of which he is the only Head and in which he dwells by his Spirit, so that, made up of many communions, organized in various modes and scattered throughout the world, it is yet one in him."

We believe in the resurrection of the dead and the life everlasting.

I have refused to sign the document, because a part of it I do not believe as stated, and also for the reason that creeds of man's making are divisive rather than unifying among Christian people. These good men give as their reason for putting forth this statement the hope that it will settle any uncertainty in the minds of people concerning their attitude toward the fundamentals of the Christian faith and their substantial oneness of faith; and also in the hope that it will secure the sympathy and co-operation of all who love Christ. Why not throw overboard all their creeds which now they hold and take the New Testament as their creed and guide of life? Such a position will call for sympathy and co-operation. And then if they will honestly interpret it to their people they will do the cause of Christian unity a real service. But the present course will put it back rather than advance it.

S. T. WILLIS.

Fainting Spells

Are peculiar to women. Men rarely faint. Many women are liable to what they term "fainting spells," and this liability is always most marked at the monthly period. This alone is sufficient to connect the "fainting spell" with a deranged or diseased condition of the womanly organs. The use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures irregularity, heals inflammation and ulceration, and stops the drains which weaken the body. It builds up the nervous system, increases the vital powers, and so removes the common causes of faintness in women. There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription;" neither does it contain opium, cocaine, nor any other narcotic.

"It gives me much pleasure," writes Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N.C., "to thank Dr. Pierce for the great good received from the use of his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I had suffered for three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pain in my back and stomach. I could not stand on my feet without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better, had better appetite and slept better. Now I have taken two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am happy to say I am entirely cured, and all done in two months' time, when all other medicines had failed to do any good'"

Colorado Letter.

The Central Christian Church in Denver, the church to which Bruce Brown came as pastor the first Lord's day in 1900, after two years of remarkably successful work with the West Side Church in Chicago, has for a number of years been the leading congregation of Disciples of Christ in Colorado.

A brief account of the origin of this church and the struggles through which it passed in coming to the place which it holds, may be of interest to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; and may furnish encouragement to some struggling band of Disciples.

It was organized with 33 members, May 25, 1873. As a preliminary step the following notice was given:

Be it known that we the subscribers, citizens of Denver, in the county of Arapahoe and territory of Colorado, and members of a religious society known as "The Church of Christ" do hereby declare it as our desire and purpose, that the said society shall have and maintain an organization and enjoy the secular power of bodies corporate in said city of Denver to be known as "The Church at Denver" and the following named persons shall be trustees thereof, to wit, Daniel C. Stover, Thomas Pomeroy, Jerry N. Hill and John G. Evans.

This paper was signed, sealed, acknowledged and properly recorded May 19, 1873. The church began as an incorporated body. This was a precaution against religious tramps and cranks. A wise precaution.

The following notice appeared in the daily papers of Denver:

"The Church at Denver' (Christian) on Sunday, May 25, at 10:30 o'clock A. M.; will meet in the Farmers' Club Hall, over the City National Bank, corner of 15th and Holiday Streets, for social worship and enrollment of membership. All persons interested are invited to attend. By arrangement of the trustees, May 23, 1873.

The following record was made of this meeting:

Farmers' Club Hall, May 25, 1873.—This fourth Lord's day of May, pursuant to notice, the following persons met and enrolled themselves as members of the body of Christ, and recognizing themselves as members of "The Church of Christ" to be known as "The Church at Denver," such enrollment being made by the said trustees, D. C. Stover acting as manager.

The following preachers of the Christian Church were, at that time, in Denver, viz., Dr. A. Loar, Albert G. Miles and Geo. G. Mullins. During the winter of 1871-'2 Mr. Mullins preached in the operahouse and organized a church; but it lived only a short time. A peripatetic preacher also came to town who announced, by posters conspicuously placed, that he was present and would preach "the old Jerusalem gospel in opposition to creeds," etc. Nothing permanent in the way of spiritual good came from this effort. A few brethren met in a schoolhouse in West Denver under the leadership of Thomas Pomeroy, an honest man and faithful, who came to Colorado from Canada before the organization of "The Church at Denver," May 25, 1873.

The leading spirits in the organization of this church now known as "The Central Christian Church," was Daniel C. Stover and Jerry N. Hill. The latter still living in Denver, says that "Stover having had more experience, largely dominated in the beginning and for three or four successive years."

D. C. Stover had two sons who were preachers, J. H. and Berty C. The former came to Denver from a pastorate in Carlisle, Kentucky, the latter from the College of the Bible at Lexington. Berty C. Stover, soon after coming to Colorado, held a meeting at Golden, in which forty or fifty persons were enlisted in the service of the Christ. A good, brick house of worship was erected as a result of this meeting—the first building for church services belonging to the Disciples of Christ in Colorado. The career of this young man was brief but brilliant. He gave promise of great usefulness.

A house of worship was secured in Denver 1874. It was built of hewed logs. The dedication services wereconducted February 18. The log building was enlarged 15 feet by an addition of brick. It was furnished with carpets, chairs, pulpit, baptistery, etc. J. H. Stover preached both morning and evening to crowded audiences. There was one confession of Christ—the first since the organization of the church, nine months before.

There was a debt of $700. The money to secure this place of worship was advanced by D. C. Stover. Hard times came and the church was unable to liquidate this debt. Other sums of money had been advanced, meantime, by the same party. These sums were counted in, with the accrued interest, and a note was given covering the aggregate for $1017.71. The membership of the church Jan. 1, 1875, was 82.

J. H. McCullough served the church as pastor from July 15, 1875, to May 13, 1877. During his pastorate the congregation moved to Trinity Church. The membership Jan. 1, 1877, was 125. E. T. Williams, now in China, became pastor May 13, 1877. He only remained until Nov. 25 of the same year. E. Y. Pinkerton, one of the sweetest-spirited men who ever lived, began his pastorate Dec. 2, 1877. He was in ill health. In May 1878 he gave up the work.

It was during the pastorates of brethren Williams and Pinkerton that Joseph Brinker, a successful teacher and an earnest Christian gentleman, removed from Newcastle, Henry County Kentucky, to Denver, where he established and conducted up to the time of his death "The Brinker Institute." J. Q. A. King about this time removed from Paducah, Ky., to Denver. He had held the office of Lieutenant-Governor of Kentucky and was popularly known as Governor King. To this period also belongs the advent of Judge T. E. Barnum, who came from Michigan, who still lives in Denver and occupies a prominent place in the church. The coming of the men here named, with their families, gave new life and strength to the struggling congregation.

But the little debt mentioned above almost wrecked the church. Partly as a result of dissatisfaction, occasioned by the debt, a second church was organized, of which W. H. Williams, afterwards a missionary to the West Indies under the direction and in the employ of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, became pastor.

What now to do was a serious problem. The matter was referred to the Acting Board of the American Christian Missionary Society at Cincinnati. A. I. Hobbs was a member of this board and was sent to Denver to save the church. Bro. Hobbs held a meeting of two or three weeks, preaching in Unity Church. Regular meetings were afterward held in "The Brinker Institute" building.

The visit of Brother Hobbs was in July 1880. M. D. Todd, of Chester, England, who had come to the United States on account of the ill health of his wife, became pastor in 1881. His wife died in a short time, after which he returned to England to resume his work in Chester.

With the coming of W. Bayard Craig "The Central Christian Church," as it was now called, took on new life and began to be a real power in Denver, and in the state of Colorado. During his pastorate, which continued seven or eight years, the present house of worship was erected, and the Highlands and Broadway Churches were organized. In all this work W. B. Craig was, humanly speaking, the inspiration and guidnig influence.

The following noble men succeeded Bro. Craig: B. J. Radford, W. F. Richardson, J. W. Ingram, B. O. Aylesworth and Bruce Brown.

As honorable and useful as has been the history of this church in the past, may its future be yet more honorable and useful, is the sincere prayer of the writer of this letter. B. B. TYLER.

Texas Letter.

Texas is proud of Galveston, her seaport, because she now holds second place as a wheat port. In 1897 she was seventh in the list. In 1898 she moved up one place, and during '99 she took the second place. Greater New York alone stands above her. Why, then, should we not be a little proud?

Deep water at Galveston is no longer a joke, but a glorious reality. It has cost $8,700,000, but money was never better spent. The tides and winds are increasing the depth every day, God thus showing again that he helps those who try to help themselves. The past year the depth was increased six inches. No steamer was detained for want of water. The deepest draught vessel of the year was the Lock Tay, drawing 25 feet, nine inches, and her keel did not touch the bottom. The average depth of the channel is nearing 28 feet.

That the world is appreciating this deep water you will know when I tell you that Galveston now has fourteen lines of European steamers, three lines to Cuba and two services to Japan and the Far East.

The railroad terminal and wharf facilities are being greatly improved. The warves now have a lineal frontage of five miles and can accommodate seventy-five vessels, and 1,500 loaded cars can be handled daily in the wharf yards. And there are thirty-five miles of terminal track.

Now if Congress will give us the Nicaraugua Canal, which is the merest justice in the South and Southwest, the center of population will move as it never did before, and this neglected portion of ou republic will take its rightful place in the line of development and influence.

Retribution has just overtaken Gov. Bob Taylor. Some years ago he slandered our state in a lecture. He said we had the most changeable climate under the sun, and he illustrated it by saying that once on a time he was crossing one of our great prairies in an ox wagon. The weather about noon was so hot that one of the oxen died of heat. The owner, with an eye to business, proceeded to skin the dead ox. But before he finished, the other froze to death.

This has been several years ago, and it began to look as if the Governor was to go free. But he is spending the winter in Texas. The climate elsewhere didn't suit him. A few days since, while hunting, he stirred up a huge wild boar and wounded him slightly, and then had to take to a tree to save his life. Moral: Beware how you slander Texas.

The Dallas News is one of the leading papers of the land. It easily ranks with such papers as the Republic and Globe-Democrat of your city. D. C. Jenkins, one of the most versatile writers of this age, has been a large factor in the powers of this paper. In 1873, when in his 48th year, his connection with the paper began. Now, in his 76th year, on account of his age, and the health of his wife, he severs that connection. His announcement of this step is one of the most beautiful and pathetic things I ever read, showing that despite the weight of 76 years, the old man has rare vitality yet. He did not cross the "dead-line" at 50 or 60, because he worked hard and kept abreast of the times. Is there not a lesson here for preachers?

"Aunt Sallie," as we lovingly called her, the wife of Charles Carlton, of Bonham, at the ripe old age of 84, has gone home to God. For many years they had lived and labored together, and a great work has been accomplished, and one of the weary workers is now at rest. The other, full of age, honors and usefulness, and loved by all, tarries at his tasks a little longer. May heaven bless him and his children in their deep sorrow, is the prayer of thousands of the saints.

There have been many changes among our preachers of late, some of which I mention: Dr. Buckner, of Kentucky, succeeds C. M. Barnes at Ennis; A. E. Ewell, of Wichita Falls, succeeds E. H. Kellar at Waxahachie; G. S. Kimberley changes from Seguin to Luling; Philip F. King goes from Hillsboro to Corsicana; J. T. McKissick, of Marfa, succeeds C. E. Freeman at Weatherford; C. E. Freeman goes from Weatherford to Cleburne; D. A. Leak changes from Houston to Timpson; J. M. Biard goes from Whitenright to Temple.

Dodging Divine Demands.

In discussing the subject of conscience, in one of his Boston Monday Lectures, Joseph Cook said that one word should be printed in great capital letters, the word O-U-G-H-T. It is a potent word. It carried with it a sense of obligation, of responsibility, of duty. We readily admit its right use in reference to others, yet as often resent it when applied to ourselves. We dislike to confront that stern old disciplinarian, "I ought." It is more pleasant to journey with the little company of three—"He ought," "She ought," and "They ought." We easily reeognize the obligations of others and commend or censure somewhat freely, but to have others measure us in the same way is not so pleasant, especially when conscious of duties neglected.

One who enters the employ of another finds that obligations rest upon him, and that he cannot honorably fail to meet them. The clerk that does as little as possible, or the mechanic that "kills time," is the first to be laid off when a dull time comes. The employer may not say it, but he mentally marks as a shirk the man who dodges duty, and willingly lets him go. The alert, willing employe becomes a fixture.

And employers claim the right to impose upon their employes certain moral demands, such as abstinence and respectable associations. A railway management forbade its employes frequenting saloons or gambling places, either when off or on duty. This was resented as an unwarranted interference with personal rights. Saloonkeepers boycotted that road, refusing to ship over it. Detectives were roughly used when discovered, for it was unpleasant for men who "strictly obeyed the new ruling" to be confronted with their own photographs, taken in unexpected places. A new cashier, noting the noon hour, prepared to go out to his lunch. The president said, "You will find your lunch in an adjoining room. My rule is," he explained, "for my employes to take lunch here. I have lost too much in the past through the muddled or reckless condition of my cashiers who have gone out to lunch."

Now are these seemingly arbitrary requirements reasonable? Would employes be justified in dodging such demands? Surely, the banker had a right to thus insist if he felt it was to his pecuniary interest, and few men would resent such a demand—and dinner! And what sane man questions the right of a railway to guard its interests? A flagman's error may involve the loss of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of life itself. An engineer's blurred vision, unsteady hand or confused brain may misread a signal or fail to give quick response to some emergency call, and human life—nay, your life or my life—may be jeopardized or sacrificed. What is one man's mistaken ideas of "personal liberty" in comparison with such enormous odds as represented in any flying train bearing its burden of humanity? He who dodges duty's demands for personal gratification needs to see the OUGHT OF DUTY!

Our civil government teaches a similar lesson. Citizenship carries with it duties, and to dodge them is dishonest. Taxes are levied, laws are enacted, the flag is to be defended—all presumably in the line of the highest good, and when this is true neglect is criminal.

But men do dodge civil demands, and what wonder that they dodge divine demands where duty seems less imperative and penalty less imminent? Seeming success here may prove actual failure. One day a little negro came dancing out of the post office in a Southern city shouting, "I did it! I beat 'em! I got my lettah into de post office widout a stamp!" And in some such childish way men are trying to "beat" God.

The government requires a stamp on the letter, but the boy kept his money and "beat" the department—and the dead letter office "beat" the beater! I think of this little incident when I see men standing face to face with known duties, God-enjoined, yet "dodging divine demands." Ignored to-day, to-morrow, this year, in seeming safety, but what of the flnal reckoning? "God is not mocked."

Cain tried to "dodge divine demands" when he substituted the fruits of the field for the divinely required victim upon the altar. He tried and failed. He dodged the demand for love that made him his "brother's keeper," and went forth a wanderer, stained with fratricidal blood.

Naaman at first chose pride and leprosy to the humiliation of a divine demand, but at last yielded and was blessed. Jonah tried to escape the demand laid upon him, but at last, through bitter experience learned the folly of dodging duty.

Pilate, bathing his hands, thought to wash away the ought of official duty and remand it to others—a folly as childlike as that of the dancing darkey who "beat" the post office. Puerile? Nay, fatal!

These duties are not of the past alone. They are perpetual. They confront us to-day. God forbid that we should ignore them. Let us rather be able to say with Paul, when reciting the Christ-enjoined duites which led him from Judaism to Christianity, "Whereupon, O King, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision!"

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The year opens auspiciously for the churches of Christ in this city. The four congregations report an aggregate of eighty additions since Oct. 1. 1899. F. D. Power's health is much better than for several seasons and his twenty-fifth year at the Vermont Avenue Church is likely to prove one of the best of this long and blessed pastorate. He reports large audiences and ten added the past three Sundays.

The prosperity of the H Street is proving embarrassing. By the help of the Church Extension Board they purchased a building in the southwest section of the city and converted it into a chapel. They thought their problem of a house of worship was solved. Now they find the building inadequate to the needs of the rapidly growing congregation. An enlargement of their building at an early date is contemplated. W. J. Wright, the pastor, found time last month to go to Cameron, W. Va., to assist Bro. Canby in a meeting, which resulted in more than forty additions. Whitney Avenue now has a membership of sixty-four and an attendance of over two hundred at Sunday-school. Since the organization of the church, Ira W. Kimmel reports an average increase of two members a week.

The Ninth Street Church has accomplished a good work since their new house of worship was dedicated eighteen months ago. There have been 200 additions and the debt on the church property decreased $6,000. The attendance at Sunday-school on Lord's Day was 375. In the past nine years we have had on the roll of the school 1,471 names and raised $4,856, of which $993 was for missions. 392 members of the school have been received by baptism into the church.

At our last preachers' meeting we discussed the advisability of attempting some missionary work in Virginia and W. Virginia and other benighted sections in this city. Alexandria, Va., offers an inviting field and Bro. Power was appointed to inaugurate the work. In Martinsburg, W. Va., a lot has been secured and a dozen or more Disciples, who meet weekly to break bread, are appealing to us for help. We shall lend them assistance as soon as possible.

Upon a recent visit to Baltimore I learned that the churches there are in an unusually prosperous condition. The influence of B. A. Abbott grows stronger as his pastorate at the Harlem Avenue Church is prolonged. M. H. H. Lee reported seven accessions on a recent Lord's Day at the Fulton Avenue Mission. Peter Ainslie is building up the Calhoun Street Church, running a mission Sunday-school in a neglected district and founding a home for working girls. Was at the First Church, Hagerstown. P. A. Cave received into fellowship last month Bro. Edmund Walton, a preacher from the "Christian Workers." He comes highly commended and will be put to work under the auspices of our Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Board. W. H. Book is now assisting P. A. Cave in a meeting at Hagerstown.

The Beanville Banner.

Beanville, Mo., jan. 22, 1900.

Yesturday afternune I happened to pass the edditorel offis ov the Beanville Banner, and thot I wood drop in and see how things wuz gettin on. The ferst ishoo ov the Banner haz not yet appeered, but I had understood that werk on it wuz progressin, and that befoar long the feeverish impashunce ov a waitin publick wood be allaid and soothed by the publikashun ov Vol 1 No 1 ov the new relidjus weakly.

I found bruther Watkins in his sanktum, sed sanktum consistin ov a tabel in wun corner ov the printin offis. He welkumed me corjelly, and gave me hiz chare, settin hizzelf on a corner ov the tabel. He sed the prospecks for the new jernel wuz flattrin in the extreem, and that az neer az he cood calculait, it wood only be about a yere until awl the uther papers ov the brutherhood, wich wus, without ecsepshun, dissemynaters ov hettrydocksy, wood be forsed to suspend publickashun on account ov not havin enny subskribers left. He sed his skeme ov distribootin medels barin hiz pickchoor wuz a grate sucksess. Sum papers, he sed, wuz givin buttons to ther patruns, but he intendid to beet that skeme with hiz medel, wich would maik the button skeme look like therty cents. The ferst duzzen he had orderd wuz awl gone, ecsept wun wich he saved for hizzelf and wich he showed me. Hardly a weak passed, he sed, tha he did not reseeve a letter askin for wun ov the medels. He wuz thinkin ov ordrin a secund duzzen.

THE BEANVILLE BANNER MEDAL.

After we had chattid a while about things in in genrel, bruther Watkins offerd to reed me hiz salootatory, wich he had rote for the ferst number ov the new paper. I consentid, and he slid off the tabel, assoomed a strikin attitood, and red as follers:

SALOOTATORY.

Yeeldin to the frantick appeels and ergent solissytashun ov menny prominent brethrun, I hav finelly consentid to taik edditorel charge ov the Beanville Banner, a weekly relidjus jernel, publisht to fill a long-felt want.

It iz with no misgivins that I enter upon this werk. If I shood say that I dowt my emminent fitniss for the grate responsibilitty ov editin a paper, I shood be staitin a untruth. Fer menny yeres I hav bin givin my spair time to the considerashun of things in genrel, and am now confident that I hav theroly mastered awl subjecks likely to rekwire treetment in a relidjus paper. Rite heer and now, befoar goin enny ferther, let me warn uther edditers not to prezoom to queschun ennything I may say. If they cannot endorse awl I say, it only shows that thay awt to go to skule for sum yeres, until they hav masterd theze matters—speshully hire krittysizzum.

Under my abel managemint, the Banner will be a agressiv jernel. It will hue to the line, let the chipps fall whare thay may. I shal show mity littel mersy to hettrydocksy, and my understandin ov hettrydocksy iz that it incloods everything sed or rote by uther nusepapers and riters, wich duz not endorse the opinyuns and sentiments ov the Banner.

While I propoze to be zellus and untirin in smellin out hereticks ov awl kinds and degrees and exposin 'em to the contemp and skorn ov the publick, I shall giv pertickler attenshun to slatherin yung men, and most pertickelrly thoze yung men who have bin to Yail or the Yoonyversty ov Chicawgo. Let awl sich trembel! Our eegel eye iz on 'em!

I propoze to give speshul attenshun to hire krittysizzum, which iz wun ov the subjecks I hav fully masterd. The edditoreis ov the Banner will be largely devotid to the skinnin ov hire kritticks, in wich conjeniel occupashun I shal nevver tire.

The Beanville Banner will be a saif paper. Its reeders can depend on it to be the saim yesturday, today and forevver. The edditer points with pride to the fackt that he still holds fast to the opinyuns and theories wich he reseeved when a boy, and haz not wunce, in the corse ov 40 yeres, had occashun to chainge hiz mind about ennything.

The Banner propozes to be regardid as the offishel orgin ov the brutherhood, az the cheefest guide, preteckter and nerisher ov our mishunerry sosieties, and az the awther and finisher ov every grate movement amung us, and tharefoar it will have nuthin to say agenst instrumental musick in the cherch. True, the edditer wuz wunce conspickuous in hiz opposishun to the orgin, and haz not changed his mind on the matter, but nowadays prackticalty the hole brutherhood yooses the orgin, and it wood be impollytick to oppose it, az well az useliss.

With a finel warnin to awl hire kritticks, awl teechers ov hettrydocksy, awl yung preechers, and pertickelrly thoze yung preechers who hav bin to Yail, we assend the edditorel trypod and assoom the dooties and plezzures ov edditership.

"Wat do you think ov it," sez bruther Watkins, when he finisht.

"Well," I sez, "it's rite to the pint," I sez.

"It iz," he sez. "I bleeve" he sez, "in cummin rite out and sayin what you think," he sez. "Nun ov this sweet-spirited jernelizm for me," he sez.

"Why are you so sot agenst yung men?" I sez.

"Well," he sez, "it's like this: The Banner wants to maik a reputashun for ferm, feerliss, unswervin loyelty to the truth," he sez, and nuthin maiks sich a impreshun on the deer publick, wich iz genrelly unsofistykatid, az chargin herecy on sumboddy and proseedin to abuse 'em," he sez. "Tharefore," he sez, "the Banner must jump on sumboddy. The only queschun is az to who shal be the vicktim. Yung men natcherally havvent got so menny frends az old men, and it iz safer to abuze them."

"And then agen," he went on, "thare iz this reezun for slatherin yung men, speshully thoze az go to Yail. Thay go Eest to skule," he sez, "and lern things wich most ov us old chaps don't know nuthin about. They cum back home and proseed to tell wat thay know," he sez. "We must eether answer 'em or abuze 'em," he sez, 'and az we cant anser 'em, it follers, az the nite the day, that we must abuze 'em," he sez. "I may add," he sez, that it iz a mity lucky thing for sum ov us edditers," he sez, "that menny people dont know the diffrunce betwene abuse and argymint," he sez.

I left bruther Watkins' offis knowin more than when I went thare. I am beginnin to understand the rayzong dater (as my boy Zeke sez) ov a sertin stile ov jernelizm. I hav heertofore accountid for it on the skore of ignerunce, but I am findin out that it iz dew to sumthing rather werse.

HEZEKIAH HOBSON.

Elder W. H. Stewart.

The subject of this sketch was born near Utica, N. Y., Dec. 19, 1816, of Friends or Quaker parents of the straitest sect and always attended their meetings with his father.

He was, as a boy, very deeply religious and devoted so that he says he cannot remember the time when he did not pray regularly and most sincerely.

As he grew older he read the Scriptures more carefully and attended different religious meetings until at last his mind began to change with regard to the divine ordinance of baptism; for up to this time he, like all other Quakers, believed that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was all that was needful and that this baptism was promised to all believers.

After careful study of New Testament conversions he concluded he had not met the requirements of the gocpel and was accordingly baptized in May, 1835, by a minister by the name of Carter, in Cayuga Co., Ohio.

He attended Marietta College in Southern Ohio for a time, but owing to financial inability never finished the course. Leaving college, he taught school for a time in Kentucky, then moving to Arkansas he saw the great need of proper religious training and began preaching the importance of returning to the apostolic faith and practice.

In 1837 he went from Arkansas o Kentucky to attend to some secular business for a friend, but having liberty to preach wherever opportunity offered he held successful meetings in Bowling Green, Hopkinsville, Burkville and throughout Warren County. From Kentucky he traveled through Tennessee and Southwestern Virginia.

During 1839 and 1840 Bro. Stewart's labors were confined to Johnson, Carter, Sulllvan and Washington Counties in Tennessee. While in Tennessee he was ably assisted by Bros. Isaac N. Jones, W. D. Carnes and Robert Randolph.

In 1841, on the 4th day of March, Bro. Stewart was married to Martha J. Smith, a daughter of Elder Anthony Smith, of Post Oak Spring, Tenn., and continued to preach the "one hope" until in 1845 he returned to Arkansas, and then for a period of six years he divided his labor between teaching school and preaching throughout Northwest Arkansas and Southwest Missouri while his good wife took care of the babies and managed the farm, which made a fairly comfortable living for them, enabling him to use all his spare time evangelizing.

During Bro. Stewart's stay in Arkansas he extended his work as far north as Springfield, Mo., and held several good meetings in Cassville in Barry County, Mo., and also in the Cherokee Nation. His especial effort was to establish a hearty coperation among the churches for the evangelization of the counties of the entire state. He tried to impress upon the hearts of the brethren the great truth that churches were planted here on earth in order that they might work for the Master and contribute to the extent of their ability in time, labor and means to the spread of the glorious gospel of the Son of God.

He taught them that the cause of evangelization was a cause in which both congregations and individual disciples should be coworkers with the Lord. Bro. Stewart had seen something of the results of co-operative effort before he went to Arkansas; the first meeting of the kind he ever attended was in Washington County, Tenn., when he was selected as their evangelist, and it was under the co-operation of churches that his work in Tennessee, above spoken of, was carried on.

From 1851 to the close of the Civil War Bro. Stewart's labors were in Louisiana, serving the church at Cheneyville as its pastor for eight years.

This church was composed mainly of members who had come out from other churches, and he had to encounter much opposition and prejudice as one might naturally suppose. Through it all he labored with much patience and diligence, always ready to cheer the broken-hearted and encourage and strengthen the weak. Among those who did much to lighten the burden were Bros. Jabez Tanner, Andrew Jackson and Alexander Ellett; the latter named was living at Chillicothe, Mo., when I last heard of him.

In 1852 he went to Big Cane, La., where he held several interesting meetings, at which many were added to the church. On one occasion when several persons were to be baptized, and the people had gathered at the water, a dark cloud arose. People became uneasy and tried to hurry him, but he calmly remarked, "We will have no trouble," and took his own time to baptize them all decently and in order. Pres. Robt. Graham, who was present, remarked, "That is just like him; he never gets in a hurry."

In 1869 Bro. Stewart visited Kentucky again, going through the country on horseback that he might have opportunity to preach on the way. From Kentucky he went to Utica, Miss., and being pleased with the country and field for work there he purchased a small residence, in which his family lived until he moved to Texas, where he now resides, with his son Thomas.

Bro. Stewart is not a learned man, except in the Scripture, nor was he an eloquent speaker according to the rules of oratory, but he was truly an earnest and faithful gospel preacher, instant in season, out of season, and was always ready to reprove, rebuke, exhort and entreat with all diligence and long-suffering.

He worked incessantly from house to house, and his fireside talks and wayside discourses did as much good, doubtless, as his pulpit sermons.

Bro. Stewart, together with Pres. Robt. Graham, established the cause of Christ in Northwest Arkansas, planting a church at Fayetteville, where our dear Bro. N. M. Ragland now ministers, and from where he is soon to go to Calcutta, India, to teach the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ.

Last July it was my pleasant privilege to hold a short meeting at Irby, Parker County, Texas, Bro. Stewart's present home, and although he is now in his 84th year, yet he delights to tell the old, old story to any and all to whom opportunity offers. He has not been able to do pulpit work since in March, 1894, his last sermon being delivered in the church where I am now a minister. He says he is "only waiting for the boatman" to come and take him home, where he may rejoin his loved compainion, who preceded him to the better land Lord's day, Jan. 19, 1890.

May the Lord deal gently with this good and faithful servant as he draws nearer and nearer the end of his pilgrimage, until at last there shall burst upon his enraptured vision that New Jerusalem toward which he has these many years been traveling.

The Benevolent Association of the Christian Church.

A few reasons why every member of the Christian Church should encourage and support it according to his ability:

1. Because the purpose of the association is to aid indigent, worthy members of of the church and their orphan children, regardless of state or tertorial lines. That this purpose is declared in sincerity is verified by the fact that it has already assisted children from twenty-two states and territories, and has placed them in Christian homes in seventeen states. Since, therefore, its doors are open to receive the worthy needy, regardless of geographical lines, it is but reasonable, as well as righteous, that all who are possible subjects of its beneficence should encourage and support it.

Should any one seek to excuse himself from its support because of the great distance from his home to the headquarters of the association in St. Louis, he is requested to draw upon his imagination until he believes himself, or child, or both, helpless and penniless, and say if his excuse for not aiding the association would in his judgment justify it in leaving him and his to suffer when it could help them.

Then he is also requested to remember that this excuse bears with equal force against preaching the gospel to all from whom he is geographically far removed, either in his own or foreign countries, and hence against our Home and Foreign Mission work, save that part of our Home Mission work that by chance is near our home.

This excuse lays the ax at the root of our mission as well as our benevolent work. Let no true Disciple of Christ be deceived by it.

There are a few persons who decline to aid the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church its effort to rescue helpless orphans from lives of pauperism, criminality and shame, because the same kind of work is being done by other churches in their own state and neighborhood.

This excuse is much more far-reaching than its makers seem to realize. If because other churches have Orphan and Old People's Homes in states where we have none we should abandon the field to them, and instead of supporting our own support theirs, for the same reason we should decline to plant churches in localities where others have established churches before us! But such a thing is never thought of in planting churches. Then in the name of all that is reasonable and just why should we abandon the orphan children of our own dead kindred in Christ, because the headquarters of the rescue work for said children happens to be in a different state than the one in which we reside? Away with such an idea.

2. All should aid the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church because of the wisdom and economy of concentration of effort. The universally admitted truth that "everybody's business is nobody's business," sufficiently accounts for the fact that where there is no concentration or systematized plan of doing things, very little, if anything is done. The mission and benevolent work of the Christian Church bofore and since the employment of systematic, co-sperative effort is certainly a very forcible illustration of the truth. Then we did comparatively nothing; since, we have done and are doing glorious things in both directions.

Then why not utilize the same systematic concentration and co-operative effort in providing for helpless orphans and old people? To do so is to accomplish much more work with much less outlay of time, energy and money. On this account, therefore, every member of the Christian Church, who can, should co-operate with the present systematized effort for the accomplishment of these divine ends.

3. Because "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" (Jas. 1: 27). Since pure religion and undefiled knows no location, as such, no more should the benefactions of God's people.

4. Because there is a special obligation to help the worthy needy of our own faith. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men, especsally unto them who are of the household of faith" (Gal. 6:10). "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5:8). In the light of these Scriptures I am unable to see how any member of the Christian Church, who is able to do so, can justify himself for not aiding the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, whose work is especially to aid the worthy needy of the "household of faith."

5. Because Jesus will account what we do to help the worthy needy the same as if we had done it unto him. "I was hungry and ye gave me meat, I was a stranger and ye took me in, I was naked and ye clothed me." And when asked what he meant by such language he replied: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:31-40).

6. Because Jesus will account our neglect of the worthy needy as neglect of himself. "I was hungry and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not." When enquired of as to his meaning his explanation was: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these ye did it not to me" (Matt. 25.41-46).

7. Because it would be doing as we would have others do unto us or ours. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets" (Matt. 7:12).

8. Because the sweet-spirited John says: "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3:17.) This is John's own way of saying the love of God does not dwell in such a a person.

9. Because the little we can do will accomplish much more through this systematized method of benevolence than without it. And as all good people desire to do the largest amount of good possible, they should do this kind of work through the organized channels for such work in their own church.

Any one desiring to aid in the work of providing homes for homeless Christian old people or orphan children can send their offering to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., St. Louis, Mo., or to the undersigned, to the same address. But always make your drafts or money orders payable to the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church.

Donations of money, clothing, or provisions are respectfully solicited.

AMERICA. HEATHEN FIELDS.

[The first shows the number of heathens in America. The second shows the number of Christians in heathen lands.]

The World's Need of the Gospel.

How wide and deep is the world's ignorance and woe! Of the 1,620,000,000 of the earth's population only 500,000,000 are even nominal Christians, and only 200,000,000 are Protestant. The lowest forms of heathenism still exist. In Africa, for instance, there are said to be yet 30,000,000 cannibals. This land has a population of more than 160,000,000, and there are only about 2,000 missionaries. The great majority are utterly barbarous and savage. Their evil case has been greatly aggravated by centuries of the slave traffic and the rum traffic. It is estimated that not less than 30,000,000 blacks, from first to last, have been captured and sold, with payments largely made in alcohol, thus causing double demoralization.

Think of India. With a population of nearly 300,000,000 only about 600,000 are Protestant Christians. In the United States it is said that we have one Christian worker for every fifty of the population, while in India there is only one Christian worker for 60,000 of the population. Of the 25,000,000 of widows 77,000 are under ten years of age. And in all India there are only about 2,000 missionaries, although the population is nearly double that of Africa.

In India one province has a population of 400,000, another of 700,000, another of 380,000, and each of these provinces has but one missionary. Near Hoshangabad there are 3,000,000 of people untouched. In Western India, in one district, there are 1,191 towns and villages. In 1,169 of these there is no resident Christian, native or foreign. These are only illustrations of the great need. In the northwestern provinces, Ballia, with a population of about 1,000,000, there is no missionary at all.

In Northern China, with a population of 29,000,000, all idolatrous, there is only one missionary to every million. China alone gives $300,000,000 annually for idolatry. It is affirmed by those who have been long in China that at least 200,000 babies are brutally killed in various ways every year in that empire. This is only one instance to show the deep need of the people. The empire contains a population of 400,000,000, or one-fourth of the earth's population. This is the most prodigious mass of human beings ever found living together in a contigious territory under one government. These hosts are homogeneous, making use of the same written language, and all displaying the same types of civilization. Certainly Christendom has no more tremendous task on hand than that of turning these numerous hordes from Confucius to Christ. Think how small the missionary force in this vast population, numbering only about 2,400.

A missionary in China who labored there for many years said that he had never been out of sight of a living Chinaman or a dead Chinaman's grave. He walked 120 miles in one week, and was never out of sight of a Chinese village, and in the whole 120 miles there was not a Christian to be seen. In some provinces in China you will pass great walled cities without seeing a missionary of the cross. In China the native doctors are barbarous and ignorant, and there is only one Christian doctor for every 2,000,000. The Chinese take out teeth with a hammer and a nail.

Japan has a population of more than 42,000,000 and yet there are only 702 missionaries. It would take volumes to describe the needs of this Island Empire.

For the world's redemption Protestants are giving annually only about $15,000,000 to sustain a missionary force of over 12,000. It appears plainly, then, that the redemption of the race is yet very far from complete, has scarcely passed beyond the initiatory stage. While an excellent beginning has been made, there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed. The church of the twentieth century has every reason to be full of courage and hope and every expectation of final success. It must be remembered, however, that a limitless demand is to be made upon us for the utmost devotion of consecrated benevolence, and a most earnest and importunate prayer that the world may be saved.

Let these facts remain with us as we prepare for the March Offering.

Women's Work for Women.

The efficient way to break down the petty jealousies and intolerances of one class of women for another is to set them all so energetically to work accomplishing something of so evident and immediate benefit to themselves and others that they will positively forget the foibles and vanities of ordinary life, withdraw their minds from little things and employ them with big things.

In all lines of women's work the need for better equipment is felt. "What we want is more competent help" is the cry of employers all over the land. If there are but few men to be found ready to "carry a messsage to Garcia," what shall we say of the women who are found wanting when the demands of the business world are to be met? For, however unprepared a woman may be, however vague and undefined her ideas of what may be required of her, she may be called upon to face the fact that she must go out into the world and toil if she would live. The old traditions regarding woman's incapacity and dependence still have their hold upon her, handicapping her at the very entrance upon those duties which for her brother tend to awaken pride, ambition, sense and energy. Who is to blame if she takes up her work in a listless, half-hearted way, and to teach her that honest toil is none the less dignified because performed by a woman? How is she to learn her true position in the business world and become able to creditably fill that position?

If she be a Christian girl, from a Christian home, where the atmosphere of that home is uplifting and is borne with her into her work, she has already learned that to be truly a "womanly woman" is as much her duty in business as elsewhere; that a woman's tact and intuition, all the finer instincts that belong to her, are needed and valued, and that her new sphere has but widened the circle of her influence. It is for those who have not thus been taught, or who, having ideals, have missed the practical training necessary to fit them for their duties, that women's work for women is most needed.

Why cannot this work be done by the down-town church of to-day as well as by clubs or associations? Why not a noon-rest hour in the parlors of our city churches? Why can we not bring together young women who have had the advantages of wealth and education and those who are living self-denying, hard-working lives? The benefits would be mutual. To the former it would give a heart-culture that would broaden her life, quicken her sympathies and open up an avenue for the development of faculties and powers that might otherwise fall into disuse and eventually be lost. She would find young women eager to grasp the best that might be offered that promised to better fit them to meet the demands made upon them in whatever line of work they might be engaged. She would find many who, feeling keenly their inefficiency, know not how to advance unaided.

To answer this hunger for knowledge, for the refinement that comes from the cultivation of women's highest and most delicate instincts, and withal the heart-hunger for genuine sympathy and love is the great work that you, Christian women, from out your homes may undertake. If you have had the benefit of the culture and refinement that wealth and leisure may have brought to your consecrated womanhood, large opportunities are before you and large responsibilities are yours. To fulfill this obligation will keep you, and it will keep them, from many frivolous things, and bind together a "glorious sisterhood," a sisterhood that will lift all who proudly join its ranks into an atmosphere of high accomplishment from whence they can look back upon their journey and review the many lives they have made happier and better.

What joy more exquisite! What reward more complete!

Notes and News.

West Plains, Mo., is under quarantine regulations, owing to the presence of smallpox.

The church at Fairfield, Ia., have just completed their new church building at a cost of $5,000 and dedicated it free from debt. B. L. GOSICK.
Fairfield, Ia.

The bay and contiguous coast counties, Cal., have had a "jubilee" convention in San Jose. They caught it at Cincinnati last fall and later from reading.

The new church house in Anita, Ia., was dedicated Jan. 21, by Chancellor Craig. F. F. Walters, the pastor, is credited with having made the church the most active one in that city. To his efforts within nine months a debt of $1,980 has been paid.

The annual report of the church in South Bend, Ind., shows $2,851.40 raised last year, of which $600.55 was for missions. All debts paid and money in the treasury, Jan. 1, 1900. There were 53 added during the year. A good protracted meeting was held in December with 13 additions. Bro. Rice, of Ft. Wayne, did the preaching. The pastor, G. B. Van Arsdall, has resigned and is succeeded by Victor W. Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky.

The annual report of the Central Church, Columbus, Ohio, of which R. W. Abberly is minister, showed $2,200 raised during the year; $350 for missions and benevolence; number of accessions, 68 at home and 42 to outside congregations. All departments of work thriving. A very successful lecture course is being managed this year and the Church Review published in the interest of the Disciples of the city. Bro. Abberley is just beginning his third year with this congregation.

The church house in Manville, Ind., has been repaired at a cost of $1,000 and rededicated. T. J. Legg, state evangelist, pronounces it the most beautiful village chapel in Indiana. The dedication was unique. No money was called for, and minister, of nearly all denominations participated. The sermon was delivered by Rev. J. H. Barnard. D.D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Madison, Ind. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Bro. W. T. McGowan, of North Vernon, and the dedication ceremony was pronounced by the writer. Congratulatory addresses were delivered by Rev. Geo. Cochran, D.D., pastor of Trinity M. E. Church, Madison, Rev. R. M. Stephenson, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Madison, and several others. One Methodist minister, speaking of the twentieth century, said: "In the twentieth century we will have no Methodists, Presbyterians or Baptists, but we will all be simply Christians." The writer, who was presiding, said: "That is all right, Bro. F., if you will just stick to it," and Bro. McGowan exclaimed, "Amen!" We had an all-day service, and the occasion passed off without a single discord. J. W. LANHAM.

Do You Know Any One In Mexico?

The C. W. B. M. is sending out five workers to Monterey this month. It is thought best that we should try to interest the Christians who have gone from the United States to Mexico in the evangelization of that country. They can help us in many ways, especially by distributing literature, advising us in various ways concerning the opening of new stations in their localities, contributing to and encouraging the work at Monterry.

Besides this it will be worth a great deal to them to know that the Christian Church is actively at work in Mexico.

Will any one who has friends or acquaintances in Mexico, Central or South America, please send the names and addresses of such to me?

BERTHA C. MASON.

Kinmundy, Ill.

Last June I held a meeting in the above-named place, being assisted by G. Halleck Rowe, of Salem, Ill. We have never had a church in the place, and our preachers in the county decided to open the work there and have the gospel preached to that people. Myself and Bro. Rowe were selected to hold the meeting. We secured the use of the M. E. Church, South, in which to hold the services. It was thought that we could not get a hearing there on account of the great prejudice, or should we get a hearing and preach the old-fashioned gospel that the people would not rally to the work, and that we could not hold the church; in other words we would be turned out. The meetings began with a small attendance, the churches of the town not paying any attention to us. We could see at once the program, which was to keep the people from our meetings.

We decided to preach the old Jerusalem gospel just as we thought the Lord would have us preach it; just as Peter, Paul, James and John preached it at the beginning. And in preaching such a gospel we decided to say nothing about any denomination in the world to-day; to preach just as if there was only one church in the world, the Church of Christ. There was, therefore, no abuse of other churches, no challenging for debate, but a plain presentation of the gospel of Christ. Gradually the house filled up, and those who came gave us the most profound attention. Many said they had never heard anything like that before, and soon sinners commenced confessing their faith in the Savior.

We did our baptizing in a reservior. Twice we baptized at night. The crowds were estimated to be as large as 800 people, and though at night the order was almost perfect. One night we had beautiful moonlight; the other a large bonfire and torch-lamps gave the light. The people of no church affiliation fell in with the work and helped much in making the meeting a success.

We organized with 46 members. A Sunday-school was organized, also the ladies organized an aid society and commenced work at once. The brethren found a good lot in a fine location and purchased it, and commenced raising money to build a house of worship.

Bro. C. H. Berry, one of our evangelists in the state work, was called to hold a meeting in the fall, and he, following in the same line of work in preaching the old gospel, added 17 more to the church. He has located with the church, being on the ground at this time, and will, no doubt, lead the young church on to greater success. He is a good preacher and a good man, and has a very large number of substantial friends in Kinmundy. J. H. SMART.

Omaha Notes.

I would like to have a portion of your valuable space to tell the brotherhood something of our work in this city. Omaha is numbered among the large cities of the Union. Our population is about 150,000. By reason of its situation it is known as the "Gate City." It is the doorway to the great West stretching beyond us. Its importance as a center is seen in the fact that five of the great transcontinental railroad lines enter it. I cannot take the space to tell of its commercial and manufacturing interests. It is a strong competitor with Kansas City, and the Trans-Mississippi Exposition which has just closed, after being operated for two years, is a monument to its business men.

I wish to speak more especially of the work of the Disciples in this city. We are comparatively a feeble folk here. We have but two churches, and they are not large ones. Our entire membership within the city will, perhaps, not exceed 700. The writer will not attempt to account for our weakness. Some of the strongest men in the brotherhood have labored here. The First Church counts among its pastors, J. W. Ingram, B. B. Tyler, T. E. Cramblet, J. M. Vawter and others equally well known. The First Church is now without a pastor. This leaves the writer as the only preacher to represent the Disciples among the thousands of Omaha. Bro. Howard Cramblet is pastor at South Omaha, but this is a distinct city and has a population of 20,000.

At Grant Street we have a membership of about 235. This church is well located. We are within reach of 10,000 people and there is no reason why we should not build up here a strong congregation. Our building was erected by the help of the Board of Church Extension seven years ago. The brethren, I am sorry to say, have made but little effort to raise this indebtedness, and the principal stands against us. We shall begin at once to pay off this obligation.

On the 10th of this month there is to be a meeting in the First Church, the purpose of which is to inaugurate a movement for the employment of a city evangelist. This is one of the first needs of Omaha.

If the reader knows of brethren in the city who have not united with either of the churches, I will take it as a favor if you will notify me of their presence here.

If you have friends whom you would like to have me visit, write me about them. Are you going to move to Omaha? Write me and I will help you locate near the church. Hundreds of people have been lost to us because they moved into districts where we have no church. They neglect the church and if one of the pastors chanced to find them they give as an excuse for not uniting with the church that they are too far away. It matters not what kind of a house you want you can find it within easy reach of one or the other of our churches, and I will take pleasure in assisting you if you will let me. The outlook at Grant Street is encouraging. Thirteen have been added since I came. Many more expected soon.

COLORADO.

Denver.—There have been 15 additions to the Central Church the last three Lord's days. The members are enthusiastic and hopeful.

Colorado City, Jan. 23.—I began a meeting at Burlington, Col., Dec. 31, and closed last Lord's day eve. In the meantime, I went to Colorado Springs on Sunday the 14th, as supply for Bro. B. B. Tyler. I found 15 or 20 scattered Disciples at Burlington and induced them to meet once and perhaps twice per month for worship under the leadership of Bro. C. A. Yersin. There were six others added; two reclaimed and four by confession and baptism. The attendance and interest was excellent, many coming from 10 to 20 miles to hear the gospel; some who had not been inside a church for years. We were pleasantly entertained and greatly enjoyed the privilege of feeding their hungry souls on the bread of life. More anon.—J. P. LUCAS.

OHIO.

Warren, Jan. 21.—We have just closed the second week of our meeting at this place. Thirty-one have been added to date; 29 by baptism. J. M. Van Horn is the pastor. O. L. Cook, former state secretary of state missions in Kansas, is doing the preaching. The writer has charge of the music. We continue with excellent interest and crowded house.—ERNEST W. KERR, evangelist.

Andover, Jan. 25.—E. W. Allen, of Chicago, held us a meeting of 40 days resulting in 26 confessions and 19 baptisms and the raising of $1,000 for a house of worship. Bro. Allen presented the truth in a manly way that won the affections of all and left an impression for lasting good. I held a meeting in Hartsgrove in September with nine baptisms.—F. A. WIGHT.

Kent, Jan. 23.—I have just closed a delightful meeting with the church at Randolph—the third one with the church—the first one 29 years ago. W. G. Crane is pastor and regular preacher. There were five baptisms.—F. M. GREEN.

NEBRASKA.

Arapahoe, Jan. 24.—Our meeting here closed yesterday with 10 baptisms and a pastor located. The meeting paid all expenses and left $43 in the church treasury. My six weeks in Nebraska has resulted in 31 additions, the location of a pastor, all expenses paid and $106.30 left in the church treasuries. I find that if a man will go and do the work the churches will pay him for it. When this reaches you I will be in a meeting with Geo. C. Waggoner at Green's Fork, Ind. After this meeting I will be at liberty to help eslewhere. If you want my assistance I will come and hold the meeting and raise the money to pay expenses. Poor churches need not fear to write as my meetings always pay expenses. Address me at Muncie, Ind.—A. MARTIN.

Waterloo, Jan. 22.—We are in a very interesting meeting at Waterloo with home forces. Meeting is three weeks old and a grand interest and attendance. Accessions to date, nine; one by letter, two reclaimed and six baptized on last Saturday night, the 20th inst. Packed house last night. Meeting still continues with increasing interest. A full report later.—A. O. SWARTWOOD.

A unanimous call has again been extended to continue, which has been accepted. The different departments of the work are much strengthened and the prayer-meeting notably in a healthy condition. This last year a total of 200 has been added to those being saved. Abundant blessings have been ours from our God and we praise him with all our heart.—A. E. ZEIGLER.

Centralia.—Have had 19 additions in my meeting, six yesterday. We have had the worst weather for a meeting I think I have ever seen. It has been mud and rain all the time with the exception of four days.—J. H. SMART.

Cerro Gordo, Jan. 23.—Just returned from Ashland, where I preached seven discourses. Five were baptized. There are good consecrated people in that congregation, but they need money to clear their building of debt. I am still open for work among the churches or as pastor.—H. B. EASTERLING.

Coatsburg, Jan. 20.—We recently closed a meeting at the church in Coatsburg. The weather was unfavorable for a meeting, but we had an excellent meeting. It did not result in many additions, but that great good was done is felt by all. Bro. Van Dervoort, of Clayton, did the preaching. He has held several fine meetings that have resulted in many accessions lately. That much will be reaped from the seed sown during the meeting is evident. —GEORGE F. CHANDLER, pastor.

Mulkeytown.—I closed a three weeks' meeting with the church in Herrin, Jan. 21, with 31 added. They have a bright future before them, if they will be prudent and locate a good man with them for all time. I am ready for meetings or to engage as a pastor. Can give reference.—HATTRESS H. SHICK.

I have just closed a meeting at Brumley with six accessions by baptism, three by relation and one restored. There is not a more noble brotherhood in the state than the Church of Christ at Brumley. Eld. J. C. Thompson, their efficient pastor, has ministered for them eight years. He is a splendid singer, an excellent preacher and a devoted Christian. His labors have been crowned with success. He is the brother whose "praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches." Hon. J. M. Hawkins, J. L. Comer and H. C. Jackson deserve to be mentioned as pillars in the church, whose liberality and devotion knows no bounds. Their lives are a blessing to the community, an inspiration te the brotherhood and a light to the world.—S. O. BURKS.

IOWA.

Charles City.—Please report one confession at regular services Lord's day, Jan. 21. The general condition of the church is much stronger and more healthy than a year ago.—F. L. DAVIS.

Arlington, Jan. 26.—We began a meeting here Nov. 26, with D. D. Boyle, evangelist. Closed Jan. 25; 74 confessed Christ, 62 demanded baptism, 12 came by letter, statement or were restored. Many of the members were strengthened; all were edified. Without stealing the hearts of the people he has endeared himself to all. The pastor is strengthened, not embarrassed by the influence of the evangelist. The large audiences which attended throughout the meetings were pleased, instructed, convinced, convicted, enthused and many of them saved. He has no new story. He preaches strong both in condemnation of sin and in the presentation of the gospel. Story telling and sensationalism are not his fort. He is not even especially strong in exhortation. His rapid delivery and his plain presentation of the truth bring large numbers of people to the foot of the cross. He will return in October for another series of meetings.—W. M. HOLLETT, pastor.

Pioneer, Jan. 22.—Have been in a meeting here for two weeks in a store building, seated with planks with backs on them and comfortable. But two Disciples were known to be here when we began, but have found a few others, I think four. We have now 15 members in all and yesterday effected the organization of a church of Christ, properly officered, and still continue the meeting. We go from here to Marion, Kan., for a meeting with Bro. I T. LeBaron, pastor.—MILO G. CUMMINGS AND PEARL WILEY, evangelists.

Wapello, Jan. 22.—Our union meetings closed last Saturday evening. Three persons were persuaded to live a better life. Yesterday two of them came forward and made confession. They will be baptized Wednesday evening. Last night one who had been sprinkled years ago came and demanded baptism. Our meetings were the first ever held in union by the pastors here. Much good has been accomplished. The Presbyterian preached eight times, M. E. seven and I six. Yours for union.—J. H. FULLER.

Whitten, Jan. 25.—Our meeting at Tama, closed with 46 additions. We began here Sunday, Jan. 21. The house was full and there was one confession at the first service.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT, evangelist.

Arlington, Jan. 22.—Seventy to date. Great interest; will close next Thursday evening. Correspondents will address me at this place for awhile, or 1048 Spruce street, Topeka Kan.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist, W. M. HOLLETT, pastor.

Davenport, Jan. 22.—Our meeting with Bro. W. M. Forrest, of Ann Arbor, as preacher, is growing in power; 22 have been added; 19 by baptism. Prospects are good now for a number more. We continue over next Sunday. The Sunday audiences were splendid, especially at the evening service.—C. C. DAVIS.

Bagley, Jan. 16.—A meeting has just closed here with 63 additions, conducted by J. S. Coffin. Bro. Gray is in a meeting at Eldora this week. —S. C. SLAYTON.

KANSAS.

Topeka, Jan. 26.—We will continue over Sunday. Ten additions to date. I will sing for S. F. Rogers at Illiopolis, Ill., in February.—V. E. RIDENOUR.

How My Boy Went Down.

It was not on the field of battle,
  It was not with a ship at sea,
But a fate far worse than either
  That stole him away from me.
'Twas the death in the tempting dram
  That the reason and senses drown;
He drank the alluring poison,
  And thus my boy went down.

Down from the heights of manhood
  To the depths of disgrace and sin;
Down to a worthless being,
  From the hope of what might have been.
For the brand of a beast besotted
  He bartered his manhood's crown;
Through the gate of a sinful pleasure
  My poor, weak boy went down.

'Tis only the same old story
  That mothers so often tell,
With accents of infinite sadness,
  Like the tones of a funeral bell;
But I never thought, once, when I heard it
  I should learn its meaning myself;
I thought he'd be true to his mother,
  I thought he'd be true to himself.

But, alas! for my hopes, all delusion!
  Alas! for his youthful pride!
Alas! who are safe when danger
  Is open on every side?
Oh, can nothing destroy this great evil?
  No bar in its pathway be thrown,
To save from the terrible maelstrom
  The thousands of boys going down?

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XI.

The usual devotional service was held the Sunday morning following the last recorded incidents. In the afternoon a special meeting was held and the subject of the last conference was resumed. The views advanced by Professor Fergus was freely discussed, and were generally regarded as supported by the Scriptures, and as simplifying the way of salvation. After this preliminary discussion I was called on to introduce the subject of conversion.

I began by saying: "My views are crude and ill-digested, but as I hope for help from others, I am willing to help others, however feebly.

"I understand conversion to be, not the work of man, but of God.

"The soul must put itself in a state of receptivity, and the Holy Spirit will accomplish the work. For proof of this, see Acts 3:19: 'Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out.'

"Now it is universally admitted that only God forgives sins. Man is passive; hence the passive voice; 'may be blotted out.' But 'be converted' is also passive. Man, therefore, cannot be the agent, but must be the recipient of the divine power. He is to be converted, and is as powerless in the matter as he is to create a world. I therefore conclude we are to await God's time, and if he so wills, we shall be converted and made to believe."* So saying, I sat down; whereupon Mr. Mudge arose. He was a loud and vociferous speaker, about fifty years of age, and as I learned, had been when in the states a preacher, or "exhauster;" a sort of "free lance" or clerical tramp, without a local habitation and going on a self-appointed evangelical mission wherever the good living of the brethren allured; asking for the use of the meeting house, and if by liberal and boastful advertising of himself as the "cyclone orator" he was able to secure a hearing, continuing the meeting from day to day, and gathering a plentiful harvest from the collections and the good living of the brethren, until, patience and poultry exhausted, he departed for pastures new.

Far be it from me to cast a reflection on the itinerant ministry. A more devout, self-sacrificing class does not exist. But it is time the churches should take action to relieve themselves from self-appointed clerical tramps, responsible to nobody, some of them the veriest impostors, others no doubt worthy, but without authority, without credentials, going out in such a way as to cast suspicion upon themselves and their work.

To this class we must relegate the Rev. Mudge. We knew little of him, as he made his habitation with the birds according to the rule, no doubt, of "birds of feather," etc.

Hitherto he had, if present at our meetings, been but a silent spectator. But now arising, he with loud voice and much gesticulation gave utterance to the following: "Brethren an' friends: "I've been a listn'in' a good 'eal, but I hain't said nothin'. But Solyman says, 'There's a time to speak', an' I think it's now. The last person that's spoke is sound, but I've seen the way you're a drift-in,' an' I've waited for you to fetch up, but you won't fetch up. You're a gittin' away from the old landmarks, and like the swine in the Scripter you'll head up in the sea. Dr. Fergus is a leadin,' an' the Devil's a drivin' the proceshun. He hain't no use for the Old Testament, nor for the New, only jist as it suits him. But I tell you, you've got to be powerfully converted, or there aint no chance for you. I give you fair warnin,' an' you'd better fetch up, or you'll git where you won't have to buy no winter firewood."

So saying, he glared upon the audience and sat down. "Sint Pathric!" said Pat. "If he'd a sat down before he got up he'd a done well."

Prof. Fergus arising said: "Bro. Mudge is right in insisting upon our keeping close to the Bible, and to relieve him of needless alarm I will say that if he had been present at one of our former meetings he would have known that is just what we solemnly agreed to do. As our young friend Burton has been giving much attention to the study of the Scriptures, I am sure he will be able to help us. Let us hear from him."

Whereupon Mr. Burton said: "The views of Miss Winston and partially those of Mr. Mudge were formerly mine.

"I read Peter's command: 'Repent and be converted,' and concluded that we were passive in the matter, as the phrase 'be converted' implies.

"Yet it always bothered me. Why should the apostle tell his hearers to do what they did not have to do and could not do, was the difficulty, for no man ought to do or can do that in which he is entirely passive.

"They were commanded to repent. That was all right. They could do it. They were commanded to be converted. But that must be done to them.

"I went for light to Dr. Barnes, the able Presbyterian commentator. He says: 'This expression 'be converted' conveys an idea not at all to be found in the original. It conveys the idea of passivity—be converted, as if they were to yield to some foreign influence which they were now resisting. The word properly means to turn.'

"Surprised and delighted at the clearness and simplicity of his views, I went to the Greek New Testament for confirmation.

"I found that nowhere in the Scriptures was a man told to 'be converted,' but that the command was everywhere in the active voice. The blunder was made by the translators of our English Bible. This error is corrected in the Revised Version.

"What was the something we were to do instead of 'be converted?' I found the word in Greek to be epistrepho, and that it occurs

*"The exercise of faith ought to be the easiest thing in the world. As a matter of fact, it is the hardest thing in the world to do. It is so hard as to be quite impossible for any one not possessed of a new nature."—Rev. C. C. Gordon, D. D., Earnest Worker, Feb., 1899.

thirty-nine times in the New Testament, and that it never once is found in the passive voice in the New Testament. Even in Rev. 1:12, 'and being turned' should read, 'and having turned.' How would it do, in the same verse, to make the words, 'I turned to see the voice' read, 'I was converted to see the voice?' But that would be no greater blunder than when 'repent and turn' is made to read 'repent and be converted.'

"The trouble with many regarding this subject is that they have confounded conversion or turning with regeneration.

In the latter man is passive. It is the work of God. It is a mystery. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.' In nature inorganic matter is 'born from above' by organic life reaching down and raising it to the higher vegetable kingdom. So divine life reaches down to our lower plane and we are born again to a higher kingdom, but we can't explain it. Why speculate about it? God will do his work in his own way and do it rightly, whether we understand it or not.

"We must do our work; that is, we must repent and turn to the Lord, and then we may with supreme confidence leave the results with him."

At the conclusion of Mr. Burton's remarks, many expressed pleasure at the simplicity and clearness of the way of salvation as set forth, saying that the subject had always been a difficult and mysterious one to them; but now they saw their way clearly.

The Rev. Mudge, however, was not one of these. He said: "My Bible tells me we must 'be converted,' and you may stick a pin thar. What's the use of goin' to the Greek? The apostles hadn't no schoolin.' Peter was a fisherman; and Paul was a country lad brought up at the foot of Gamel Hill, without edication, and I'll take their say-so a thousand times quicker than that of these college snipper-snappers with all their book larnin." So saying, he loftily strode out of the room.

Prof. Fergus, ignoring the last remarks, said: "We will do well to give much thought and study to the subject considered. We may consider it as settled that we must repent; we must turn. But how shall we specifically do what is enjoined by the general command 'turn?'"

The desire being generally expressed to hear Professor Fergus on the subject at the next meeting, it was so arranged.

CHAPTER XII.

One beautiful morning Mrs. Gray and I were strolling through the pasture, she intent on gathering some grapes and nuts, which grew in abundance in the woods, and I culling flowers from grassy banks at some distance behind her. Hearing approaching footsteps, I looked up and beheld Col. Bird before me. Returning his salutation, I started towards Mrs. Gray, but he interposing said: "Out surveying the improvements being made on this God-forsaken, sea-washed rock, are you?"

"I really have been giving them not the slightest attention." said I.

"Well," he answered, "I have. Have you ever thought what all this work means?"

"No," said I, "its no serious concern of mine." "Well, it ought to be," he replied. "It means that you're a prisoner."

I looked around in sudden alarm. Mrs. Gray had seen him and was waiting and watching. My courage returned.

"To me, if I pause to consider," said I, "it means preservation from the sea, and also comfort."

He replied, as he viciously stabbed the grass with his cane, "Now look here. Can't you see that the Captain and the Doctor, with this everlasting burden of work, are fixing for a permanent stay in this blasted island? They've got us caged like a confounded penal colony, and they intend to keep us here. Had the slavish work, worse than wasted here, been devoted to building a ship we would have got out of this purgatory long ago."

I stood there idly plucking to pieces a flower and looking out on the illimitable sea, but I saw it not. I saw far beyond a quaint old village and a quiet home, and dear familiar forms and loved and loving faces; and kindly ministering hands were there, and that deep home-longing, often dormant but never dead, surged in my soul and tears came to my eyes.

And the tempter before me said: "Miss Winston, don't you want to see your home and friends? You can do so; and if you will, by heaven you shall! Will you trust in me? Select Miss Clarkson, or any friend you choose for companion. Keep silent, and I will put my life between you and danger, and will set your feet on your native soil again."

I was now disenchanted. Through the hypocritical mask I saw the villain. "I will put my life between you and danger." That meant abandonment of my real friends, a stolen departure in unsafe boat with a villain. Suppressing more bitter words that struggled for utterance, I said: "Excuse me sir. You are wasting words. Better a hundredfold the pent-up life with the dwellers in what you term this penal colony, than my native land and freedom with you!"

"And that's the way the wind blows, is it?" he said angrily, as he smote the weeds with his cane. "If you'd rather go to perdition with that white-livered doctor than to associate with gentlemen, I have not a word to say.

"I brand your doctor as a coward. I insulted him at Rio. And would he vindicate his honor as a gentleman? Not he, but his cowardly legs got him away as fast as they could carry him."

"Yes," said I, hotly, "on the burning ship, when you and your other brave gentlemen made such a gallant rush to secure the boat which he had lowered for the women and children, I witnessed the craven spirit with which he hurled you and your pack from between these helpless beings and safety!"

So saying, I turned and hastened toward Mrs. Gray, but not too soon to overhear him say with an oath: "You'll rue this, my fine lady; as for your confounded doctor, I'll get even with him."

Returning to Mrs. Gray, we took the opportunity to examine the works to which Col. Bird had so insolently called my attention. A sufficient fence had been built on the bank of the stream to where it had made a considerable detour to the north; thence across the bend a strong fence was made; then a lighter one followed the creek until the latter abruptly turned to the south; thence the fence of heavy timbers crossed the ridge and followed down a ravine to the bay on the west.

Add to this the many works in which the colonists had engaged, and truly they had not been idle.

The fence completed, on a certain day nearly the entire colony turned out and, beginning at the north of the island, drove the animals southward and forced them through gaps in the fence. These they securely closed, and thereby confined the animals to the woody and mountainous part of the island, leaving the level and productive part free for cultivation.

A poultry house had been constructed for the rescued chickens and turkeys and for their rapidly multiplying progeny.

The sound of the woodman's axe was also abroad in the land, and the work of forest clearing went on, both to secure lumber for building and to reclaim the soil for the spring's sowing. One day, Dr. Andral having gone to the west shore to examine the condition of the fence which had evidently been molested, was returning from the sea through a gorge whose walls were high and very steep. Hearing a snapping of twigs above, he glanced upward and sharply sprang aside just in time to escape destruction from an immense boulder, that came crashing and thundering down to the exact spot which he had vacated not a moment too soon.

Was the stone dislodged by natural causes, just at that moment?

Was it the work of an insidious and desperate foe? The Doctor held to the former theory but others who knew of the threats that had been made against him, and had repeatedly warned him, would not believe so, not even when he laughed at their fears.

For one, I was full of forebodings of evil to him, and in consequence suffered much unhappiness. Yet, what right had I to feel or show a deeper interest in him than in any other person?

Can Eat Any Kind of Food

SINCE SHE LEFT OFF COFFEE AND USES POSTUM FOOD COFFEE.

"Coffee caused dull headaches and dizziness, with steady indigestion, until I discovered the reason of the trouble, and this was proven by leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee. The dizziness, headache and indigestion have entirely disappeared.

"My mother, Mrs. Burlingame, Kenilworth, O., was a great sufferer from stomach trouble and indigestion for many years. She had to live on a very restricted diet, until during the past winter she gave up coffee and began using Postum Food Coffee every day. It is now three months since she made the change, and she is so much improved she can eat nearly any kind of food. It is evidence to us that the coffee caused the trouble and that the Postum Food Coffee helped to build her back into health and strength." Mrs. J. M. Gould, W. Farmington, O.

S. T. SHORTESS.

(The Bible teaching on the duties of subjects and rulers.)

Our voters are both subjects and rulers, and so all the Bible teaching in regard to political duties applies to them. The divine law ought to govern us in political as in private life. We read (Prov. 14:34), "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." The divine law is the standard of righteousness, and so here, obedience to the divine law in letter and spirit is righteousness. What does the divine law require of us as subjects?

Submission and obedience (Rom. 13:1; Tit. 3:1; 1 Peter 2:14), except where the government requires us to do wrong, then we ought to obey God rather than men (Acts 5: 29). What does God require of us as rulers? He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God (2 Sam. 23:3, 4). He must be a terror to evil doers, but not to those who do well, and he must execute wrath on him that doeth evil (Rom. 13:3, 4.) He must be for the punishment of evil doers and for the praise of them that do well (1 Pet. 2:14). Rulers must not make a divorce law that is contrary to the divine law, for marriage is a divine institution to be governed by the divine law (Matt. 19:6-9). Rulers must not be mighty to drink wine and men of strength to mingle strong drink which justify the wicked for a reward (license fee) and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him (Isa. 5: 22, 23). The ruler may not build a town with blood, nor establish a city by iniquity, nor give his neighbor drink, nor put his bottle to him and make him drunken (Hab. 2:12, 15). If rulers cannot give one man drink and make him drunk once, certainly they cannot keep on giving him drink until they make a drunkard of him, and if they cannot do this they surely cannot make millions of drunkards, as our nation is doing through its partnership with distillers and brewers and saloonkeepers and by its army canteens.

Christian rulers and priests and prophets (preachers) may not err through strong drink nor make a covenant with death, an agreement with hell nor make lies their refuge and hide themselves under falsehood (Isa. 28:7, 15). They may not decree unrighteous decrees (Isa. 10:1, 2), so that widows may be the prey and that they may rob the fatherless. They may not steal and murder by law for the sake of revenue. They may not steal a man's brains, his sense and reason and will power and his money, and then kill him by the poision they sell him and by the power of the habit they have fastened upon him (Mark 10:19). They may never put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in any one's way (Rom. 14: 13). Like all churches they must act by the authority of Christ, must do all things in his name (Col. 3:17). They must not choose between evils, but they must depart from evil and do good (Psa. 37:27). Even though the majority are wrong, Christian rulers must not go with the multitude to do evil (Ex. 23:2). They must select judges and officers who will not do this, men who will be altogether just, able men, who fear God and hate covetousness, men who will not take a bribe or respect persons, nor wrest judgment, nor refuse to enforce the law (Ex. 18:21; Duet. 16:18, 19.) Praying to God as the Christian ruler must, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," he can consent to no law that is contrary to the divine law, nor can he vote for any party that retains such laws. He must favor everything in harmony with his prayer and oppose everything that stands in the way of the answer to his prayer. He ought to lead in all moral reforms and stand in the front in conflict against unrighteousness.

The Red Box Clew.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

"Oh, Mrs. Clarmont, Ronald is shot!" said Frank.

"Shot! What do you mean? Who shot him? Mr. Clarmont, dress as quick as you can and come here. The girl is wild!"

"Indeed, it is the truth. He is lying on the ground at the Covered Bridge."

"You wicked girl!" cried Mrs. Clarmont. "I suppose you are tired of working here. Never fear! You go back in the morning."

"Ma, I'll run to his room and see if he's gone," said Clara.

"But he will bleed to death, if something isn't done quick!" wailed Frank.

The voice of Mrs. Dew was heard as she hurried down from the attic: "Frank! What has happened to Frank? She's gone."

"No, she's here," returned Mrs. Clarmont; "she is still running at liberty. She's like all the rest of 'em, only she's fooled us by telling us the truth this long, so she can gouge us all the more by one stroke. She's held in till she had to break loose at last!"

"Mrs. Clarmont," said her husband's voice, you are talking nonsense. Telephone to the doctor to hurry to the Covered Bridge, while I finish dressing, and leave order with the man to bring the carriage."

"You dare to tell me I am talking nonsense?" cried the lady in a passion. "Who are you, sir, to pass sentence upon my talking? Did you have a penny in the world, sir, when I married you? If you choose to believe this fable about a shooting and a covered bridge, very well. Do your own telephoning. But I insist that this girl shall be confined to her room before she does more mischief."

"Mrs. Dew," cried Frank, "you believe me, I know."

"But what is it all about?" asked the other, looking dazed.

"Ma," said Clara, "I don't see what object Fanny could have to fool us. There's nothing to gain by it; and Ronald is not in his room."

"Not in his room!" exclaimed Mrs. Dew. "But Ronald never did go away at such an hour as this."

"Fanny has explained everything to us," said Mrs. Clarmont, with bitter irony. "You were not present, Mrs. Dew, when she told everything. She says our Ronald went to the Covered Bridge and committed suicide."

"Oh, no, Mrs. Clarmont!" Frank expostulated.

The voice of Mr. Clarmont was now heard at the telephone; "You get off my wire. I called for Dr. Debber. Who are you, anyway? Doctor—is that you, Doctor? Hello! Oh! no, Mrs. Riddyslate, I didn't call for you. Central! What's the matter, central? This is a matter of life and death. I want Doctor Debber!"

"I'll rouse the man, and have him hitch up," said Clara.

"You'll do nothing of the sort!" interposed her mother. "Do you believe this suicide story? You will remain where you are."

"I'll do nothing of the sort," returned her daughter. "I'll do as I please!" And she did.

"Frank," said Mrs. Dew, "tell me what it is."

"He didn't try to shoot himself, said Frank, who was too terrified, both by the remembrance of Ronald's plight and the commotion about her, to find relief in tears. "He was just trying to scare the old woman. She was going to grab me and I screamed out and he tried to draw his pistol, but—it didn't draw."

"So!" said Mrs. Clarmont scornfully. "You would have us think Ronald was bent on murder, instead of suicide? You are changing your story, I see! You are trying to bolster it up by bringing in an old woman. But do you think you can make me believe a word of it? Shame upon you!"

The voice of Mr. Clarmont: "Hello! Oh, is that you, Doctor? Thank heaven! Doctor, Ronald has been shot. Go as quick as you can to the Covered Bridge. What? No, not the cupboard—of course not; Covered Bridge. What? Colored Bridge? Why, no! The bridge; b-r-i-d-g-e, bridge. What goes over the creek. Hurry there, quick. Understand? But I say it is not cupboard. It is the Covered—"

At this moment Clara returned. "I'll dress and go in the carriage," she said hurriedly. "Poor Ronald! Fanny, where is he shot?"

"He said it was through his heart," gasped the child; "but the old woman didn't think so."

"Frank," said Mrs. Dew, "why did you and Ronald go to the Covered Bridge at such an hour?"

"Or at any other hour?" interposed Mrs. Clarmont. "The story is ridiculous!"

"Oh, Mrs. Dew," said Frank earnestly, "I see now that it was wrong. But I wanted to learn something about my parents. I never knew anything about them. I was left on a doorstep when a little child, and a good man took care of me. But I don't know who left me. This old woman knows. She said if I'd come, she'd tell me things. So I went, and Ronald went to take care of me."

"Don't know your parents!" exclaimed Mrs. Clarment. "Don't know your father or mother! Don't know what kind of blood is in your veins! And Mr. Clarmont and his brother Wilton thought you a fit person to be a companion to my darling Vega, you, a girl without a home, without a name; Frank Douglas, indeed! You leave this house today—but I had already determined on that. We haven't had a minute's peace since you came. Something has warned me all along. I've felt an instinct. I tell you, Mrs. Dew, I've felt an instinct!"

Mr. Clarmont at the telephone: "C-o-v-e-r-e-d B-r-i-d-g-e; Covered Bridge. As quick as you can."

The carriage was announced, and Clara and her father hurried to get in it, taking Frank to show them the scene of the catastrophe. Mrs. Dew made preparations to receive the wounded boy. Mrs. Clarmont, who had firmly refused to believe Frank's story to the very last, locked the door of the room where Vega, deaf to all sounds, slept. The mistress of the house had resolved that Frank and Vega should never see each other again.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

"Better do it than wish it done." Better cure catarrh by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla than complain because you suffer from it.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

JESUS AND NICODEMUS.*

No sooner had Jesus been proclaimed by the Baptist as the Lamb of God than he turned his steps toward Galilee, followed by the five or six disciples who had recognized in him the promised Messiah. The first place visited by him was Cana, a small village five or six miles north of Nazareth, and the home of Nathanael, the "guileless Israelite." There was to be a wedding here, and Jesus was invited to the festivities, with his mother and his disciples. Here he wrought his first miracle, turning the water into wine, and thus manifested his glory as the Son of God. The faith of his disciples was strenghthened and God's seal set anew upon his divine mission. Jesus seems to have decided no longer to live in Nazareth, for we find him henceforth making his home at Capernaum, on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee.

The Jewish Passover being near at hand, Jesus visited again the city of Jerusalem, where he had doubtless gone every year since his one recorded journey at twelve years of age. But he now came, not as a humble pilgrim from Nazareth, but as the Lord of the temple whose right it was to cleanse it from foulness as with fuller's soap; to refine the silver of his people's worship as the refiner purges away the dross in the furnace fires. Wrought to indignation by the sight of the sanctuary's profanation, he drove the motley throng from the temple precints as a son who would not suffer his father's house to be thus insulted. If his enemies would know by what authority he wrought this act, they would be enlightened when, in after time, they should put him to death, desecrating God's living temple as they had that on Mount Moriah. From the grave wherein his dead body should be laid would he come forth again to the dismay of his enemies and the everlasting joy of his chosen ones.

During this brief visit to Jerusalem Jesus worked some miracles: what and how many we are not told. The attention of the people was drawn to him and many believed in his divine mission. But their faith did not reach that strength of conviction nor produce that transformation of character which placed them in the ranks of his declared disciples, and Jesus did not trust them with the full revelation of his gracious purpose and plan for the salvation of the human race.

Among the prominent Pharisees who were moved by the teachings and miracles of Jesus was one Nicodemus, a member of the Jewish Sanhedrin, or highest council of the nation. Among the the hypocrites so numerous in that sect he appears as an honest but very timid man. He could not resist the conviction that Jesus taught the truth, while the humble, unselfish life of the Master appealed to his deepest sense of the divine will. He never shared in the blind, cruel condemnation of the Savior. Yet he could not muster courage to openly declare his faith. When the council raged at the officers for not arresting Jesus, scorning their excuse, that his words displayed divine wisdom, Nicodemus ventured to suggest that no man ought to be condemned without at least a hearing. But at their angry retort, "Art thou also of Galilee?" Nicodemus subsided, and dared no further defense. We may believe that he refused to take part in the trial and condemnation of Jesus, and in his heart believed in him; for we find him going to the grave with Joseph of Arimathea, taking a large quantity of material for embalming the body. He may have been, like Joseph, "a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, for fear of the Jews." He is not the only one who has stood aloof from the cause of truth while its champion lived, and brought tributes to his grave. Not to such would the Master commit his cause, but to the "sons of thunder," and the "men of rock." No one who waited for the shades of night to hide his coming would be likely to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

"Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God," is the confession with which this great man comes to the Nazarene. It was a great confession to make, as a representative of the learned councilors. Any ordinary rabbi would have felt flattered. The answer of Jesus startled him by its abruptness and strangeness: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Like all the leaders among the Pharisees, Nicodemus looked upon the descendant of Abraham as entitled to the peculiar favor of God. The kingdom must be for the chosen people. To be a Jew was to possess a title to its privileges. This carnal conception of the divine government Jesus destroyed at a single blow. He made it plain that his kingdom was to be spiritual, not racial or political. But the thought was so foreign to the mind of the learned Jew that he could not grasp it. "How can an old man hope for a rebirth? It is impossible." Jesus does not fully explain his meaning, but throws out a suggestion which will help Nicodemus to find the true nature of the salvation he has to bring. He repeats, in somewhat fuller form, his first declaration: "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." To "see" the kingdom and to "enter" it are the same. To see, in this instance, signifies to experience or enjoy; as when Jesus says that the man who keeps his sayings shall not "see" death. He tells Nicodemus that he is talking, not of a fleshly birth, but a spiritual, and the fact that he cannot at once fully understand it is no cause for doubting it any more than his ignorance of other mysteries causes him to refuse useful knowledge.

But what does Jesus mean by being born of water and the Spirit? We need not linger with Nicodemus about these vague words, when we have later, fuller, clearer declarations of Jesus to enlighten us. By being born of water and the Spirit, Jesus meant believing on him and being baptized. In his last commission, as given by Mark, Jesus said to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned." The Apostle John says in his first epistle that "whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." The Apostle Paul says, in his epistle to Titus, that "according to his mercy he saved us, through the laver of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit." It is no longer a mystery to us, save in so far as all spiritual processes are beyond our ken, to fully comprehend. He who in his heart believes in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and obeys him in Christian baptism, is born again, and is in the kingdom of heaven.

But the religious prejudices of a lifetime cannot be expelled in an hour, and the question again rises to the lips of the learned Pharisee, "How can these things be?" Jesus rebukes Nicodemus for his fruitless study of the Scriptures, of which he has been posing as a teacher, and invites him to sit at the feet of the heavenly teacher, whose mission it is to reveal the supreme truths for which the human soul ever longs. Poor Nicodemus, half believing, half doubting, turns away from the Master, and goes back to his barren pursuits of the empty forms of traditionalism, rejecting the crystal waters of life for the muddy pool of legalism. But not until Jesus has first spoken into his ears some of sublimest sentences that ever fell even from his lips. For we prefer to consider the conversation as extending to the twenty-first verse. Nicodemus was familiar with the story of the uplifted serpent of brass, in the wilderness, as told in Numbers, 21st chapter, and he could not be ignorant that Israel's cure was due to the grace of God, and not the virtue of the brass. Much more must deliverance from sin, and its fruit, death, depend upon the grace of God, rather than the power of forms and carnal sacrifices. The Son of Man and Son of God alone is sufficient as an atonement, and this way of life is offered to all the world through simple faith in him. Here is the charter of Christianity. Originating in the love of God, embodied in the cross of Christ, appropriated by the faith of the believer, it is ample to procure the pardon of all past sins and to deliver from the fear of condemnation. We may well be grateful to Nicodemus for this visit to the Savior by night, since without it we might have lacked the exquisite gem of gracious truth which now sparkles from the golden text of our lesson: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Bethany Reading Courses.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

It is a notable fact that the attention of so large a group of people is to be fixed upon the life of our Lord for some months to come. The International Lessons for the next eighteen months deal with this theme, and similar is the case with the Blakesley method, and with several other study courses which are offered to the public. It is, therefore, a matter of satisfaction that one of the Bethany Reading Courses* deals with the same theme, and probably for this reason many will choose that course.

Among the phases of the life of Christ, to which attention must be directed, in securing an adequate view of his work, is the preparation of the world for his advent. Paul says (Gal. 4:4) that he came in the "fullness of time," which indicates that there had been a providential preparation of history, both in the life of the people of Israel and in the heathen world outside with its attempts to find God through its various forms of worship and philosophy. This double course of preparation expresses itself more generally in three forms.

There is, first, the influence of Rome upon the world's life in the days in which Jesus lived. The Roman character was stern, heroic, persistent, and possessed of a passion for organization. Beginning in a small way among the Alban Hills, it had gradually extended itself along the highways of the world, until after a career of five centuries it began to be one of the great world-powers. The Roman Empire in the Augustan age, the time at which Jesus appeared, was the first real consolidation of human interests. There had been universal empires before—those of old Babylonia, Assyria, New Babylonia, Persia and Greece; but none of these had been unities in government. The results of this Roman supremacy as they relate themselves to Christianity and constitute one of the elements in the timeliness of Christ's advent were (1) the universal peace which had been impossible in former times; (2) the sense of unity, hitherto unknown, by which the consciousness of a world-state was obtained; (3) the opportunities for travel and traffic along the great Roman highways, which extended from Syria to the Scottish Highlands and the ruins of which remain one of the wonders of the world. These roads made it possible for Christian preachers to go everywhere proclaiming the truth; (4) the uniform law, and the protection of Roman citizens, which gave such of the apostles who enjoyed these privileges the guarantee of freedom in the preaching of the faith as long as they complied with the laws of the empire.

The second of these influences was that of the Greek culture, which was at that time widely diffused through the empire. The Greek language is the most marvelous instrument of human thought ever devised. It was the language of the orator, the poet, the philosopher, and most properly became the language of the Gospels. It was carried into the Eastern world by the armies of Alexander, and though his empire soon fell into fragmants, the influence of this tongue was left wherever he had gone, so that the Greek became, in the second and first centuries before Christ, a well-nigh universal language and everywhere educated men were able to understand and speak Greek, so that the apostles could reach large masses of people without the necessity of studying or of knowing the dialects of the ancient world, which there seems to be no evidence that they ever acquired. The miracle of Pentecost stands as a solitary instance. The Greek was a gift of tongues to the early preachers of the cross, and added vastly to their equipment.

The third element of this timeliness of Jesus' appearance was the distribution of the Jewish people, his own countrymen, in every part of the known world. That distribution began with the fall of Samaria in 722, was continued with the exile of the Jews into Babylonia in 586 and the flight of many about the same period into Egypt, and reached its culmination in the wide diffusion of this people throughout the empire for commercial privileges offered by the Roman Government, so that they constituted no small element in every great city. This gave the apostles, who were themselves Jews, a point of departure in every province. They always went first to the Jewish synagogues, and tried to convert their countrymen to the new faith; failing in which purpose, they moved out into Gentile circles. But they at least felt that the Jewish quarters were, in a sense, their own because of the bonds of race.

These three elements, therefore, met together to constitute the nick of time for the beginnings of Christianity. It is not a mere coincidence that the inscription upon the cross of our Lord was in Greek, Latin and Hebrew, for the three civilizations met together at the foot of the cross, to acknowledge indeed, though perhaps unconsciously, that Jesus was King.

*"The Life and Teachings of Jesus," by Prof. Willett, is an admirable summary. It is very cordially commended by leading Disciples. The uniform testimony of those who have used it in the Bethany Reading Circle is that, while it has given them a more vivid and complete view of the life and character of Christ, it has, at the same time, greatly strengthened their faith in his divine nature and mission. This handbook furnishes most excellent supplementary reading in the study of the International Sunday-school Lessons To-day's mail (Jan. 20) brings a single order for 100 copies. Common Sense Cure Remarkable Remedy Which is Bringing Comfort to Thousands of Sufferers.

Probably one-half the people who see this article suffer from piles.

It is one of the commonest of diseases as well as one of the most obstinate and painful.

People suffer from piles for years, and just because it is not immediately fatal they neglect it.

Carelessness causes no end of suffering. Carelessness about so simple a thing as piles has frequently caused death.

Hemorrhages occur from no apparent cause and the loss of blood causes death.

Surgical operations for piles often cause death. Piles are simple in the beginning and easily cured. They can be cured even in the worst stages without pain, loss of blood or detention from business. And the remedy which will do it surely and completely is the Pyramid Pile Cure.

It allays the itching and inflammation immediately, heals the irritated surfaces, and after regular use for a short time removes the swelling and puts the rectal membrane into sound, healthy condition.

The Pyramid Pile Cure cures all forms of piles thoroughly and permanently.

A great many pile remedies contain cocaine, morphine and similar dangerous drugs to quiet the pain and make the patient believe he is getting well, but their action is temporary and it requires no argument to show the danger of using such remedies.

The Pyramid Pile Cure contains no cocaine, narcotic, nor any poisonous drug whatever, and it is so far ahead of any other pile remedy for safety and efficiency as not to be mentioned in the same class.

Any sufferer from piles who will write the Pyramid Drug Co., of Marshall, Mich., may receive a valuable little book on the nature and cure of piles, sent free by mail.

Or better yet, ask any druggist in the United States what is the safest and surest pile cure and he will say the Pyramid.

All druggists sell full-size packages of the Pyramid Pile Cure at 50 cents. They cure itching piles, protruding, bleeding or any form of this common and troublesome disease.

The Only Solution.....

There is no longer any question as to how Schrader, Schlatter, Dowie, the Christian Scientists, Magnetic Healers, and all other so-called divine and supernatural healers, produce their phenomena. They are all (though ignorantly) using a natural law, psychology, which is universal in its application when properly understood. We have mastered this science, and can demonstrate it. It is all in suggestion. It is applicable to saint and sinner alike. We cure all kinds of diseases. We teach others the science in class and by mail. BOOKS.

Neglected Factors in the Study of the Early Progress of Christianity. By James Orr, D. D. A. G. Armstrong & Son, New York.

This book stands out clearly as the most important book of the past year in the department of church history. The neglected facts to which the author calls attention are embraced under three propositions: First, that the universal extension of Christianity in the Roman Empire during the first and second centuries was much more rapid than has been supposed; second, that, that Christianity during that period permeated all strata of society and was not confined to the lower classes exclusively or even prevailingly; third, that corresponding to the influence of pagan thought upon Christianity, the influence of which in the formation of dogma has lately found ample recognition, there was a reflex influence of Christianity upon the secular and pagan thought of the Græco-Roman world. The argument is both interesting and convincing, and the position which Dr. Orr has taken must be reckoned with by any future historian of early Christianity.

Bible Questions. By James M. Campbell. Funk & Wagnalls, New York. $1.

A series of fifty-two short chapters, one for each week, on the great evangelical truths of Scripture, is here arranged to form a sort of Protestant "Christian year." The general excellence of the exegesis, the keenness of spiritual insight, the personal directness of the appeal and the epigrammatic pungency of statement, combine to make this, like all of Mr. Campbell's other works, helpful and inspiring. It is not a book of sermons, but it contains many suggestions, single paragraphs or even sentences from which sermons will grow in the mind of any preacher in whom the homiletical instinct is even fairly developed. The book can to advantage be put into the hands of young converts.

Christian Science: An Exposition. By William A. Purrington. E. B. Treat & Co., New York. $1.

This latest exposure of the absurdities of the so-called Christian Science is, so far as we have seen, the best. There are at least two ways in which the subject can be treated. One is the way of humor, and we unhesitatingly affirm that no one who is devoid of a sense of humor can adequately appreciate or fully expose the monstrosities of that system. Mark Twain's recent and widely read article on the subject (Cosmopolitan for October) is the ne plus ultra of this sort of criticism. The other method deals logically and dispassionately with the pretentions of Mrs. Eddy and her followers and exhibits their self-contradictions and falsity. Mr. Purringtons' method is essentially the latter. His statement of the teaching of Christian Science is calm and unexaggerated. In fact, it consists largely of quotations from Mrs. Eddy's works. A considerable part of the material has been already published in the Morth American Review and its accuracy has never been denied. And, withal, Mr. Purrington adds to the judicial temperament a keen sense of humor which enlivens his discourse. Without that, how could one handle this subtle suggestion of the avaricious "Mother" of Christian Science: "Christian Science demonstrates that the patient who pays whatever he is able to pay for being healed is more apt to recover than he who withholds a slight equivalent for health."

At the Feet of Jesus. By R. P. Meeks. Standard Pub. Co., Cincinnati, O. $1.25.

The twenty-five sermons which fill this volume deal with various periods, events and phases of the life of Christ. The author's style suggests that he is more at home in addressing sermons to the ear than to the eye. The present discourses, at any rate, would probably be more impressive to a hearer than they are to a reader. Yet they are strong, clear, doctrinal sermons. It is something of a surprise to note that the author explains the "us" in Gen. 1:26 ("let us make man in our image") as "doubtless bearing reference to the Trinity."

Pulpit Diagrams. Z. T. Sweeney, Editor. Standard Pub. Co., Cincinnati, O. $1.

There are 48 sermon diagrams in this volume, each accompanied by a brief description and outline. It is proposed to issue such volumes quarterly if there is sufficient demand. Preachers who use blackboards or charts may find here some useful suggestions.

Matthew, the Genesis of the New Testament. By Henry G. Weston, D. D., President Crozer Theological Seminary. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. $ .75.

It is not the author's purpose to give a verse-by-verse commentary on Matthew, but a running exposition, in form somewhat like that of the Expositor's Bible series. He speaks constantly of Matthew as chronologically the first of the Gospels and rather leads the reader to believe that it was the first book in the New Testament, but attempts no proof of either proposition. In fact, all critical discussion falls outside of the scope of the book.

The Divine Origin of the Bible. By R. A. Torry, Superintendent of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. Fleming H. Revell Co. $ .50.

The author's position is sufficiently indicated by the following quotation (p. 10): "In John 10:35 Jesus says, 'The Scripture cannot be broken.' He has just built an argument on a single word used in the Psalms and he thus sets his seal to the absolute verbal inerrancy of the Old Testatament Scriptures." It is a strong defense of the "divine origin" of the Bible, interpreted as verbal inspiration.

JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO. LA CROSSE, WIS.

The Prophets of Israel. By Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. $ .35.

The third series of handbooks for the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses includes the Prophets of Israel, by H. L. Willett; Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples, by F. D. Power, and Heroes of Modern Missions, by W. J. Lhamon. It is saying much, but not too much, to say that the present volume is in no way inferior to Dr. Willett's work of last year on the Life and Teachings of Jesus. We will venture the assertion that never before has so much information about the Hebrew prophets been condensed into 160 small pages. At the same time the text is readable. It is not in the form of a syllabus, though it can easily be used as an outline for more extended study, by reason of its analyses of the books, its chronological tables and its well-selected bibliography.

Love Songs. By Mary Jolly Van Hook. Curts & Jennings, Cincinnati.

These score of poems, "love songs of childhood," the author would doubtless have called them if that title had not already been monopolized by another, are obviously the product of a "minor poet," but sometimes the work of minor poets, though not exactly thrilling, is very agreeable to the minor reader. The photographic illustrations suggest, as the verses also do, that the inspiration came from a certain group of children, but the author has scarcely yet achieved success in transmuting the incidents of a particular neighborhood into matter of universal interest.

Through Prairie Meadows: A Few Little Rhymes. By Carol Elmore. Hollomon Printery, Atlanta.

This "little book of Rimes of the Southwest" is a decidedly creditable production. The dozen poems which it contains give evidence of a well-developed sense of the melody of words and lines. We have noticed no flaw in rhythm or rhyme. In a few instances, but happily not many, the choice of words appears to be influenced somewhat too largely by considerations of sound. In general, though the verses are by no means weak, we are of the opinion that they are interesting by reason of their promise rather than their strength.

The Asostolic Age: Its Life, Doctrine and Polity. By James Vernon Bartlet, M. A., Lecturer in Church History in Mansfield College, Oxford. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

This important volume, in the Ten Epochs of Church History series, we reserve for fuller review. All who are acquainted with Mr. Bartlet's scholarly little "Early Church History" will expect to find in this history of the Apostolic Age something more than ordinarily stimulating.

Bible Truth in Hymns. Compiled by Charles Cuthbert Hall. International Committee of Y. M. C. A., New York. $ .35.

The purpose of the compiler of this book was to encourage the devotional study of hymns. The best religious poetry which we possess is in the form of hymns. They are good to read as well as to sing. Dr. Hall has arranged about 150 classic hymns (without tunes) topically in twenty-four lessons for devotional study. The habit of reading hymns is one which might be cultivated to advantage, not only as a means of spiritual growth, but as a training in the power of discriminating between religious poetry and the religious doggerel with which our current hymnology is flooded.

Re-Incarnation in the New Testament. By James M. Pryse. Elliott B. Page & Co., New York.

The author tries to prove the doctrine of re-incarnation by what seems to us, and will seem to most sane people, a tortured exegesis of several passages of Scripture. For example, the statement of Jesus, "Elijah is come already," is interpreted as an "emphatic, unqualified statement. . . that the soul or inner self of Elijah was incarnated in John." Later the author says, "The soul of man, the real self of him, is identical in essence with Diety, or the one universal self." From this it would appear that everybody must be the incarnation of everybody else. Where strained literalistic exegesis fails to prove the point, as above, fantastic allegory is introduced. The latter method runs riot especially in the interpretation of the parables.

The Great Physician and His Power to Heal. By E. E. Byrum. Gospel Trumpet Pub. Co. $ .50.

This is an exposition of the doctrine of Divine Healing. There are copious quotations from the Old and New Testaments showing that it was prophesied that Jesus would heal the sick, that he did it, that the twelve did it, that the seventy did it, that some others did it in the apostolic age and that the elders were told to pray over the sick. It is assumed that this power of the elders is perpetual. The author fails to present any evidence that the people are healed nowadays by the laying on of hands. He merely tries to show by argument and exegesis that it must be so.

HENDERSON.

On Saturday morning, December 30th, 1899, a sad bereavement came to the family of Brother and Sister C. W. Henderson, of Woodville, Miss. Their little daughter, Lillie, aged 11 years, five months and five days, passed over to her eternal home. Sweet little Lillie had been an invalid and a severe sufferer for many months prior to her death, and during those months of suffering she was so gentle and patient at all times that the hearts of all who saw her went out to her in tenderest love and sympathy. May God bless and sustain her sorrow-stricken parents.

LEE JACKSON.

KEENE.

The Kentucky C. W. B. M. is in the shadow of a great sorrow. On the tenth of this month our beloved Sister Sarah Keene fell asleep in Jesus. For three years she served as our state president. Last August she presided over our convention with grace and dignity; at that meeting she was elected state secretary and organizer. We had hoped and planned for enlarged work, but how soon were our hopes crushed and our plans brought to naught. In September, Sister Keene passed through a severe and critical operation. For a short time she seemingly rallied and improved and we took courage believing that she would be restored to the work. About a week before her death, we heard that she was failing and several of the members of the board visited her in her home at Winch-ster. As soon as we looked into the face, so changed by suffering, we felt that the end was near. Though too weak and sick to talk much, yet from the little said we found the burden of her heart was still the Master's work. We bade her good bye, with no hope of clasping that hand again until in the resurrection morn, we shall behold her in the likeness of Him, whom she so faithfully served, for "we shall be satisfied when we awake in his likeness." The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Walker of Winchester, Bro. Collis, of Lexington, preaching an appropriate discourse, Bro. Tibbs, of Mt. Sterling, and Dr. Savage of the Methodist Church, leading in prayer. The large concourse of sorrowing friends that crowded the church attested to the love they bore the sleeping one, while flowers from far and near, spoke in their own language of the fragrance of her life. Late in the chill and gloom of the wintry eventide, the precious form was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Lexington, by the side of her husband, who not quite two years ago was called to his reward. The daughter, an only child, is left indeed desolate, but she has been so strong and brave to endure with Christian fortitude the dark shadows that have come into her young life, that we believe the mantle of her sainted mother will fall upon her. May she, with the aged mother, the sorrowing sister and brothers be able to appropriate His blessed promises: "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine." "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; for I am the Lord thy God."

WILKES.

Col. Peter Singleton Wilkes, the only surviving brother of the venerable L. B. Wilkes of Reformation fame, departed this life at his home in Stockton, Cal., Jan. 2, 1900, at the age of 73. Brother Wilkes was born in Tennessee, but was reared in Missouri. He was naturally of a studious disposition, and attended consecutively the Springfield (Missouri) Academy, Bethany College, Virginia, and the University of Missouri, from which latter place he was graduated in 1852. His prominence as a student is indicated by the fact of his election to the State Legislature within one week from the time of his graduation. At the close of the Civil War he left Richmond, Va., where he was a member of the Confederate Congress, and went into Mexico. Finally, in 1866, he came to Stockton, where he has since lived, practicing his profession as an attorney. A large delegation of the Stockton bar was present at the funeral services, attesting the esteem in which he was held by the members of this association. In 1868 Brother Wilkes was married to Miss S. M. Bradford, daughter of Austin Bradford, of Boone County, Missouri. His faithful and devoted wife survives him. He became a member of the body of Christ immediately before his entrance into Bethany College in 1848. Although a lawyer, the Reformation had few if any more staunch friends than he. Many times during his illness he expressed a desire to depart and be at rest, giving every assurance that with him "in the evening time it was light."

WILSON.

Janette Golden was born in Kentucky April 23, 1821. Departed this life Sept. 23, 1899. She was married to James Wilson in November, 1838. To them were born nine children, five of whom, with their father, have passed on before. Those that survive her are Mrs. Gus Brownlee, Mrs. Wm. Pilkington, Mrs. Jos. Golden and Mrs. Thos. Durant. She also leaves 18 grandchildren. Grandma Wilson, as she was known, was loved by all who knew her. She united with the church 25 years ago. The funeral was conducted by Elder W. W. Rumsey.

A FRIEND.

WOODSIDE.

Died at his home in Yates Center, Kan., Jan. 21st, W. B. Woodside, Sr., in his 78th year. He was born in Henry County, Ky., in 1822, moved to Kansas in 1871. Bro. Woodside united with the Christian Church at the age of 21 and for 57 years lived a faithful, consistent Christian life. He was one of the elders of the church at Yates Center. He leaves a wife, four sons and two daughters. Two of his sons, W. B., Jr., and R. W., are ministers of the Christian Church. He had many friends who honored him for his work's sake.

If any one has conceived the idea that the popularity of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been impaired, a visit to the subscription department would convince them of their error.

The opportunity of obtaining such a paper as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGLELIST a whole year for one dollar does not present itself every day. Our advice is to form a club of twenty-five, and do it now.

Camp Point, Ill., sends us a club of twenty-nine, and while we are thinking they have done well we read in Bro. J. H. Garrett's letter that they think they can add to it.

Des Moines just will not "let up." They are determined to gain the lead. Our list numbers almost three hundred in that city now, and the indications are good for one hundred more.

The Mormons had better watch their citadel closely. Prof. Eddingfield has just sent us a club of twenty-five subscribers from Salt Lake City. This is a good example for some of our stronger churches.

Bro. D. N. Solomon sends us a club of twenty-five from Palmyra, Ill. The church is not large, and Bro. Solomon is seventy-nine years of age. You younger men in larger churches, what are you doing for the cause of good literature?

It may interest our readers to know that we are mailing four hundred copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to Sedalia proper and about half that many to the "regions round about" that thriving city. The Sedalia Church gives promise of doing even greater things than its past records; and that is not a small prediction.

The Springfield (Mo.) list now numbers fifty and Warrensburg, Mo., is only about ten behind that. Fairbury, Neb., raised their club and sent it in charge of their pastor, Wm. Oeschger, who called on us en route to Vincennes, Ind.

But why attempt to enumerate the good reports. We can not hope to tell you of all that is being done by the brethren to show their approval of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its determination to furnish the brotherhood with a thoroughly first-class, up-to-date, representative journal. We heartily appreciate the kind efforts of all who are so effectively co-operating with us. We feel more encouraged than ever to persevere in our undertaking to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the leading Christian paper in all this land. This is a large contract, but with a continuation of the support we are now receiving it can be done.

One word concerning our one-dollar club rate: We would be glad indeed to make it permanent, but are not entirely persuaded that it can be done and our present high standard of quality maintained.

As we have often stated before, the quality will be preserved and if possible improved steadily; it will, therefore, be necessary that the present rate of increase in our subscription list be undiminished for the next two months to come.

As to whether this can be done, the churches themselves will decide by their actions. At present we can only promise to extend this wonderfully low club rate during February and March. After that time it will be withdrawn unless intervening events seem to justify its continuance.

If your church desires good literature cheap, a club should be formed without further delay. Subscribers will please remember that our individual rates remain always one dollar and fifty cents.

HOW TO DO IT!

Take a small piece of blank paper--not necessarily linen bond, or tinted note paper; any kind will do--and write upon it your name and address and the name of one of the hereinafter mentioned books. Next secure, by some honorable and honest means, a one-dollar bill. Wrap this in the piece of paper aforementioned, and insert both in an ordinary envelope, carefully sealing the same. Upon the North-east corner of the face of the envelope place an uncancelled two-cent postage stamp, previously moistening the back thereof to cause it to adhere firmly to the envelope. Below and to the left of the stamp write carefully: "The Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo." When this is done, give the envelope with its contents into the charge of the nearest representative of the United States Post Office Department, and keep as patient as possible until you hear from us. The name of the book to be written on the blank piece of paper may be selected from the following list:

Christian Lesson Commentrry, 1900.
Moses, The Man of God. Dungan.
Missionary Addresses. McLean.
Life of Campbell. Grafton.
Mary Ardmore Stark.
Hugh Carlin. Stark.
Men of Yesterday. Grafton.
Form of Baptism. Briney.
King Saul. Ellis
Rose Emerson. Williams.
Reformation in Missouri. Haley.
The Treasury of Song.
Life of Garfield. Green.
Young Folks in Bible Lands. Johnson.

N. B. The insertion of a two-dollar bill in envelope will entitle the sender to write the names of two books on his piece of paper. By carefully following the directions as given, our patrons may secure good books without going to the trouble of purchasing a Money Order.

CURRENT EVENTS.

After a week of intense excitement in Kentucky, a temporary compromise has been effected which removes the prospect of an appeal to force and arms. On Tuesday of last week William Goebel, Democratic contestant for the office of governor, was shot upon the street in Frankfort. The contest committee of the Legislature met immediately. All the evidence on both sides had been heard, but by agreement each side was to be allowed ten hours for argument. Disregarding this agreement, the committee decided the case immediately without argument, by a strictly party vote of 10 to 1. To prevent action by the Legislature in ratification of the report of the committee, Gov. Taylor at once issued a proclamation declaring the state of Kentucky, and especially the city of Frankfort, to be in a state of insurrection and dissolving the Legislature to meet at London, Ky., on Tuesday, Feb. 6. The Democratic members of the Legislature, considering the Governor's action illegal, attempted to assemble in the State House, in the opera house and in the Capitol Hotel, but were in each case dispersed by the militia acting under Gov. Taylor's orders. Being unable to assemble, a paper was drawn up in the form of a resolution adopting the report of the committee, was passed from hand to hand, and signed by more than fifty Democratic members of the Legislature. Goebel was thereby declared elected and the oath of office was administered to the dying man. The next day, after a hard struggle for life, he died. His claim to the office, therefore, devolved upon Mr. Beckham who had been contesting for the office of lieutenant-governor. Beckham ordered the militia to disperse, but the militia looked to Taylor for its orders. The court granted an injunction restraining Taylor from exercising the functions of governor. The notary who attempted to serve the notice was arrested on the charge of inciting to insurrection. Taylor appealed for federal aid to restore order and enforce his authority in the state. It was refused, and at the same time he was unofficially informed that the authorities in Washington considered his action in holding his office by force unjustifiable, without regard to the merits of the Goebel contest case.

It is the general consensus of opinion outside of Kentucky that Taylor was fairly elected Governor of Kentucky, that the contest was carried on without reference to the will of the people, and that the Goebel election law, which made the contest possible, is a piece of unjust legislation. There is no question but that the meeting and decision of the committee were hasty and somewhat irregular. Whether or not Gov. Taylor's adjournment of the legislature was constitutional is a question upon which we are not prepared to pronounce an opinion, but undoubtedly his action in calling in the militia to prevent its reassembling was a weak and unfortunate act. If the legislature was legally adjourned, it was of no consequence whether its members assembled or not; they could not legally act as a legislature. In transferring the government from the civil to the military authority, Taylor weakened his position and lost sympathy. Clear-headed men on both sides saw that the first thing to be done to prevent civil war in the state, was to secure the recognition of some civil authority. A meeting of prominent men of both parties was held in Louisville and terms of agreement were drawn up, which await only the ratification of the Republicans. The legislature is to be recalled from London; the troops are to be withdrawn from Frankfort, except a small guard; the gubernatorial contest shall be decided by the courts; pending the decision, Beckham is to be recognized as governor. If agreed to, this will virtually mean that the Republicans will go out of office, at least until the election in November. Even on the hypothesis that Taylor was fairly elected, this will be far better than to throw the state into a condition of rebellion. If Kentucky means to be considered a community fit for self-government, it must find some way for settling its quarrels and choosing its officers without an appeal to fire-arms. If the legislature and the courts do not do justice at once, it must learn to be patient until justice can triumph by peaceful methods.

No week of the Boer war has been so unproductive of news as that which has just passed. Upon collecting his forces south of the Tugela River, after the retreat from Spion Kop and the failure of the flanking movement, Gen. Buller made the extraordinary boast that he would be in Ladysmith within a week. That was ten days ago. Since then no official reports or other reliable statements have been published to indicate whether or not Buller has recrossed the Tugela and is making another attempt to flank the Boers still farther to the west. The boast was so audacious and unusual that it aroused some hope that he might have secret reasons for his assurance. So far it is known only that the time is up and that Buller is not in Ladysmith. There is reason to believe that the center of interest is shifting from Natal to Cape Colony. Movements by Gen. French in the vicinity of Norval's Pont, which is the only open road by which the Boers could escape from Colesberg, indicate that reinforcements have been received by him and that a systematic and aggressive campaign under the direction of Gen. Roberts is about to begin.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which has been the chief instrument of those who oppose the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, has been definitely abrogated by the formal signing of a new agreement between Secretary Hay and Ambassador Pauncefote. By this act, Great Britain relinquishes any right which she may have had to participate in the construction and control of the canal, subject only to the condition that the canal shall be neutral and open to all nations in peace and war. The validity of the Clayton-Bulwer agreement has long been a matter of serious dispute. Great Britain has not lived up to its provisions in her relations with Honduras and the treaty has been referred to as a mere "diplomatic reminiscence." The new treaty formally removes any diplomatic obstacle to the construction of the canal, and the present Congress seems to have a disposition to take favorable action on the measure.

The opening of the British Parliament on Tuesday of last week was looked forward to as the possible beginning of a crisis for the Salisbury and Chamberlain Cabinet. The speech from the throne conveyed no information of special significance regarding either the present situation or the future policy in the Transvaal affair. The allusion in general terms to the peace existing between Great Britain and all other nations except the South African Republic is considered too vague to guarantee the existence of cordial relations with Germany and Russia. Scarcely had the Queen's speech been disposed of when the expected storm of criticism burst upon the government. Lord Rosebery said that he would stand by the Cabinet and that the country would do the same, if it would only do something vigorous and effective. Lord Kimberley criticized the administration severely for not discovering the Transvaal's war preparations long ago and preventing or meeting them. Lord Salisbury replied that the secret service fund was too small. It costs money to discover the secrets of governments; the more important the secret, the more costly it is. Other powers spend vast sums and the South African Republic has been known to spend $4,000,000 in one year on its secret service. He is a rash prophet who would undertake to foretell the fortune of the present ministry. Success or failure in the field will have much to do with it, and the discontent at home may become formidable if it can find a leader and can develop a positive policy. But at present one is struck by the fact—and the first week of Parliament confirms the conviction—that there are more people in England who are prepared to criticize the past and present management of things in South Africa than there are who have thought out a positive program to substitute for that of Salisbury and Chamberlain. The opponents of the war now have neither a Gladstone to lead them nor a definite and well-ordered plan to advocate. Until they secure both, the present Cabinet can not stand in any great danger.

Secretary Long suggested, a few weeks ago, that some more satisfactory method ought to be devised for rewarding specially meritorious service in the navy. As the matter stands now, the only reward is promotion. But in a service in which promotion ordinarily proceeds rigidly according to official seniority, a special promotion of one man means a setback for all of those over whom he is promoted. Every naval officer estimates his position according to the number of places between him and the top of the ladder. If one man for conspicuous service is jumped over the heads of twenty others, each of the twenty is set back one place. The twenty may have done their whole duty, but without having an opportunity for conspicuous service. Rewards can, of course, never be bestowed according to absolute merit, but only as opportunities arise in which exceptional merit is exhibited. But it is generally agreed that faithful performance of duty without occasion for brilliant exploits, at least does not deserve punishment, and that is what it means when all rewards are at the expense of those who are not rewarded. The Secretary of the Navy, suggests that distinguished service be rewarded by increased pay or by medals, rather than by promotion.

In the short time during which the Chicago drainage canal has been in operation it has not been determined whether or not it will pollute the water of the Mississippi. The tests are still being made. But it has been shown pretty conclusively that it is going to result in an unexpected lowering of the Chicago River. Few rivers of the world bear more commerce than that foul and turbid stream, and for years there has been agitation for deepening it for the accommodation of the larger lake craft. The chief obstacle was the street railway tunnels, which run under the river and connect the north and south sides of the city. The full flow of water has not yet been turned on. It is estimated that when it is turned on, the level of the river will fall from two to six feet, and the full flow must be turned on to give a sufficient dilution of the sewage, which may not be enough even then. It seems to us to be a good time to deal boldly with the case—lower the tunnels, deepen and widen the channel and make of the river not merely a sewer and a section of Chicago's harbor, but a thoroughfare for ships. It would not be the first river which has been almost made by the hand of man. The Clyde, which makes Glasgow a seaport, owes two-thirds of its width and five-sixths of its depth to artificial processes.

By the decision of the Senate committee, which has been preparing the bill providing for the establishment of a civil government in Porto Rico, it will be recommended that on commerce between the United States and Porto Rico a tariff be levied equal to 25 per cent. of the rate according to the Dingley law. As originally presented to the committee, the bill provided for free trade with the United States. The change was made partly to provide additional revenue for the administration of the civil government of the island, and partly to bring before the courts the important constitutional question involved. The constitution provides that import and export duties shall be uniform in the United States and that no duty shall be levied on interstate commerce. The majority of the committee holds that it is not necessary to extend the provisions of the constitution to our insular possessions. Congress has power, therefore, to establish either free trade or a tariff between Porto Rico and the United States. This is the opinion of the committee, but the courts must decide. It is estimated that the tariff, according to the 25 per cent. arrangement, will yield about $2,500,000 annually. The objects which this bill proposes to accomplish are as follows: To substitute a civil for a military government; to give the natives as large a part in it as is for the best interests of all concerned; to avoid radical changes in laws and courts, while doing away with the most obnoxious features of the Spanish regime; to establish a legislative body to manage local affairs; to enact tariff laws and make other provisions for raising the necessary revenue; to substitute United States currency for the Porto Rican coin now in circulation; to regulate the granting of franchises.

The European political situation just now presents rather more complications than usual. The most striking feature of the past week was the vigorous protest in the Austrian Reichsrath against the increased appropriation for the army. The Emperor wishes to make military preparations that he may be able to help either of the other members of the Dreibund who may chance to need help soon. That, of course, means Germany, for Italy has no prospect of trouble. The protest indicates that, while the Emperor remains true to the Triple Alliance, the Austrian legislators, German as well as Czech, are beginning to consider that they have little to gain and possibly a good deal to lose by it. It costs something to maintain an offensive and defensive alliance with Germany, and the returns from the investment are highly dubious. It seems that France is losing some of her enthusiasm for naval expansion, for the plan which was adopted four years ago and which has been partially carried out has received a set-back by the defect of the naval appropriation bill. Rumors are rife about important steps that Russia is taking to secure an advantage over England while England's hands are tied. Russia's desires in that direction are no secret, but Russian diplomacy moves slowly and the rumors usually run far in advance of the overt act. An expedition, ostensibly scientific, has been loitering for weeks on the borders of Afghanistan, and the loan which Russia made to Persia last week, with the customs receipts of certain Persian ports as security, is considered a step toward Russian domination in Persia. An insurrection among the black regiments at Kartoum makes it appear that Gen. Kitchener and the British troops in the Soudan were withdrawn prematurely. There are not more than 200 white soldiers now in Kartoum. The seriousness of the uprising is still a matter of mere conjecture.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

III. SALVATION: ITS NATURE AND SCOPE.

The brief outline which we gave last week of the nature of sin and its dire consequence on man's present and prospective state brings us to consider the nature and scope of the remedy. It is evident to reason that man would not be left to himself in this helpless and hopeless condition, for with sin permanently triumphant in the world, and all men under its paralyzing power, the purpose of God in man's creation would have been thwarted, and what He designed to be a scheme of vast beneficence would have been a ghastly and melancholy failure. But such a failure of God's plans is inconceivable, because it would involve the unwisdom of man's creation. We must look, therefore, for some way of escape from the awful ravages of sin.

It is from this point of view alone that the term salvation derives its meaning and significance. Without the previous fact of sin there could have been no such word as salvation in its biblical import. Moreover, the nature and scope of the salvation which man needs and must have, if he is to realize the divine intention in his creation, is pretty clearly defined or indicated by the derangement which sin has produced in humanity. Salvation must include the restoration of man to right relations with God. Sin has broken up these relations; it has separated man in his higher or spiritual nature from God, his life-source, and he is said to be, in consequence, "dead in trespasses and sins." Union is life; separation is death. Salvation must effect a union between man and God, or rather, we would say, such a union, with all that is implied therein, is salvation.

But this is stating the case in general terms. Let us now be more specific. Sin, considered as an overt act, is itself the result of antecedent causes. There is always more or less ignorance behind every transgression of divine law; not ignorance, perhaps, of the particular law violated, but ignorance of God—his character and purposes with man—of the nature and disastrous effects of sin, of human nature and and what it really needs to secure happiness. This ignorance, it is true, is often the result of unbelief, as in the case of those Gentiles of whom Paul speaks, who "walk in the v nity of their minds, being darkened in their understanding, alienated from the li'e of God because of the ignorance which is in them, because of the hardening of their hearts." Their alienation is the result of ignorance, and their ignorance is the result of a hardening of the heart, a moral condition in which unbelief thrives. Paul ascribes his own ignorance of Christ during the time he was a persecutor of Christ, to his unbelief, but by no means excuses his ignorance on that account. Unbelief often has its roots in moral causes, and in such cases impenitence is a barrier to faith. To this extent, and in such cases, repentance precedes faith in Christ.

We have seen, too, that sin, in separating between man and God, produces a moral atrophy, i. e., a decay, through nonuse, of the moral faculties. It is a dwarfing, impoverishing, paralyzing, deadening influence on the entire man, physical, intellectual and moral. It has given a wrong bias to life. It has bred evil habits. It has turned the energies and activities of men in the wrong channel. Salvation must include the rectification of all this disorder and derangement of human nature. It is evident from this that salvation is a larger word than we have sometimes been accustomed to think. It is more than reconciliation with Go l. It is more than forgiveness of sin, though the word is sometimes used in this limited sense in the New Testament. Salvation is a process beginning in conversion, advancing through sanctification and culminating at last in glorification. There is a present salvation, there is a salvation in process, and there is a salvation "ready to be revealed at the last time"—the completed process of transfiguration in which man is brought back to the image of God.

It will be seen, therefore, that salvation involves moral enlightenment, faith in Christ, the turning away from sin and the turning of the soul and its energies toward God, the strengthening of the will, the purification of the heart and the process of spiritual development. We trust, too, that it is obvious to the reader, by these reflections, that salvation is bringing man back to his normal relation to God and to his fellowmen from which sin has dislodged him, and where it is possible for him to work out, under God, the noblest development of his being. It is not an unnatural and arbitrary life to which God calls us in the gospel, but it is the only true life for a rational being. Whatever false systems of religion may have in view in their dealings with man God's only end and aim is to deliver him from the dominion of sin, bringing him back into union with Himself, the Source of Life, where he may realize the end for which he was created. To realize this great truth is to be disarmed at once of all prejudice against the religion of the Bible. A true conception of what salvation is and the divine method by which it is to be realized would go far toward dissipating the latent scepticism that is so prevalent in the world to-day. The irrational and unscriptural notion which more or less prevails, that salvation means being put into some place called heaven, and that being lost is being assigned to another place called hell, has done much to engender scepticism in reference to the reality of the distinction between the condition of the saved and the unsaved, and to foster indifference to the claims of the gospel.

More and more men are coming to see that salvation depends on character and not on location. Men are not saved or lost according as they are assigned to this or that place in the future state, but every man goes to his own place, the place for which he has fitted himself by what he is and by what he has done. One who has been brought into right relations with God and whose delight is in doing the will of God would be a saved man wherever he might be placed, while he who is out of harmony with God and with his own higher nature is lost now and would be lost anywhere in God's universe. We cannot take salvation out from under the reign of universal law. There are moral laws as well as physical laws, and the former are as constant in their operation as the latter. Salvation is of grace, through faith, but it is none the less under the operation of divine law.

If now we understand that salvation, in its highest import, includes the restoration of man to divine favor and his tranfiguration into the image of Christ, that it means the rehabilitation of character, and that it is the end of life to work out this salvation, God working in us both to will and to do his good pleasure, we are prepared to consider in our next the source and means of this salvation.

THE PRIVILEGE AND JOY OF GIVING.

The Scriptures teach us to regard giving in this light. It is a grace and not an irksome and painful duty. It is classed with faith, and knowledge, and diligence, and love. Like every other grace it is essentially joyous and brings its own reward. We are urged to give, not grudgingly or of compulsion, for the Lord loves a cheerful giver.

David and his people gave on a magnificent scale. They gave gold and silver and all manner of precious stones and iron and wood and marble in abundance. Then they rejoiced and gave praise to God. They felt that he had highly honored them in accepting their gifts. Their tongues were loosed so that they gave appropriate expression to the emotion in their hearts. The record says, "Then the people rejoiced for that they offered willingly, because of a perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord, and David the king also rejoiced with great joy." Paul told the Corinthians that their liberality "abounded with many thanksgivings unto God." The givers were enriched and ennobled in soul. They blessed God for making them the happy instruments in so good a work. The grateful recipients of their bounty blessed him for putting it into their hearts to relieve their needs. Those who looked on saw that this outpouring of gifts was an evidence that the donors were living in subjection to the gospel and they praised God with them. One of the memorable sayings of our Lord, which no one of the evangelists recorded, is this: "It is more blessed to give than it is to receive." There is no difficulty in believing that this is one of his authentic sayings. It has the ring of divine truth. Nothing can be clearer than that practical beneficence promotes worship and increases joy.

The Scriptures recognize the fact that it does not come by nature to give as the Lord has prospered us. The taint of selfishness is in the blood. Consequently, we are exhorted to cultivate this grace. We are told to honor the Lord with our substance and with the first fruits of our increase. We are told that if we sow bountifully we shall reap also bountifully. The feeling is widespread that the blessedness is in getting and in keeping and not in giving. The spirit of the age commends the man who accumulates largely. We are living in mercenary times. Men are in haste to get rich. On all sides one sees evidence of greed and avarice. Money gives power and consideration and secures respect and honor. "Mammon wins his way where seraphs might despair." It is for this reason that every department of Christian work is in such sore straits for lack of support. Christian people have money enough for every other purpose. It is when they come to give for the Lord's work that they economize. The Disciples of Christ give less than fifty cents each a year for all missionary purposes. It goes with the saying that this is a mere pittance. But very few seem to be distressed about it. At our conventions and in our publications there is no little boasting of what we are doing. The truth is, the facts should alarm us. They ought to drive us to our knees. They should lead us to make confession of our fault and to forsake it.

With most people the thought has never entered their minds that giving is a privilege. On the contrary, they regard it with something of dread. Good men sometimes refuse to attend the services of the church on the day the offering for missions is taken. They try to find some plausible excuse for their absence. They imagine they are sick, or they are fearful they will become sick if they expose themselves on that particular day. Two-thirds of the membership give nothing, and are not at all concerned by their delinquency. They have not learned that there is joy in giving such as no miser or millionaire finds in hoarding. If Christian people everywhere came to look at this question from the divine point of view, they would pour out their offerings in such superabundance that there would be no room to receive them. They would abound in the grace of giving also. Some one has said that what we are looking for and anxiously waiting to see is the conversion of the vast money power of the world to the cause and kingdom and work of Jesus Christ, for that day, when it comes, will be the morning, so to speak, of the new creation.

The churches are asked to make one offering and only one in the year for world-wide missions. The first Sunday in March is the day named for that offering. This year should witness such a gain, both in the number of contributors and in the amounts contributed, as will send a thrill of joy through every missionary on the field and through every friend of the work at home, and will cause the angels of God to rejoice before the throne. We are living in most prosperous times. God is doing great things for us. He is increasing us in numbers and multiplying our resources. We need to remember that "where much is given there much will be required." On the first Sunday in March every church should make an offering and every believer should give according to the measure of the ability which God has given to him. If this is done the day will be one of great gladness. Not only so, but God will be honored and his cause advanced.

Hour of Prayer.

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCH TO THE YOUNG.

(Matt. 19:13,14; John 21:1-17.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 14.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Childhood is the strategic point of life which, if occupied by the church, through Christian truth and training, affords a mighty vantage ground for her future victories.

That is a beautiful picture drawn in the New Testament which has Christ for its central figure, while around about Him are eager parents pressing toward Him with their children in their arms that He may bless them, while the gentle Master holds one of them tenderly in his arms. Near by His disciples are standing with a displeased look on their faces because they feel that the Master is being unnecessarily troubled. Perhaps they felt that He ought to be receiving a deputation of learned scribes and lawyers, or discoursing to them on the high themes connected with his coming kingdom. Their rebuke to the parents for intruding upon Jesus with their children brought from Him those words of ineffable tenderness which have made Him the children's favorite through all succeeding centuries: "Suffer the little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And He laid His hands on them and departed thence."

It is clear that Jesus saw a value in childhood which his disciples did not see. With a diviner insight into human nature than they possessed, He saw the receptiveness of the child-mind and heart to truth and to good impressions, and understood, as we are only beginning to understand now, that the trend or character of one's life is generally determined in childhood. Seeds of truth sown then preoccupy the virgin soil and keep out the noxious seeds of vice. The whole Sunday-school movement and later the Christian Endeavor movement are but carrying out in practical ways the principle enunciated in these words of Jesus. The church was too long in learning that childhood is the strategic point in life that should be early occupied and held by the forces of righteousness.

How this truth emphasizes the supreme value of home training, of Sunday-school work, of caring for orphans and homeless children and everything that looks to the moral and religious training of the young! We are not likely to do this work well, however, until we have something of the Master's appreciation of the sacredness of childhood. "Of such," said he, "is the kingdom of heaven." In the little child's freedom from pride and vain ambition, in its purity of heart, its guilelessness and its teachableness, he recognized those elements which fit one for citizenship in his kingdom. The wisest teachers of the world have been those who have attached the greatest importance to childhood and child-culture. Nothing would surely bring the displeasure of Christ on his church more surely and speedily than the neglect of the young.

It is interesting and very suggestive to note the fact that when the risen Lord was restoring Peter back to fellowship with Him and commissioning him for his great work as an apostle, He said to him, under circumstances of the greatest solemnity and impressiveness, "Feed my lambs!" "Do you love me, Peter?" was his heart-searching question. When Peter has avowed his love, the response was, "Feed my lambs." As if He would say, "You can show your love for me in no other way so acceptably as by feeding my sheep, and especially my lambs—the little ones that are unable to care for themselves."

Is not this what our Lord is saying to His church to-day? "Do you love me, thou Church, which I have purchased with my own blood? Then feed my lambs." Is the church doing its full duty in this respect? Are our homes spiritual gardens where our children may grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Are we giving adequate attention to the religious teaching that is being done in our Sunday-schools? Are we caring for the fatherless and the homeless as Jesus would have us do? These questions are certainly suggested to us by the topic of the evening and they are worthy of our serious consideration.

If we we wish to project our influence into the future, if we wish to live again in lives made nobler by our having lived, we cannot do better than to touch and influence the life of a child. No one has expressed this thought more beautifully than Longfellow:

I shot an arrow into the air.
It fell to the earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to the earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.

But we can so aim the arrow of truth, and so breathe our song into the air, as that they shall surely find lodgment in the child-heart which "long afterward" will reveal the influence of that truth and song.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee for the glory and beauty and the marvelous possibilities of childhood. We thank Thee, Thine only begotten Son came into this world as a little child, and that He has thus sanctified childhood and motherhood forever. May the church learn from the example and teaching of her Lord to place a higher estimate on the value and sacredness of children and give more time and thought to their proper training. Stir up parents to do better home training, and all teachers of the young, whether in the Sunday-school or day school, to give care to the moral instruction imparted to the young under their supervision. And may the children of to-day be so trained for God that the coming generation may witness greater triumphs of righteousness than we are permitted to see now. In Christ's name. Amen!

"Milestones" on life's journey! So birthday anniversaries are frequently designated. That word may do very well for the first half of one's life, but when we cross the half century mark, and the sun of our life, having past the meridian, begins its westering course, it ceases to be applicable. Anniversaries come, then, like telegraph poles when one is on a lightning express train. But when one is homeward bound why should we care how fast the poles seem to go by? Well, the scenery is beautiful along the way, the car is comfortable, friends on board are very pleasant, and there is a good deal of work to be done before we reach our destination. These are some of the reasons why we sometimes wish the conductor would put on the brakes. But no, the train rushes on apparently with accelerated speed as the journey shortens, determined to reach its destination on schedule time.

Has any one ever explained why the years seem so much shorter when we have passed life's meridian? Is it that life grows busier as we grow older? But this is not always so. True, a busy hour is shorter than a leisure one, other things being equal; but other things are often unequal. An hour beside a seriously sick child, waiting for the doctor, seems interminable. So does an hour waiting at a railroad crossing for a train, where there is nothing to read, nothing to see and no one to whom we can talk. A note due in bank in 90 days makes the quarter go by with winged feet—to the man whose name is on the note. Whereas, a wedding three months ahead would probably seem to the interested parties a long time coming. From these facts we deduce the principle that time seems long or short according to what is ahead of us—long if the object is very desirable, short if very undesirable. There are other elements that enter into the problem. We naturally compare time with what we have to do. This is the thought that inspired Longfellow's lines:

"Art is long and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though strong and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to the grave."

But ought we not to be homesick for the heavenly land and anxious for the time to come when this mortality shall be swallowed up of life? No, this is not the healthy, normal condition of life. There are peculiar conditions of life, no doubt, that do make our departure hence seem very desirable. Extreme old age, hopeless disease, inability to enjoy life or to be useful—these often do cause the heart to sigh for home, and for that country whose inhabitants never get sick or grow old. But we are not to expect any such longing to be "absent from the body" while we have health and the strength to carry forward the work that has been committed to us. If God wishes His children to remain here on earth to push forward the interests of His kingdom, would it not be in harmony with His goodness and loving kindness to implant in them such a love of life as would enable them to endure its temptations and trials cheerfully, rather than to be constantly sighing to escape from its burdens? So He has done, and this preference for living in this world until our work is done is no evidence of our unpreparedness for the next. But happy is he who, willing to abide in the body as long as it is God's will, is also ready to depart when the summons comes, and for whom death has lost its terror.

Questions and Answers.

Was Alexander Campbell ever a Baptist?

Referring to our answer to this question in a late number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Bro. N. Calvin writes as follows:

It has been frequently stated that Alexander Campbell was excluded from the Baptist Church. I once heard a minister say, "Alexander Campbell was excluded from the Baptist Church and he went off and started a new church." I noticed a query in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 25th growing out of a statement made by Mr. Fisher, in his history of the Christian Church, that Mr. Campbell and his followers were excluded from the fellowship of the Baptists.

It might be interesting and helpful in the study of "exclusion" to note that Mr. Campbell was never a Baptist, and therefore could not have been excluded from the Baptist Church.

It is a well-known fact that the Campbells were Presbyterians until the beginning of the movement advocated by them. When Thomas and Alexander Campbell were baptized, although it was by a Baptist minister, it was not according to Baptist usage, and was not for the purpose of admitting them into the Baptist Church. See Memoirs of A. Campbell by Richardson, Vol. 1., pp 396–399. See also pp 410, 428.

By reading carefully The Memoirs pp436–441 of Vol. I, we learn, not only from Mr. Richardson, but from Mr. Campbell's own statement, quoted from Harbinger for 1348, p. 344, that he was not a Baptist—did not unite with the Baptist Church—that at no time did he have any such intention.

We learn further that when the Brush Run Church, the independent church with which the Campbells were identified, united with the Redstone Baptist Association, it was more than a year after the Campbells had been immersed. It was done as a matter of expediency, after much discussion and upon stipulated conditions made by the Brush Run Church.

Milwaukee. Wis.

It is true that Mr. Campbell went into the Baptist Association with his church, and that he never subscribed to all the Baptist tenets. He was, however, regarded as connected with the Baptist denomination for a time, in spite of the fact that he and his church never endorsed all doctrines held by most Baptists. This would be possible in a religious body having the congregational polity. See article by C. L. Loos on this subject in our last year's historical series, the best statement of the matter we have seen.

Since the adoption of the "individual communion cups" at this place there seems to be a great deal of anxiety among some of the brethren of the state as to the "orthodoxy" of the congregation worshiping at Palmyra. Now I want to say to all such, "Be not overly anxious about US." Jesus said, "By their FRUITS ye shall know them." So by this standard we ask to be measured, and not by the color of our tie, the way we part our hair nor the number of cups we use at the communion table. Yes, we believe it is in harmony with Christ's example to say, "These individual cups are the New Testament in my blood." When Jesus spoke of "the cup" we believe he meant what was in the cup, and not the CUP per se. Now we believe that the most Christlike thing we can say to these brethren in regard to the purchase and use of the "individual cups" is, "Go thou and do likewise." Are we right?

L. J. Marshall.

Palmyra, Mo.

This is a matter concerning which each congregation must exercise its liberty in Christ. If any church believes that there are hygienic or other good reasons for adopting the individual cup method of observing the communion it has a perfect right to adopt that method, and a number of our best churches have adopted it. We see much to commend it.

Current Religious Thought.

The following from the Sunday-school Times gives the proper turn to the often unprofitable question: "Can unbelievers be saved?"

When, before Christ, there shall be gathered all the nations, all the outside world, many shall be welcomed by him as his friends who have not known him as he is. The test will then be as to the spirit in which a representative of the Father has been, received in whatever form or guise he appeared. That test, only God, as manifest in Christ, can apply to the soul. Let us be grateful that he alone is the Judge. Yet our duty to proclaim and make known Jesus Christ to all the world is none the less an obligation because of this view of the final Judgement. As Dr. William M. Taylor said, "The question is not, Can the heathen be saved unless they hear of Christ? but, Can we be saved unless we proclaim Christ to them?"

Robert J. Burdette handles the question of Sunday observance as follows in the Christian Union:

And so, my boy, you were too tired, after a week of hard work to go to church Sunday morning, and mounted your wheel and went on a "century run" for a rest? And got home at 7 P. M. so dead tired that you couldn't go to church in the evening? And, defending your way of spending the day, you quote the words of the Savior, "The Sabbath was made for man."

So it was, my son; so it was. So was the buzz-saw. And not two years ago I saw a man with every one of his fingers and a part of his thumb gone from his right hand, just because he made wrong use of a good buzz-saw. The buzz-saw was in its place, doing good work for man, to which end it was made. It was fulfilling its destiny. It was doing the thing to which it was appointed. It didn't move out of its place a hair's breadth to do the man harm. It just kept on "sawing wood" and the man couldn't—or rather didn't—wait until the buzz-saw was through its work. He transgressed it ("transgressus"—"trans," across; "gradi," step—to step across): he reached over it, when he should have gone around it. And when he drew back his hand, which he did immediately, he didn't have the thing he reached for, and he didn't have the fingers he reached with. He had not only gained something, but he had lost something. And, more than that, he had lost something that he will never get back again in this world.

Ah, my boy, I don't want to shut you up in a dingy boarding-house, a hot room, the dusty city, and the smelly, dirty streets, all the time. But when you go out into God's country, for God's fresh air, and rest of body and peace of mind, don't run over God's Sunday to get these things. He has them for you; no one else can give them to you. But you don't want to trample on some of his greatest blessings to get the lighter ones. I have no more objection to your riding to church than you have to my walking on Sunday. If I could ride as well as you do, I shouldn't walk unless I preferred it, which I certainly do. But you didn't ride to church. You passed the doors of three or four nice country churches on your spin, and never so much as paused at one of them. You didn't go out for fresh air and rest and peace of mind. You went out because you were too lazy to go to church, or too selfish, or too mean, or just because you didn't want to. And the meanest thing in the whole business is, that, after running away from church, after denying God the reverence and love and worship on his own day which is his due, after riding over the Bible, you try to sneak a passage out of it to justify your treachery. Ah! my boy, not half a dozen verses away from the one you quoted you will find what use the Lord of the Sabbath made of it for man. Do you use the day for man as he did, and you may write that text across your heart, and have it graven on the handlebars of your wheel, and ride a thousand miles every Sunday if you can, and God and man will bless you for it. But don't go racing and chasing over the whole country-side all Sunday, having a jolly good time all by yourself and all for yourself, and then come back quoting Scripture to prove that you were on a missionary tour all the time.

"The Sabbath was made for man;" indeed it was; and so was Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. And it does seem to me that, as God made all of them, he ought to have a goodly portion of at least one of them. "The Sabbath was made for man." So was corn, but not to make into whisky. So was the sea, but not for piracy. The Sabbath and corn and the sea were made for man, not for the devil. Remember that, my boy.

A troubled correspondent, who has lost the faith of her childhood and complains that a "blind faith" is no longer possible receives this answer in the Interior:

How do I know that this simple faith and confidence is right? I know it in the same way that I know that any right thing is right—because it works right. That was a right ship that took us through an arctic storm last summer—it worked right, did that which we trusted it to do. The lady says that it is no longer possible to exercise a blind faith. Why, bless her heart, she has got to—she cannot help herself. That was a rocky and unchartered coast where the storm came down upon us last summer. The air was full of salt spray. We could not see anything. We might strike a rock. The machinery under the awful stress might break down. The gale might drive us on the coast. We exercised a blind faith and went to bed. What else could we do? How could we help ourselves? How can she? The whole subject is as simple as a baby's prayer. If we trust God he is not going to disappoint us. An honest man or woman would not betray a trust. Can any one imagine God to be a traitor to those who trust him? Such an idea is unthinkable. Suppose I had gone up and down the ship fuming and conjuring up visions of rocks and shipwrecks, and stood tearing my hair as I looked out gloomily upon the angry sea; what would the officers and sailors have said? They would have looked at me contemptuously and said, "That old man is going crazy." Tell that dear lady that we are all in the same boat, and that the very best thing we can do is to be sensible.

CONCERNING AN AGENT FOR OUR EDUCATIONAL BOARD.

R. P. SHEPHERD.

Much has been written, more will yet be written, concerning the condition of our educational institutions and the imperative need of heeding their words of admonition and appeals for aid. The matter is forced into more general attention by the insistent request of the Educational Board that a representative of education be sent into the field by the brotherhood at large, and that the necessary expense of this functionary be borne by the A. C. M. S., out of its general fund. That this was referred to an impartial committee for consideration does not free the church from the necessity of giving this request thoughtful attention. Should this committee report favorably at the next convention the delegates in attendance should be prepared for intelligent action.

To this end it is highly expedient that all possible phases of the issues involved should be brought forward for discussion.

In your issue of January 4 Bro. J. L. Darsie gives emphatic statement to our educational needs and the case is in no way overstated by the writer. His article is directly in line of all former ones which have appeared recently, so far as my knowledge goes, in that it deals with the difficulty from the standpoint of the college directly, and from the standpoint of the church only as that is affected by the college. This is certainly proper, for it is the duty of the educators to present the problem from their angle of vision. On the other hand, however, when the matter comes before the convention for decision it must, of necessity, be considered from the standpoint of the church. The church is asked to pay for the services of an educational agent. It is further proposed to place his time at the disposal of the Educational Board, that he may, under such direction, represent before the church the interests of the colleges. It will doubtless be proposed that, since the church is to pay for the services of such an agent, he shall represent before the church her own interests in education, and be the recognized channel through which the church is to be brought to the fullest realization of her opportunities and possibilities.

We here assume that the church has interests in education which are not identical with the interests of the separate educational institutions. This point has not been discussed, adequately at least, and yet it is a vital one in view of the proposed action. It certainly challenges attention that the truth or fallacy of the assumption may be discerned. If false it may be dismissed summarily. If true it should have great weight before the convention in whatever action it may take on the request of the Educational Board. If the position is a valid statement of existing facts it will affect in a far-reaching way the future action of that board, as well as all our educational activities.

It cannot be denied that the colleges are competitors in a field where denominational zeal, private enterprise and state pride often meet. State, church and private school must bid alike for public patronage. The sphere of patronage for the church college is comparatively limited. The standard of her work and character of instruction must be such as will give her a place in her own competitive field. Burdened by inadequate finances the church college is often in sore straits. It is not a pleasant commentary on educational conditions in religious America that one of the essential requirements in a college president is closely akin to that which marks a successful auctioneer—he must be a money-raiser.

With this life-and-death struggle of the college the church has little sympathy. When not altogether ignorant of it she views it, for the most part, with complacent indifference. A comparatively small proportion of our young people are being educated in our own schools. They are going to other institutions because ours do not furnish the kind of culture which they have a right to expect. The educational interests of the church are therefore identical neither with those of our separate colleges nor with the aggregate interests of our colleges. Bible Chairs, Bible Colleges, Divinity Houses, Normals, and Negro Schools attest the truth of that.

It is plainly incumbent on us to more clearly apprehend what are the church's interests in educational affairs before putting into the field an agent to represent them. It will not do to assume that the colleges having representation on the Educational Board are all that are entitled to such advantage as may be gained by the work of the proposed educational agent. Were that true the burden of his support ought beyond question to be met by the colleges so represented. If he is to be an agent of the church the whole matter assumes a different light.

In considering the interests of the church we can mention but a few of the more important ones. Chiefest of all, perhaps, is the church's care for the education of her ministry. That those who are to proclaim for her the gospel of Christ shall be given all needed and proper preparation for their work is vital. Christ gave not the great commission to uneducated men. Before his work was given into their charge he sent them to be instructed by the world's greatest Master—himself. Only when their course of training was complete did he say to them, "Go, preach, baptize and teach, and I will be with you alway."

The church cannot depend on family pets, who are carefully shielded from the world's hard knocks that they may be "prepared for the ministry." Neither will it do to depend on men who are willing to sell themselves as parrots to the church, glibly rehearsing the precepts of the class room and lacking wit to discern whether an old truth be not an old error, or a new truth merely an old falsehood with a new bib neatly tucked beneath its smiling countenance. On the contrary, the church does depend on men who are, first of all, men—honest men who feel all that men feel to whom they minister; men of culture—not that false kind which smacks of intellectual aristocracy, but that which brings men more widely in sympathy with more men and constantly enlarges their field of vital touch; men of large minds as well as large sympathies, who are not afraid to open their windows toward every point of view, but who are, withal, so firmly anchored in the Word that they may not be "tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine." Some heads apparently have room for but five sermons: one on each of the cardinal doctrines of Faith, Repentance, Confession, and two on Baptism. Such men have a place, but it never has been, is not, and can never be a place of leadership.

Hardly second to this interest in her ministry is that which has to do with the education of the great mass of the church's children who never expect to preach. For these the church demands all available opportunities for the culture of body and mind. Perhaps unreasonably, religious surroundings and desirable spiritual conditions are made subordinate to the teaching ability of the faculty and the appliances at their disposal for imparting knowledge. If the college has not a faculty which is an inspiration to the students toward scholarship and adequate educational equipment, she will probably plead in vain the sacrifices she undergoes, her glorious past and a multitude of seductive motives. The church is slow to respond. She had no general interest in the founding of the school, and its growth has been made possible by the heroic zeal of a few. Right at hand the church finds, perhaps, the state school of desired grade, and its equipment is limited only by the ability of its president as a legislative lobbyist, tuition cheap as the cheapest, and a reasonably good faculty. Or easily accessible is a Christian school which has had the long and liberal patronage of a denomination that has made a business of endowing its colleges. Denominational tenets are not forced on any, even in our own colleges, and particularly free from religious constraint is the purely literary department.

A third interest is worthy of note. The church demands that the Bible shall be taught to all who may be induced to study it. The unexpectedly generous response to the request of the C. W. B. M. for Bible Chair endowment removes this from the bounds of controversy.

Still further, there is a constantly growing class of young men who demand all that scholarship may have in store for inquiring minds, quite regardless of the ipse dixit of anybody. Whether these men "finish at Yale," at Mr. Rockefeller's plant "on the Midway," or at Lexington, is of no consequence so far as our present purpose is concerned. These men represent a legitimate demand from within the church.

It must be conceded that the church has interests in education which our schools and colleges have not met and which, under existing circumstances, they cannot meet. The painful fact stares at us constantly that by our ultra-congregationalism and fear of some usurping ecclesiasticism we have made united action all but impossible. The General Convention of the A. C. M. S. is the only avenue we have for the expression of common needs and united attempts to meet them. For many years the trustees and presidents of the colleges have sought to win from the church the united support which their work deserves. Schemes of divers sorts and fashions have been vainly worked, and plan after plan has proved abortive.

With our colleges a crisis is imminent. If the church does not realize it our educators do, and we might do well to listen to their voice. The sacrifices are nearly numbered. But two courses seem possible to them, and on one or the other of these we must soon enter. One is, the colleges must cease attempting to keep pace with advancing educational requirements, drop out of the competitive field in general literary training, confine their work to the education of men who expect to preach and make Bible Chair work their specialty. The other is, the church must lay hold with strong hand on the educational problems which confront us and make our schools and colleges worthy competitors with the best in the land.

The first course is less difficult by far, and cheaper. This course will save us much perplexity in arranging the details of accumulating and equitably administering the funds which may be entrusted to us. By it we will save the expense of another agent in the field. We will avoid opposition from some who, from their position, should be the first to favor some such plan. We will save much to our pockets, whether we save self-respect or not.

Should the second course commend itself to the judgment of the church as gathered in convention it will involve hard work, hard praying, hard paying. It may involve the complete reorganization of the Educational Board.

Called to act as field secretary for that board some three years ago a few weeks' active experience served to convince me profoundly of at least two facts: First, that the Educational Board had a field of usefulness second to none in its possibilities. Its message, Education, is both fundamental in character and popular in reception. By its very nature it would tend to increase all missionary offerings. Second, that on the basis of its present organization its outlook for any large measure of usefulness is utterly hopeless. It does not represent all the colleges nor the general interests of the church. All it could do was to work against the opposition of some high authority, who should have been its friends, and to pray for the way to be opened for better things.

The plan of putting an agent of the church into the field who shall represent before the church her own interests in education, his salary to be paid by the A. C. M. S. as our only channel of united action, the Educational Board to be reorganized carefully by the convention or by the acting board, so that all our educational interests may be represented in its deliberations—such a plan, despite its difficulties, may commend itself to many of the brethren. Earnestly and dispassionately this whole subject should be canvasssed before the convention gathers in Kansas City. Why may we not aim to accomplish something practical in this neglected part of our work, and not allow the whole thing to be crowded out of the convention or emphatically "sat upon" within it?

THE LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF A PREACHER'S LIFE.

ALLAN B. PHILPUTT.

In many respects the preacher's life is an easy one. The notion that as a class we are overworked and hard pressed, while it is sometimes a very useful fiction, is none the less a fiction. When the preacher falls ill it is spoken of as his health "giving way," but another simply "get sick." The one, to judge from the subtle implication of the phrase, is brought low by arduous labors and anxieties; the other, for all we know, from eating pork and pastry.

Our failure in many duties is excused for lack of time. Would it be too much to ask the brethren how many weddings or invitations to dinner they have missed for the same reason?

We cheat ourselves into thinking that we are busy, and we are put to it now and then, I will admit, but it is because we waste so much time in a kind of fussy, busy idleness. We sleep late, attend committee meetings and go to all sorts of useless gatherings where men talk away hours and hours of good daylight. If we would have more of the spirit of an up-to-date business man it would be well.

Preaching is only hard for the man who can't preach. The pastoral ministries of the church will never be irksome to lovers of their kind. It would be foolish, of course, to say that a preacher's life is all smooth sailing, that he never tires, and that he does not sometimes envy men of other callings their exemption from the peculiar and ill-defined duties that fill his own.

The initiative of the ministry is made easy while the lawyer, the physician and the business man must win their patrons in the face of a masterful competition. The preacher is constantly shown a certain consideration denied to other callings. In proportion to the time and opportunity which we have and the indulgence shown us by the people, we do not average up, I think, to what they have a right to expect. We do not have as a class the intellectual grasp of the people's real problems that we ought to have. We do not exercise the influence over life that our position warrants. We do not cultivate the grace and charm of manner, the fine sympathy and courtesy toward all, that make us interesting and helpful to the best. Society expects an equivalent for what it gives. If we are granted half rates and make no recompense, we shall some day go on half rations.

The first bright spring day of a preacher's career, long drawn out and beautiful, is his college course or period of preparation. The academic life is easy, delightful, narrowing. Students are not face to face with the world as it is. The congenial atmosphere in which they move is of their own creation. The book that states their problem gives also its solution. The teacher that asks the question will answer it. The competitions are not of the merciless, fight-to-the-finish kind. I am not a stranger to the arduous side of college life, and I do not mean to depreciate it. The thing which one does there is so important, the equipment which one gets is so valuable, that I would say, Sacrifice everything else for it. There is no nearer approach on this earth to that personal contact which the Master permitted his disciples to enjoy. And as Peter and John doubtless in after years remembered with delight the Galilean days, so when the burden is heavy and the heart is weary, memory will find some gleams of cheer in recalling the old college joys. Much more: the scholarly taste there acquired will afford a refuge and solace when one may delve into the old mines for precious treasure. Such are the paradoxes of our nature that now and then an essay of Emerson or Bacon is more refreshing than a sermon by Bushnell or Beecher, and certain chapters of Plato satisfy us better than the Gospel of St. John. To read an ode of Horace or a few pages of the Memorabilia occasionally makes one glad that he went to school when the fellows didn't know any better than to study Latin and Greek. The lights and shadows of a preacher's life begin with his preparation for his life work. What enthusiasm he has in his studies, what relish for men and books what inspirations and visions! No matter if it does develop some foibles, heresies, dreams of greatness never to be realized, the university stands to-day unimpeached as the best witness to truth and the noblest expression of the democratic spirit.

There is even yet in some communities, a lingering predjudice against the "college-bred" preacher. The stolid, sullen, persistent wisdom of the people in not quickly capitulating to him is to be commended. Let him first prove himself. If he be truly God's gentleman and have "the root of the matter in him" he will soon be master of the situation. Is it confessing too much to say that perhaps the majority of college men find it necessary to revise their estimate of themselves after a period of contact with the world?

Those who climb up some other way have no advantage here. They get the same disease and rarely recover. Men of culture and broad sympathies often seem to be defeated in this matter-of-fact world of ours, but in the end their victory is sure. There is much to be learned from the plain people. If there is lack of touch and appreciation at first, the wide-awake preacher soon gets his cue and the little shadow is gone. Time passes, some good measure of success has come, and behold, a new sort of self-consciousness arises and one is shocked and disgusted to find within himself a spirit quite the opposite of that implied in the apostolic injunction which says, "In honor preferring one another." The true man applies the heroic treatment at once. And let it be said that if there is occasionally a marplot and a nuisance among the ministry they are as a body the most generous men on earth in their praise of one another. No one who is unable to put self in the background and identify himself completely with the fortunes of his cause should enter this holy calling. When one has driven the last vestiges of the old Adam out of his nature he is then prepared for that rare joy of a preacher's life—the fellowship of his brother ministers. And is it not good cheer and uplift? We should go often to national gatherings, church congresses and summer meetings. You will hear no better talk anywhere than in a company of refined, educated and consecrated ministers of the gospel. Another joy of a preacher's life—and it is a great joy—is to know that he has the love and confidence of a community of people. The children are taught to respect him, the sick look forward to his coming, and the dying ask to hear for the last time the accents of his prayers. The troubled come to him as their best friend. He is the priest of hundreds of people. How wonderful it all is! Would that we could be more worthy of such things.

There is one shadow over many a preacher's home which I often think ought not to be there, and yet perhaps it is best that it should. I refer to the matter of provision for old age. He wants to give his children the best advantages he can—as good as other people's children have. He wants to make home as attractive as his neighbors' about him. He must appear well dressed, keep well informed, maintain a pretty wide benevolence, and occasionally move. We have fire insurance, but a preacher rarely burns out. Why not start a "move insurance?"

But upon the whole, looking at it simply from the material standpoint, the life of a true preacher of the gospel has far more sweet than bitter. He must make some sacrifices, of course. If he is enamored of learning he must give that up, for it is exceedingly rare that a minister of the gospel who does his work well has also the time and genius left to become an exact scholar in the higher ranges of investigation. If he loves to accumulate money, he must give that up also, for it is incompatible with his calling. But all fields are his, all the kingdoms of this world—science, art, letters, life. Other men burrow after truth, working in silent laboratories, traveling over leagues of sea and ice, or keeping their vigils with the stars; it is his to use and enjoy. The sermon comes from the Bible, of course, but the drapery and adornment of it may come from the ends of earth.

And has he no joy in the visions of his own soul as a prophet of God? Can he read the burning, flowing words of Israel's seers and bards and not himself be touched with the divine afflatus? Is he not in the line—far off it may be—of those faithful ones who were to "teach others also?" Is not his the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world?" Surely, a preacher may sometimes be caught up to the third heaven and see things which it is not lawful to utter. When Dr. Hodge, of Princeton—son of the great Dr. Charles Hodge—died a few years ago, the students put this motto in flowers upon his coffin: "He opened unto us the Scriptures." This is the mission and joy of the preacher, to open unto the people the Scriptures; and to many the still greater pleasure of opening the beautiful gate which stands before the temple of life.

AS THINGS HAVE APPEARED TO ME.

A. B. JONES.

The Bible is not the same book to me now that it was in former years. When a youth I felt toward the Bible as if it had been written by the finger of God—written, printed and bound in heaven and handed down to earth by an angel. To me every word in the Bible was God's Word. Its whole arrangement into books from Genesis to Revelation, into chapters and verses, capitals, small letters, punctuation points, was divine.

About the time I was turning out of my teens into manhood the Bible Union Revision was being agitated. I heard our preachers talk about the necessity of a better translation of the Scriptures. I then caught the idea that the Bible, as we had it, was not made in heaven, but upon earth; that man wrote the Bible, and to my astonishment, that they did not write it in English, but in some old dead languages—Hebrew and Greek; that it was written, not upon paper, but upon scrolls made of the bark of trees or the skins of animals; that these several books of the Bible were written by different men, at different times, in different countries and in different languages, and originally thrown out upon the world as seperate tracts, with no view whatever to ever being gathered up and put together into one book and called the Bible. I learned that uninspired men got together and consulted and decided which of these numerous tracts were inspired of God and which were not; and that uninspired men arranged these tracts into one large volume, and divided them into chapters and verses, and called the book, Bible. I learned further that this Bible had been written, rewritten, copied and recopied over and over, again and again, and that by uninspired men; that it had been translated again and again from the old, dead languages into our English by uninspired men. All these facts, and others not mentioned, burst upon me with a flood of light. I got a new idea into my head—that there is necessarily a human element in the Bible, and that I must look out and separate the wheat from the chaff, the divine from the human. At first this was a shock that unsettled me in my faith in the Bible as being God's Word. But I struggled on until I got myself adjusted to this new conception of the Scriptures. I still hold on to my Bible as, if not being God's Word, at least containing God's Word; as having a preponderance of the divine over the human in it.

The smoke of this my first battle between faith and doubt, between intelligence and ignorance in me, had scarcely cleared away when the higher criticism makes its appearance. Now there are not only words and phrases, sentences and verses in my Bible that are really no part of the inspired Word of God, but whole paragraphs, chapters, sections and even books that must be sifted out with the chaff. That many of these books were not written by the men I had supposed wrote them, nor were they written at the time usually assigned to them. Another shock is experienced by my spirit of veneration and reverence for my old Bible. Another and larger battle is to be fought between my faith and doubt, between my intelligence and ignorance. I am glad I had the first battle first, which I now see was a mere skirmish. I now recall the anxiety and trepidation then experienced, the apprehension and disquietude that beset and upset me then. At the same time I recall the fact that I survived that first onslaught and found myself both wiser and stronger after the battle than before it. My Bible was to me a more intelligent book, and my faith in it was a more intelligent faith, and consequently a stronger faith. With this recollection I feel a degree of confidence and hopefulness that this second engagement will not be a Waterloo; that these higher and more destructive critics will not rob the Christian of his Bible nor of his Savior.

> "Truth, crushed to earth, will rise again;
> The eternal years of God are hers;
> While error, wounded, writhes in pain,
> And dies amid her worshipers."

Christ Jesus our Lord says: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Let the battle go on. Let the critics do their best. Let the chaff be all sifted out and scattered to the four winds. The wheat will be all the cleaner and sweeter and healthier for it. Let the human elements in the revealed truth of God be all pointed out and eliminated. Christianity will be all the brighter and and better for it. I am glad we have men of ability on both sides of this qnestion. Glad that we have a progressive and a conservative force among us. Most of us are not capable of taking a leading part in these erudite discussions. Experts must work in this field. Specialists are in demand here. The most of us can only look on and see the fur fly! For myself I will say that I am neither a conservative nor a progressionist in theory, but I am both practically. I want the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help me God!

I am willing for a full, free, fair investigation of the records of history, both sacred and profane, and of all facts evidential in the case. And I have an abiding faith that the religion of the Bible will pass the ordeal unscathed. I understand this to be substantially the position of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Can any intelligent, truth-loving man afford to occupy any other position?

I have sometimes thought the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST did not put his foot down as quick and as strong as he ought; but then others, I have thought, put the foot down too quick and too strong. But after all this is only my opinion; may be I was right in both cases; may be I was wrong in both cases.

"Let us have peace;" not the peace of the grave, but the peace of intellectual and moral activity, the peace of religious freedom, the peace that comes of a victory for truth, "the peace that passeth all understanding."

USES OF THE RELIGIOUS PAPER—III.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

The religious paper is the mightiest of all forces making for the unity of the church. As it has power to do what both idolatry and ritualism have failed to accomplish, so it is the sovereign force to effect what creeds have failed to do. It prevents forever that provincialism of thought which, ever widening, results at last in separation, just as dialects grow into separate languages. The great unitizers of the world are steam, electricity and the printing press. The first two re-enforce the last, and this is the mightiest union force ever forged. Creeds are not needed to keep off heresy; the religious press will take care of that, and it is mightily undoing the divisive work of the older creeds. What should not live it will chase down and smite with Thor's hammer, and what should live it will crown and no man can hinder. The religious press is the living bond of union of a great people. It is doing more for Christian union than all other forces combined. The Civil War tore asunder some of the American churches; the religious paper is the surgeon after the battle healing these wounds with ointment of sympathy.

Let him who takes no religious paper cease forever talking about Christian union. He is turning his back on its mightiest agency, and has yet to learn its primary lessons. Christian union is not doctrinal sameness. Your views may correspond precisely with those of twenty millions of people; but if you know and care nothing about them, there is no union. Pitiful is the plea for Christian union with the man of narrow sympathies, who sits in his little den and calls all men to come to him. Better unite with your own brotherhood before calling on other people to unite with you! Union rests on communion, and the larger communion comes through the religious paper. It is the Eucharist of the larger brotherhood. Fellowship is not identity of belief, but fellow-feeling, and fellow-feeling grows out of fellow-meeting. The religious paper is the hand-shake, the smile and the greeting word of a million brothers. The avant-courier of Christian union is love. But you can never love across denominational lines until you first love across local church lines, and the web of love is woven by the swiftly-flying shuttles of intercourse. The religious paper broadens sympathy and greatens spiritual character and fits you for a unit in that great spiritual brotherhood where all shall be one.

This is not mere philosophy. Go to the man who has read a broad, Christian-spirited religious paper for twenty years, and then compare him with the man who has read no such paper, and mark the difference in breadth, in interest, in sympathy, in depth of religious feeling.

And now, how long shall we be indifferent to these things? How long shall we sleep while the Master is passing by? How long shall we dream when every hour is making history? and with us what history! We speak of Christian hospitality and quote, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these;" but the religious paper is not one of the least, but one of the mightiest and most blessed, and yet we take it not in! How long shall we continue to trifle in this swift age, and learn not its lessons? The last year we count the most prosperous in our history; and yet only about one-fourth of our churches gave anything for home missions! Prosperous! It was shameful failure. The Christian spirit is the missionary spirit. Where is the world-love of the 800,000 of our people who gave not a cent for the conversion of our vast empire? It was only because we did not see, that we did not weep at the great convention. It was only low ideals that let us rejoice over our shameful little showing. And that convention was—such as it was—only the track of light of our religious papers. How many were there who read no church paper? Can any one doubt that, with a religious paper in every family, our showing for the year would have been multiplied by three? Our indifference to this matter is either a wretched blindness or a fearful sin. The greatest power of the greatest age stands at our door and knocks, and we go about our trifles and say, No. Not stars in our crowns, but souls required at our hands, will be the revelation of the Judgment, if we continue to blink this vital question. We talk of converting the world, but vast multitudes of our own people need converting to the spirit of Christ; and the evangelist for this work is the religious paper. Where it goes, spiritual vitality rises, money flows for missions and hearts grow warm to every good work. The last great convention was its miracle, known and read of all men. Let him that hath ears to hear, hear the thunder of this great lesson.

Ponder these facts, get on your knees, and then answer the question, What is my duty?

To My American Brothers and Sisters.

Dear Friends of the American Churches of Christ:—The admiration excited in my mind by the magnificent spectacle I had the privilege of witnessing at the Cincinnati Jubilee Convention will never be forgotten. Neither will the kindness I received wherever I went ever pass from grateful remembrance. Personal participation in the American hospitality, which is so famous, is a happy privilege. I do not think I could make a better return than I now attempt by this appeal. We Disciples of Christ do not wish to exist merely as a mutual admiration society. We want to stir each other to still greater efforts than have yet been attempted, in order that success may be achieved beyond all that has hitherto been accomplished.

I have since returning to England been pondering over the almost unspeakable possibilities implied by what the convention revealed. The world has seen no such a sight. No one body of Christians ever produced such a display, or gathered such a host of the Lord's soldiers in review. This is what I have been telling our friends in England. Now, will not a new epoch of enterprise be boldly inaugurated?

There is a law ever in operation in nature which applies still more vitally in the realm of grace. Philosophers call it the law of the metamorphosis of tissue. Life is the action of organic functions. But this action can only be sustained by constant waste and constant repair. Generous expenditure and corresponding replenishing are alike essential to vital activity. This is a physiological law; it is as truly a psychological law. It is of divine ordination.

Brethren, here we have the condition on which you will grow to be a far mightier people. We must not selfishly aim at the mere conservation of forces, nor must we be solicitous of economizing resources. I was constantly told in America by its ardent citizens that the distribution of wealth was the glory of the land. I saw that it was so. I saw that the congestion which curses other nations was not afflicting the United States, and my heart rejoiced that the conditions were so different from those of many other lands. Therefore I felt that we in England might both congratulate our American friends on the bountiful favors thus providentially poured on them, and also venture fraternally to exhort them to consider anew the magnificent scope which lies before the Churches of Christ in the states.

England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland afford a wonderful field for missionary enterprise. Forty millions of people are to be reached with our plea if it be proclaimed. Ireland, the country which gave birth to Alexander Campbell, waits to hear this ancient, hallowed, apostolic gospel. It should have a missionary. Will you make the sacrifices needful for commissioning one? Scotland is the most religious country in the world; but it is the most steeped in whisky, for its popular religion is now a casehardened and outworn Calvinism. The Scotch people want something new, and that new thing they need is the old gospel, which is the only everlasting novelty on earth, old and new as the sunshine, ancient and yet as fresh as the air we breath each morning.

The struggles of our missionaries in England are beginning to be crowned with success. It seems to me, brought as I was out of the Babylon of sectism by your missioneries who came a few years ago to England, only yesterday since the very commencement of this work in Britain, and now we have a noble cluster of churches which will multiply and ramify and send forth a multitude of missionaries in proportion as you help us over the battles which we have to fight during the next few years.

Your work on the continent of Europe is in its brief history a realistic romance. As if by magic in Scandinavia vigorous young churches are springing up. And in the darkest lands of idolatry noble emissaries from your American churches and from our own also have already laid down their lives with holy joy. The more you devote to this heavenly crusade the greater will be your growth and progress at home. You are setting free thousands of slaves from bondage. You are emancipating your oppressed sisters and turning many a children's inferno into an earthly paradise. When Dr. Paton was in England he told how he used sometimes in his mission field to see a man walking beside his wife. The poor woman would be carrying a very heavy load, under which she staggered, while he only carries a bamboo rod, with which to cruelly beat her if she should fall. That is an emblem of the loads you are lifting from burdened slaves of sin and all its awful concommitants.

The time of special offerings is at hand. May thousands of hearts thrill with resolution to devote to the great Master such a tribute as shall show that the aspirations elicited by the splendid convention were not in vain. W. DURBAN.

Our Budget.

—Read our missionary articles this week.

—Now is the time to gird ourselves for the great annual offering to Foreign Missions.

—The greatest theme in the world is the world's evangelization. Preach on it.

—It is also the greatest work in the world, and the man or church that engages in it shares in its greatness.

—The period of great meetings still continues. Let the good work go on, but see to it that it is thorough.

—The editor is grateful for appreciative notices of his articles on "Some Revival Truths," and would be glad if any of our evangelists would send him a list of themes which they have found most successful in winning men to Christ.

—The Central Christian Church, this city, had a delightful visit from W. A. Humphrey, corresponding secretary of the Oklahoma Missionary Society, who spoke in the morning on the condition of things in the territory and the rapid growth of our cause there. He is the missionary of the Central Church which pays $600 towards his salary. We were glad to learn that the Disciples of Christ are in the lead in that promising field.

—The President of the United States by a special committee has been personally invited to attend one of the sessions of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York City in April,and now has the matter under advisement.

—B. H. Roberts, who was denied a seat in Congress because of his polygamous life, has been arrested for the same offense on his return to Salt Lake City. This is another illustration of that old saying, "Out of the fryingpan into the fire," or words to that effect, except that the jump was not of his own volition.

—The front page of the Southern Evangelist, Atlanta, Georgia, has been given to the editorial management of C. P. Williamson and is to be called Our Scrap Bag. Brother Williamson became familiar with this department heading when editor of the Apostolic Guide and will feel at home in the further display of its contents to his readers. We not only see many familiar names in the Southern Evangelist, but also the indications of a live, energetic, well-edited religious journal.

—This office has knowledge of one of our brethren, now past 80 years of age, who has a Bible published in 1631, that he would like to sell to some collector of rare old books at the highest possible price paid for such antiquities. The brother is a faithful preacher, though he has not preached regularly for some years; is under the burden of debt and is in need of the necessaries of life and would be greatly helped by a fancy price for this book. He once had some property, but has lost everything and writes that he would like to find some way to pay some of his debts before he dies. If any one knows of a place where he could dispose of this book at a price he might be willing to accept for it, which we do not now know, they will confer a favor on a worthy brother by addressing this office.

—In answer to repeated inquiries we are glad to announce that the Christian Publishing Co. is bringing out, in book form, the leading papers of the First Congress of the Disciples of Christ, which met in St. Louis last year. A re-examination of these papers, as their proofs have passed through our hands, has convinced us more than ever of their great value, and of the importance of putting them in permanent form. The work will be ready for sale before the Indianapolis Congress.

—One of the worst criticised men on this continent will be Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, after the end of the week beginning March 13th. There will probably be some political articles in his daily. "Why, would Jesus write about politics?" one class of critics will exclaim. There will probably be toleration for different religious views. "Would Jesus compromise the truth?" will be the cry of another class. There may be a sharp criticism of some social, political or religious abuse. "Would Jesus say these harsh things?" will be sure to be heard from another class. If the paper is a normal paper it will probably contain some humor and a little harmless sarcasm, and a certain class of sober-sided people who wouldn't know a joke if they should meet one in the road, will be horror stricken. "Think of Jesus writing or publishing such wicked and worldly things as jokes!" Bro. Sheldon, you may as well go to cultivating a tough cuticle at once, for the arrows of criticism will fly thick and fast.

—We print elsewhere this week the program for the Congress of the Disciples of Christ, March 27-30. A glance at it will show that the Congress will be a meeting worth attending. Give it a careful examination and prepare to attend. The papers and discussions will be exceedingly valuable in both stimulating and unifying our thought upon the subjects treated.

—We throw up our hands! It is a case of vox populi. We resume this week the articles on the Christian Endeavor topic by Burris A. Jenkins, President of the University of Indianapolis. They were dropped at the beginning of the year under the impression that there was probably not a sufficient demand for them in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to justify their continuance, but our readers say otherwise, and we are publishing this paper for their benefit. Bro. Jenkins has reason to feel complimented on the many appreciative notices that have come to us of the value of his articles, and we have not doubt he will be stimulated by these to do even better work the coming year.

—"How the Sewage Comes Down from Chicago," by W. T. Moore, is a clever parody of "How the Water Comes Down at Lodore," by Southey, and it shows the versatility of its author who, despite his affliction, is capable of indulging in something of lighter vein. We are afraid this poem, together with C. C. Smith's admirable piece of humor on "The Failure of the Editor's Sleep Remedy," will prove a severe test of the patience of those sober brethren who think that humor has no place in a religious journal; but these brethren can skip these articles which are put in solely for the benefit of those who believe that a laugh is quite as religious, in its proper place, as a sigh.

—At last accounts the meeting in Allegheny City, Scoville and Lhamon had recorded 164 additions and that, too, in 24 days. This report was received Monday morning and does not include results since Saturday last. The meeting on last Sunday night was to be held in Carnegie Music Hall in order to better accommodate the "immense crowd." Brother Scoville goes to the Central and then to the East End Churches, Pittsburg, next, in the order named, and after that to Kansas City, where he will assist Geo. H. Combs in a protracted meeting.

—The article on the educational problem by R. P. Shepherd presents a phase of the subject that has not before been brought out, but which is quite important in order to a wise and just conclusion. We ask for it a careful reading. Perhaps nothing more important will come before the Kansas City Convention, in October next, than the matter of our educational interests.

—Our rate of one dollar for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in clubs of twenty-five will be withdrawn after March 31st. If you act at all you must act quickly.

—Three December numbers of the Australian Christian have just reached us. The one of latest date is a Christmas number in cover of appropriate design, with first page in blue. From the news columns of the Australian Christian it appears that the cause of primitive Christianity in Australia is experiencing a forward movement all along the line, as in the United States.

—The annual reports appearing in our columns during the past and present month and in this paper show excellent giving for missions. In the report of the First Church, Allegheny, Pa., in this paper, almost $4,000 was raised for missionary purposes last year. Some of our churches are making a splendid record in this direction and the opportunity for others to do likewise still abounds.

—A special correspondent from London reminds the people of the United States through the Post-Dispatch, of this city, of the fact that "Gen. Sir Charles Warren, the officer who commands a division of Buller's army in South Africa and advised the taking of Spion Kop, which the British had to abandon with great loss, was famous thirty years ago as the discoverer of the Moabite stone, the inscription on which furnished a most valuable contribution to biblical history."

—At our preachers' meeting on last Monday a committee was appointed to arrange for a union rally of our people in this city on Foreign Missions. It will probably be an all-day affair and a good program will prepared for the occasion. March is now at hand and it behooves the churches to make rapid and diligent preparation for the March offering, which must exceed anything yet done if we reach the mark of our high calling this year.

—The Christian Publishing Company has just issued from its press, and has now in the hands of the binders, a charming little volume by N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, Ark., entitled "Leaves From the Mission Field." Some of the matter of this book has appeared in these columns, in the form of a serial, and those who read the articles will agree with us that, in matter and literary style, the author's writing ranks very high. We shall make further announcement soon concerning this book, whose appearance at this time is most timely, in view of the interest being awakened in the March offering for Foreign Missions.

—The Preachers' Institute for Southwest Missouri will be held in Bolivar, May 14-16. We are told that a very fine program has been prepared and a fine institute is expected.

—Bro. Tyler has concluded his meeting with the First Church, Kansas City, Mo., and has returned to Colorado Springs for a season. There were about 40 additions to the church during the meeting. Comparatively Bro. Tyler says that this meeting was much more satisfactory to himself than that of his former meetiag with that church three years ago. The Register-Review of Kansas City recently gave an extended notice of this meeting with a fine picture of Bro. Tyler. One special feature of the meeting was the large number of preachers that were in attendance. It is estimated that not less than forty different preachers were present at different times throughout the meeting, which is certainly a compliment and a pleasure to the preacher. The statement in Bro. Tyler's personal letter to us, that he greatly enjoyed his fellowship with the Kansas City preachers and brethren, is not difficult of acceptation; it could not have been otherwise in Kansas City under the stimulus of such preaching and such a meeting.

—The removal of Grant K. Lewis from Denver, Col., to Pomona, Cal., has necessitated a change in the editorial and business management of The Way, the state organ of our people in Colorado. The editorial and business management of this excellent religious journal now rests upon the heart and shoulders of Leonard G. Thompson. We are pleased to note liberal reproductions of B. B. Tyler's articles in our columns, recently, on "Evangelists and Evangelism;" also from his Colorado letters and our editorial columns.

—The chapter of The Lost Emigrants in this paper will not be questioned on the ground of soundness by the most conservative of our readers. It is a plain statement of the New Testament teaching on conversion by our fathers.

—Rev. J. C. Goodrich, agent of the American Bible Society in Manila, writes an interesting letter detailing his first experiences, sights and conceptions of that historic city. At a hotel where he and his wife stopped the first night at the rate of $5 for two, there was a full-fledged free fight below and a drunken set in an adjoining room. Of this and other things he says:

We had expected to stay at the hotel at least a week, until we could look about and find a suitable house, but we gave notice, and bright and early started to find a quiet resting-place. We searched until noon, and the only thing we found was a couple of rooms above a livery stable, with the privilege of meals at an adjoining house. We decided to take this at $5 a day until we could find something better. We have so far seen nothing so good nor anything cheaper. There is a great congestion of population here, and it will in no degree abate. There are some army people, officers' wives, etc., but many, many are coming here for business. The great lumber firms are here to establish mills and begin work as soon as it is safe to proceed inland. Mining is represented, not only by miners and prospectors, but by representatives of large mining firms at home. The pearl industry is to be pushed among the southern islands. Not only is every available house taken in Manila, but they are talking of building on every side. Land bought on the outskirts of Manila today will in six months be worth double.

—Those of our readers who have read the editorial review in the Christian Standard of "The Teachings of the Books," by Prof. H. L. Willett and Rev. J. M. Campbell, will appreciate the following note from one of the authors of the book, touching the Standard's criticism:

Of all the remarkable reviews of books that I have read the present series of editorial reviews on "The Teachings of the Books," in the Christian Standard, is the most remarkable. As a specimen of the whole take the objection that is made to the innocent, religious commonplace that judgment is at once a process and a crisis. The reviewer has evidently a great dislike to the word "crisis" as used in this connection, and he closes his case against it by asking, triumphantly, what kind of a sermon Mr. Campbell would preach if he were to translate Heb. 9:27, "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the crisis." Now it will evidently be a surprise to the reviewer to be informed that that is precisely what the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews does say. His word for judgment is krisis. If the reviewer does not like the word he will have to settle it with the writers of the New Testament for its use. J. M. C.

—The Messenger, published in Lexington, Ky., for February contains the poem on "Needs of Men," by W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., which appeared in our columns a few weeks ago. This shows how the good things of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are appreciated and passed along to others.

—The latest new church paper to come to us is the Christian Visitor, from Garden City, Cass County, Mo., edited by J. H. Jones, pastor of the Church of Christ in that city. We are pleased with the make-up and appearance of the Christian Visitor, and trust that Brother Jones will find it a valuable auxiliary to his ministry in Garden City.

—Brother MacLane, pastor of the Norwood Ave. Church of Christ, Toledo, Ohio, in a recent sermon took occasion to denounce two very prominent evils under the sun. One is the habit of certain families indulging in certain social functions in such a way as to work a hardship to the parents of poor children in the public schools,and the other is the injury of Sunday labor to the laboring man. He most earnestly protests against dances, receptions and other social functions indulged in by the wealthier families whose children are in the public schools, on the ground that it creates social and class distinctions that work hardships to the children of the working men. Here are some of his brave and timely words on this subject:

The giving of dances, receptions and other social functions by the members of our schools creates the necessity of providing party dresses, dancing slippers and other luxuries that are entirely beyond the means of the poor man, whose children are as much entitled to every advantage of education and advancement that our public schools are able to give as are the children of the wealthier homes, and yet the pupil who fails to provide themselves with these things and have a place and part in these unnecessary, unhealthful and oftimes dangerous dissipations, must suffer social ostracism and be made to feel, in the expressive words of one of the number, that they are "not in it," while those whose training in Christian homes and whose membership in the church leads them to refuse on moral grounds to engage in dancing or card playing, are denounced as prudes and puritans, and greeted with sneers and contempt.

—Of the famine in India the Missionary Tidings for February has the following appalling statement of its extent and consequent suffering:

The saddest features of India's history most frequently repeat themselves. Famine and pestilence are as familiar in that unhappy land, as health and plenty are in our own country. It is estimated that 3,000,000 people are now being sustained from the government famine relief fund, and that the cost of relief, up to the end of March, will not be less than $10,000,000. The famine is over all India, except Burma and Bengal, which means 200,000,000 people are under its withering hand. Note the number being helped by the government, compare it with the number needing help and reflect on India's direful need. The English government has full hands, and gladly gives relief work into the charge of the missionaries. The famine of 1897 proved their superiority over government officials as distributors of relief, but the government can not give help for one-half the distress, nor does it try to provide clothing or shelter. Food to barely sustain life is the most and best it can promise, and this only in distributing centers. Our brothers and sisters in India are among the sufferers, our missionaries, many of them, are in the famine district. They are working heroically to stay the tide of hunger, of despair. Ours be the task of supplying them with means for this great work; but remember we dare not divert our regular auxiliary funds to this purpose, for to do this will cripple the many lines of work we have undertaken as a missionary organization.

—You will hardly be prepared to make your offering for Foreign Missions on the first Sunday in March if you have not prayerfully considered the contents of the February number of the Missionary Intelligencer, just out. By all means secure a copy and read and see that copies are liberally distributed in your congregation.

—Such a notice as the following from so good an authority as the New York Observer, of our Christian Lesson Commentary, shows that this admirable work is valued as highly by competent judges in other religious bodies as it is by our own Sunday-school workers:

The Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Bible Studies of 1900, for the Use of Teachers and Advanced Students, by W. W. Dowling, author of various biblical helps, presents the spiritual lessons of the passages selected for study in a clear and compact form, while a sufficient amount of illustrative matter, compiled from various sources, is added to relieve the commentary from dullness. The book is very usable and "practical" in the best sense. The Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

—Dr. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago, says:

I believe in the religious paper. It is good to take. It jostles people out of ruts. It pricks the sides of good intent. It broadens people that read it. It puts parishes in touch with each other, and with the wide world of Christian activity and life. It slips many a suggestion into a sermon, and many a seed-thought into a heart. It lets fly a bow at a venture, but the shots tell. It furnishes wholesome reading for the Sabbath. What with "Sunday-school Helps," "Prayer-meeting," "Religious Notes," "Flats and Sharps" and editorials, it is an unguent, a pungent, a stimulus and inspiration, a help over many a hard place, a comfort to saints and a rebuke to sinners.

—The respectable appearance of many preachers in the pulpit represents many sacrifices in their homes.

—In a recent letter from F. G. Tyrrell, pastor First Christian Church, Chicago, concerning their new quarters, he says:

We leave 30th and Indiana Feb. 14th. The Presbyterians have a contract for exchange of that property for a lot farther south, and when trade is consummated will take down the church building. But they are having a time with Presbytery over location, and the trade is incomplete. We have a good hall and parlors attached for devotional meetings, etc., corner 47th and Grand Blvd.—a fine neighborhood without a church of any sect.

—Every advance to higher and nobler forms of life has been opposed by some old, conservative mossbunker who prated for the old days when his grandfather swung by his tail in the forest primeval.

These are not the words of a progressive theologian, but of a Democratic member of Congress, Mr. Sibley, of Pennsylvania. Of course, they have no application to matters of religion! What we religious people want is truth, and progress "to higher and nobler forms of life," even if it knocks our old sermons and theories into pi. At least that is what we say.

—The following from the press committee of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York in April, will be of interest to our readers:

One of the special features of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York in April, will be a missionary exhibit. Material is being gathered from every mission land in order to vividly present, through the eye, the social and moral conditions of the peoples among whom the missionaries are laboring. It will be the endeavor also to make it, as far as possible, a progressive exhibit showing the results of a hundred years of missionary effort. It will combine a library and museum, and will comprise publications of all kinds—books, Bibles and magazines from the field, in English and many other languages; maps and charts, pictures, models, curios in dress and workmanship and objects of religious worship, such as idols and fetiches—all intended to illustrate the actual surroundings of the missionary in his work. In order to secure the continuance of the exhibit of the coming conference as a permanent illustration of missionary endeavor, and also to furnish an opportunity for additions in years to come, a corporation has been formed, including Alexader Maitland, Esq., a member of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church and manager of the New York Library; the Rev. Edwin M. Bliss, D. D., of the New York Independent; Harlan Page Beach, Esq., of the Student Volunteer Movement; the Rev. W. I. Haven, D. D., of the American Bible Society; Luther D. Wishard, Esq., representing the Forward Movement in the American Board, and the Rev. H. Allen Tupper, D. D.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist, of Crawfordsville, Ind., will send free by mail to all who send him their address, a package of Pansy Compound, which is two weeks' treatment with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe and blood poison.

Personal Mention.

J. H. Bryan, of Moberly, Mo., has accepted a call to Montgomery City and has entered upon his new work.

A. P. Cobb, of Decatur, Ill., is now assisting David H. Shields in a protracted meeting in Salina, Kansas.

T. J. Dow, of Iowa City, Ia., and A. O. Hunsaker, singing evangelist, are assisting J. M. Hoffmann in a meeting at Boone, Iowa.

Charles Reign Scoville is to assist Geo. H. Combs in a protracted meeting in Kansas City in the near future.

O. P. Shrout, of Greencastle, Ind., has accepted a call to the Prospect Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo. His address is now 1839 Benton Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo.

Evangelist M. Ingels will begin a meeting with pastor W. E. Pitcher at Belleville, Kan., on Feb. 4. Those wanting meetings should write to Kansas state board, 1221 Clay St., Topeka, Kan.

The churches at Soldier and Havensville, Kan., have extended to W. M. Mayfield a unanimous call to remain indefinitely as their pastor, which he has accepted.

The King's Business, Cleveland, O., for Febuary opens with a good picture of Mrs. Helen E. Moses, the national corresponding secretary of the C. W. B. M. and follows with a fine outlay of intellectual food and feast.

Prof. H. L. Willett preached in Central Christian Church, Des Moines, Iowa, last Sunday and is following up the sermons with a lecture each afternoon during the week.

Alvin E. Hill, of Poe, Ind., would like to correspond with churches wanting a pastor. He is ready to begin work at once. Churches that can not pay a large salary will find an opportunity to secure a preacher in Bro. Hill.

Wm. A. Rights, evangelist, of Clarence, Ia., writes us that any church needing the services of a young man, graduate of one of our Bible colleges, excellent singer and speaker and a good pastor can find such a one by addressing him.

C. E Milard, who has been assisting in song service in Philadelphia, is pleased with the appreciation manifested and thinks the church building one of the most beautiful he has yet seen. Though not mentioned we presume he is assisting J. S. Myers in a protracted meeting. Bro. M.'s address is Maysville, Mo.

Ralph C. Sargent will leave Salem, Ohio, May 1, though called to remain another year. The church in that place made its offering for Foreign Missions January 29, amounting to $40. Bro. Sargent is now leading the music in a meeting at Painesville, Ohio, with the pastor, F. A. Bright preaching.

The Constitution, Atlanta, Georgia, for Jan. 29th contains the full report of a sermon preached in Jacksonville, Florida, by J. T. Boone, on "Imitators of God." The sermon is also accompanied by a large cut of J. T. Boone, all of which seems to us to be both courteous and complimentary.

On Jan. 28, at Mineral Ridge, O., a very beautiful service was held, at which time Bro. L. J. and Ella McConnell were ordained to the ministry. Prof. B. S. Dean, of Hiram College, conducted the services, assisted by D. G. Wagner, of Lordstown, O. Bro. and Sister McConnell began a meeting on the day of their ordination with home forces. They are faithful workers and beloved by their brethren. They are doing a grand work at Mineral Ridge. May God's blessings ever attend them in their work.

J. G. Encell, having closed his temporary pastorate at Marion, Ia., will spend some time giving lectures in Nebraska, beginning at Harvard, where Samuel Gregg has everything in readiness for him. Clay Center will be his second point. Just before leaving his home in Marion, from 30 to 40 members of the church defiantly entered his house, two by two, and while they did not "bounce" him as they do preachers sometimes, they "pursed" him to their own satisfaction.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGLLIST is unsurpassed.—E. M. MILLER, Schaller, Ia.

Long live the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—F. E. MALLORY, Topeka, Kan.

The Jubilee address, "Some Lessons from Our Past," is alone richly worth the entire subscription price to your valuable paper.—J. J. BARCLAY, St. Louis, Mo.

I am greatly pleased with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Its bright, newsy columns are looked for weekly with pleasure. It fittingly deserves the wide-spread patronage which it enjoys.—ALBERT NICHOLS, Lincoln, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a wonderful paper. May it live long and prosper in the good it has done and is calculated to do, is my prayer. —A. B. WINKLER, Armarillo, Texas.

I am an old subscriber and confident that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has done more for spiritual Christianity in the church than any other influence. Hoping for it a life of usefulness, I am.—V. ELLIS, Lockhart. Tex.

I am not happy without your paper to read each week, having been a reader since 1876, and look upon it as one of my spiritual friends and advisers.—MRS. LOUISA MORSE LEE, Santa Ana, Cal.

I want to thank you for the editorials on "Some Revival Truths." They are timely and to the point. I always enjoy the "Easy Chair." You are giving us a great paper.—C. A. FREER, Columbus, O.

I am very much pleased with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and that Bro. Garrison will remain its editor. I regret very much to see some of our papers cutting prices, because I believe they were cheap enough at the old prices of last year.—J. C. GUZEMAN, Iowa City, Iowa.

I believe you know how sincerely we, among your host of friends, rejoice in the fact that J. H. Garrison is still the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. May God be pleased to use it mightily in the advancement of his kingdom on earth.—MRS. J. T. TOOF, New Haven, Conn.

I am in hearty accord with the policy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and wish it every success. I am sure that the course that is being pursued will win the support of hundreds who are weary of intellectual slavery and religious intolerence.—WM. H. MATLOCK, Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.

I have taken every number of your paper since it was published in Fort Madison by Brothers Bates and Henderson, through all its changes, and now like it better than ever. I know you ably and earnestly defend the same old gospel I began to preach nearly fifty years ago.—J. C. POWELL, Moore, Okla.

Enclosed please find my subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and with it my hearty endorsement of the course of the paper anent Biblical Criticism, and at the same time would say that I sympathize with those "objective" brethren and pity the mental condition of any Disciples who find themselves unable to emancipate themselves from the thralldom of "traditional" reasoning and interpretation of Scripture. It surely betrays a narrow spirit from which I thought an escape from creedism had freed us and is repugnant to Paul's teaching which exhorts us to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good."—GEORGE GOURLAY, Detroit, Mich.

"One Year's Seeding, Nine Years' Weeding."

Neglected impurities in your blood will sow seeds of disease of which you may never get rid. If your blood is even the least bit impure, do not delay, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla at once. In this course there is safety; in delay there is danger.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The visits of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are welcomed by every member of the household. I especially like its vigorous defense of the old Jerusalem gospel as set forth by Christ and his apostles. If the gospel preached in love does not convert the world there is nothing that will, for it is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." May your paper be the means in the hands of God causing greater spirituality in the churches.—H. T. MUNN, Perry, Iowa.

The term "charming" may be applied, not alone to the well-written works of fiction founded on fact. It may be, but there are some works of biography—fact itself—that are equally fascinating. Such a book is Grafton's Life of Alexander Campbell, to which I am led to pay this voluntary tribute of appreciation. I am now engaged in reading carefully and by easy stages the book aloud to my eleven-year old son, the first biography I have sought to interest him in, and I feel that a happy selection has been made for a beginning. There is in it meat for grown people and food for the young as well. Bro. Grafton has certainly shown marked adaptability for this branch of literature and should continue in the exercise of his gift in this direction. The volume is well worth the dollor asked for it, and surely the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one year and the life of Alexander Campbell for two dollars, is an offer that should be widely availed of.—W. P. KEELER, Chicago, Ill.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been the bread of life to me. I do not believe that I could have enjoyed the blessings of a Christian hope that I do if I had not been reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Your course has been my ideal of an editor of a Christian paper. Your broad, catholic views certainly elicit the admiration of all thoughtful followers of Christ. I was so fearful that you were going to quit the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but am now elated and overjoyed at the outcome. Go on as you have been doing. You are on the right track. It is my delight to read your paper to my neighbors—Presbyterians, Methodists, etc. They have no publication equal to it, and this is true of your Sunday-school literature. By the way, I want to say to you that I am superintendent of a Methodist school in the country and I use our advanced quarterly (Dowling's) and the teachers admit it is far superior to anything they have. I wish you the success you deserve. Let me thank you again. I have just read "Lessons from Our Past." Grand! Grand! GRAND!—J. C. ALEXANDER, Bowling Green, Ky.

A Calendar Free.

During recent years Junior workers have received an annual gift from Miss Elizabeth W. Olney, 211 Friendship Street, Providence, R. I. For the purpose of furthering humane work among the children, she offers again to send the "Band of Mercy" calendar for 1900, on receipt of five cents for postage. The picture this year upon the calendar is entitled "Chums," and the whole calendar is very attractive. Junior superintendents and all Christian Endeavorers especially interested in humane work may have a copy. It is hoped that many will wish to help on the work by sending ten cents instead of five. This will help to pay the cost of the calendars, which has always been borne entirely by one person.

Harvey O. Breeden.

We present our readers this week with an excellent portrait of Rev. Harvey O. Breeden, LL. D., of Des Moines, Iowa. He is one of the most successful and best known pastors among us, and has been a prominent factor in the marvelous growth of our cause in Des Moines. Dr. Breeden is still a young man. He was born in Illinois and was educated at Abingdon and Eureka Colleges. The following paragraph concerning his work in Des Moines is taken from the Iowa Endeavorer:

H. O. Breeden, LL. D., has been pastor of the Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia., for fifteen years. Beginning with 340 members, his church has swarmed five times during this period and now has 1,300 members. It supports two foreign missionaries and is probably the strongest church among the Disciples of Christ. Dr. Breeden has received more than three thousand members into the Central alone. He is a lecturer, an editor and a great traveler. He is a strong and eloquent preacher and excels as a leader and organizer. His sobriquet among his friends is "The General." The Central Church edifice, built under Dr. Breeden's supervision, is a handsome stone structure, seating 1,200 and costing $100,000. Institutional activities are successfully carried on in this church. Of the nine Christian Churches in Des Moines, with a combined membership of 4,000, all save one have grown out of Dr. Breeden's church.

A Question For Bro. Jones.

I would like to ask Bro. Jones a question. He seems to teach that by faith only a sinner is pardoned by our Heavenly Father. Now what I wish to ask is, How is the sinner to manifest this faith to others? Is he to go to the "mourner's bench" or "anxious seat," hold up a hand, or does it come to him as an inner light and feeling, and he can say, I am gloriously saved because I feel it in my heart? President Chas. G. Finney says in his book on Revivals that the apostles called sinners to baptism. Baptism held the precise place the "anxious seat" does now. Is that your idea? H. N. ALLEN.

Genna, O.

ANSWER.

The sinner "manifests his faith to others" by being baptized—"baptized for the remission of sins"—the formal remission. "Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" secures the compassion and forgiveness of the Father's heart. This is a personal matter between God and the sinner. Then for the sinner's own good and for the good of the church and the world, he is to openly declare his faith in baptism. Baptism as an expression of faith has an influence on the man's own heart, on the church and on the world; but this "expression" does not influence God, since he already sees the faith in the heart.

A. B. JONES.

A Bad Man.—Warning.

Let the churches everywhere be warned against one Geo. B. Hadfield. He was dismissed from the ministry of the Church of Christ in Colorado last April, after imposing upon us greatly. Abundant proof can be furnished from Texas, Illinois and Colorado that he is guilty of theft, falsehood and immorality. He remained in Colorado till about September last. He has now turned up in Western Kansas, where he is carrying on his mischievous work. I have just furnished the Kansas state and district secretaries with full documentary evidence of his conduct. He was published in The Way, Colorado's state paper, last April. One of his last acts in Colorado was to keep saloon bar for two weeks, and then to steal $30 from the saloonkeeper and run away with it. When exposed he will cry "persecution." In stature he is a little below medium height, rather stoutly built, was smooth-faced when here; is sandy complexioned, has large mouth, monotonous voice, small eyes, closely set toward nose. His age is about 29. Sings quite well; will probably plead poverty and ask to borrow a small sum of money or will ask to preach. Will tell a long tale of woe and gain the sympathies of the unsuspecting. He is one of the worst men I have ever met. Will all state papers please copy? LEONARD G. THOMPSON,

Wonderful Cures by Swamp-Root.

Deacon Pollard Finds Swamp-Root Present Help in Time of Trouble.

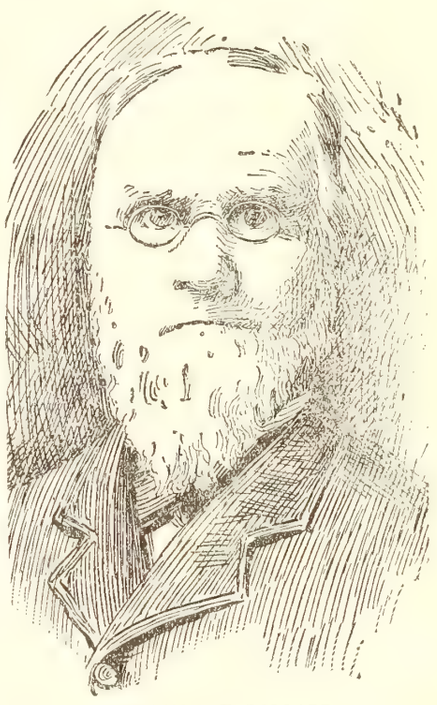
Among the many famous cures of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy investigated by the "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST," the ones which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers, speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great remedy.

Deacon Charles F. Pollard, a prominent Baptist deacon of Lynn, Mass., residing at 74 High Rock Street, adds his testimony to the wealth of others, as to the wonderful curative effects of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. Deacon Pollard on Jan. 2nd writes:

"For years I had kidney and bladder troubles, and was also a victim of acute rheumatism in my arms and legs. The pains from the latter affection were very hard to bear. I tried many doctors and medicines without benefit. Some time ago I commenced to take Swamp-Root. It has entirely cured my rheumatism and has greatly helped my other troubles. I should not think of keeping house without having Swamp-Root as a conspicuous feature of the housekeeping utensils.

"I can only speak in the highest praise of its health-giving properties.

C. F. POLLARD.



DEACON C. F. POLLARD.

What a Woman Says of Swamp-Root.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 268 Boston St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Dec. 11, '99: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe attack of grip. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I was finally able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt certain that they were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle, and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser. I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is, therefore, all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood; that is their work.

So when your kidneys are sick you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you—and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain and dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

Sample Bottle Free.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive free of charge a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact, their very lives to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free bottle and be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

SOME NEWS OF OUR CHURCHES.

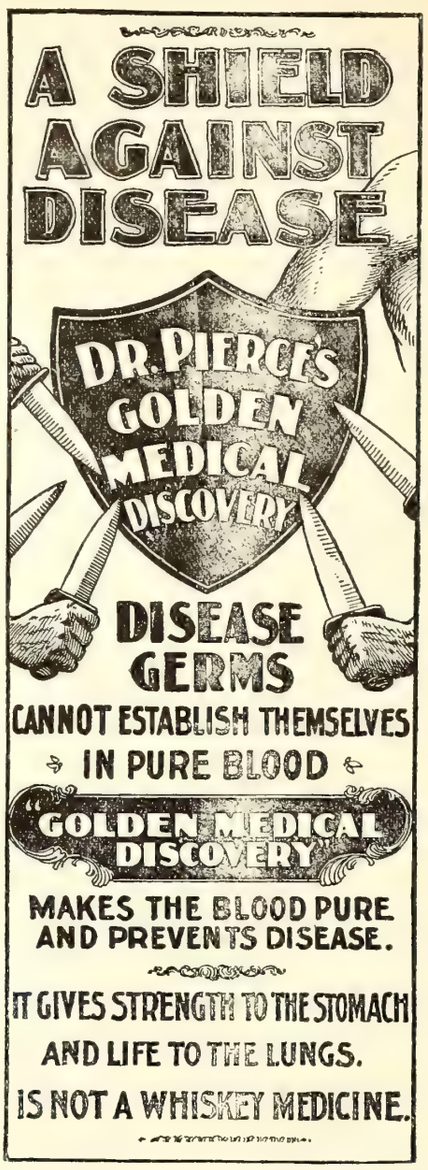
Bro. George Rapkin has had a very painful experience. A fire broke out in his house in Margate in the night. Fortunately, the smoke awakened him, and the lives of the family were saved. But his study was destroyed and the excitement of the adventure shook the nerves of all. He himself, in the great efforts he had to make, was physically injured and needed plastering and bandaging through bruised ribs. Though his house was insured there will nevertheless be considerable loss to this devoted family. The incident has only just happened, and full details are not to hand. But enough is known to excite great sympathy all round. As far as I have been able to discover, most of the English churches are suffering through the epidemic of influenza, which mysterious malarial malady seems to have come to England permanently, to squat like a fiend which cannot be exorcised by scientific skill. Nearly half of my own people have been ill. Nearly half the rest have had to spend all their time for some weeks in nursing the invalids. Therefore the work has suffered severely just for the time being. Blessings will roll in again. Health will come back. The demon executes a strategic retreat at the approach of spring each year, though where he finds his occult strongholds no man has been able to discover. A theory is in the ascendant that influenza is only the Black Death in the germ. That is all! Only the mere incipient stages of the plague! Nothing at all more! This is certainly a nice abstraction, for it points to contingencies and possibilities too horrible for contemplation. But the scientists kindly coat this theoretical pill with saccharine, for they declare that we need not dread the plague, seeing that sanitation has eliminated all the conditions favorable to the incubation of the monster.

THE ENGLISH CHANNING.

England has lost a great Englishman. James Martineau, the most venerable minister of religion in this country, has died at the age of 95. This marvelous genius occupied very nearly the same position as that filled in America formerly by Channing. His life was equally beautiful, and his genius was very much greater. He also took up a similar stand as a Unitarian, in relation to Evangelical theory and doctrine. Thus Martineau became the property of all the Christian churches, because, for the most part, everything he wrote and said agreed with the common sentiments of Christian people. That is to say, he emphasized all the positives, and for the most part omitted references to the negations. He was a Unitarian, but troubled little about denials of Trinitarianism. His great aim was to show how God is revealed in the reason and in the conscience of mankind. Now every Evangelical can concur in the position that God is thus revealed; although no Evangelical would agree that this is a sufficient revelation to redeem and deliver humanity from the reign of evil. But Martineau did not trouble to reiterate and argue, as the average Socinian does, in opposition to creeds which recognize the miraculous and the supernatural. He did not deliver any agnostic program. He simply philosophized along positive lines which were actually and incontrovertibly true as far as they went. They did not go far enough. But as far as they reached they conducted anxious and seeking souls and intellects entirely in the right direction. And Martineau was a glorious soul. He was the first exponent of the age in the realms of the pure philosophy of abstract religious thought. But his strength was his weakness, so far as popular influence went. He was admired by all, but he could only be followed in a sermon by a select few, except at the cost of a splitting headache. A discourse by Dr. Martineau was a fearful skull-cracker for listening mediocrities. He belonged to a great family, descended from the Huguenot stock, as his name indicated. One of the ablest women of the century was his sister, Harriet Martineau. I must point out that Martineau did harm in one respect. His influence contributed largely to the religious "down-grade" which broke the heart of Spurgeon and made such a sensation not not many years ago. The magnificent essays of this Unitarian genius commanded the intellectual homage of students and preachers in all the denominations. I have met scores who seemed to be mentally hypnotized by reading his treatises. They are vehicles of philosophic enchantment. They should only be read by men well equipped before dipping into them. For they are apt to leave the reader intoxicated by their amazing beauty both of sentiment and diction. Too many Congregational and Baptist ministers have come under the spell. They have been led to the elimination of the supernatural from their faith and have become Unitarian at heart. I wish no student would read Martineau until he has gone through Godet, Vinet, Tholuck and Luthardt. Martineau was in religion what Kant was in metaphysics, with his icy but glittering "Kritik der Reinigen Vernunft," or Criticism of Pure Reason. Kant, while reverential, leads straight on to the abyss of negation. Martineau reaches the same goal by a different path, but Coleridge is a fine corrective.

A GRAND LITERARY FAMILY.

The echoes of screaming shells and the reverberations of lyddite explosions against the precipitous sides of the Drakensberg continue to reach us from far-off South Africa. We seem to realize the booming of batteries and the roar of war's rolling tide, black with battle-smoke and crimson with the death-flow from the hearts of brave men. It is a relief to turn to the contemplation of calm and peaceful literary records. Fortunately, these are not wanting at this terrible time. A book just appears which stirs many recollections and brings up a brilliant past era in English literature. "Notes on Sport and Travel" is the title of a new work by George Henry Kingsley, with a memoir by his daughter, the famous Miss Mary Kingsley, the greatest living lady traveler, with the exception of Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop. Now a book by one of the Kingsley brothers, with a memoir by his daughter, of West African renown, cannot but be delightful. Father and daughter alike received as gifts from nature the genius of travel and adventure, as well as literary capacity of a high order. Dr. George Kingsley died in 1892, at the age of 66. He was a physician, and took to the fishing-rod, the mustang and the rifle, at the most interesting period of his life, unfortunately thus forsaking the pen as well as the laboratory. Miss Kingsley gives most graphic and vivacious descriptions of the family life of the three wonderful brothers, Charles, Henry and George Kingsley. These men cared more for romance than for money. Charles Kingsley was the famous clergyman, the Canon of Chester, where I used to know him, and sometimes to hear him preach. Afterwards he became Canon of Westminster. He was Rector of the lovely little parish of Eversley, in Hampshire. But he was one of England's most famous writers, his historical novels being equal in charm to any ever produced. "Westward Ho" and "Hypatia" can never die until the English language perishes, and they will help, if it should be in danger of dying, to keep it alive. Henry Kingsley went in the rush to the gold-fields of Australia, but being a Kingsley, lost the chance of making a big fortune. He became a stock rider and mounted policeman. Coming home he quickly made a reputation by writing two beautiful books, "Ravenshoe" and "Geoffrey Hamlin." In 1870 he joined the German army as war correspondent.



A SHIELD AGAINST DISEASE

IN PURE BLOOD
"GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY"
MAKES THE BLOOD PURE AND PREVENTS DISEASE.
IT GIVES STRENGTH TO THE STOMACH AND LIFE TO THE LUNGS.
IS NOT A WHISKEY MEDICINE.

The restless craving for adventure ran in the Kingsley blood. George gave way to it more even than his younger brother, and we are told that this was why he was the happiest of all the family. The only man whom he would envy would be the man who had an extra good chance of being killed by a grizzly bear of superior size, or who had caught an extra-sized salmon. How versatile was the genius of the Kingsleys is shown by the career of George, who loved science and books as well as he loved travel, sport, and adventure. When a young medical student, during his holidays he shouldered his knapsack in the style of young Bayard Taylor and tramped through the wildest districts of Europe. But this clever young Ulysses won the best medical prizes and became a Doctor of Medicine in 1847, when he was only 20 years of age. Next year, the revolutionary year, he was assisting in barricading Paris streets, in reward for which service he received a musket ball in the biceps of his left arm. Away he went to ramble Westward in the Rocky Mountains and then in the South Seas. This book of his "Notes on Sport and Travel" shows what a wonderful work he might have written had he thought it worth while to give the world a full chronicle of his extraordinary life. But that same "Erdgeist" which charmed Goethe (bnt fortunately did not silence him) enticed George Kingsley from literature. But the life of this man gives to others a severe lesson. Miss Kingsley deliberately says that the anxiety of her father's long absences on dangerous expeditions killed her mother. He went about the world hunting and fighting while the wife kept the home. Surely, the first duty of a man with a wife and children is to abide by the domestic ship of which he is the captain. But there are too many men in the world who sacrifice their primary and sacred duties to the performance of some functions which take their fancy.

Colorado Letter.

This letter has to do with our work in Kansas City, Mo., and in Kansas City, Kansas.

In the first-named place there are eight congregations of the Christian Church. The First Church has in the neighborhood of eight hundred members. W. F. Richardson is pastor. He has been with the church about six years. He is a model pastor. He really cares for the flock of God over which the Holy Spirit has made him overseer. To say that the First Christian Church in Kansas City, Mo., is a great church is not an extravagant use of language. The membership is large and its quality fine. It is not often that a man has the privilege of speaking to a congregation of so high an average intelligence. While the members are not, as a whole, wealthy, there is in their hands a sufficient amount of this world's goods to enable the church, so far as money is concerned, to do successful work. The members are also active in efforts for the Christ. The writing of checks does not satisfy. There must be personal service as well. With their pastor they are more than satisfied—they love him. The Sixth and Prospect Street—George H. Combs, pastor—has a membership quite as large as that of the First Church; possibly larger. It is said also that its wealth exceeds that of the older congregation. There is a good house of worship, well situated. There are constant accessions to this church under the ministry of its accomplished pastor. Some time ago Bro. Combs delivered a series of discourses on Modern Religious (?) Fads, which is published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, under the title of "Some Latter-Day Religions." It is a bright book. It contains much information concerning "Theosophy," "Divine Healing," "Christian Science," "Mormonism," "Spiritualism," "Agnosticism," "Socialism," "materialism," and "Liberalism," of value, and not easily accessible. The style is excellent. Its quotations are abundant and reliable. There is no other single book from which one can obtain so full and so accurate information on the subject treated. A. W. Kokendoffer is pastor of the Forest Avenue Church. He is in the midst of a very successful work. The membership of this church is about the same, numerically, as that of the First Church, and the Sixth and Prospect, i. e., about eight hundred. Mrs. Kokendoffer is a daughter of the loved and lamented F. G. Allen, the founder and, to the day of his death, editor of the Christian Guide, of Louisville, Ky. The South Prospect Church is the congregation, of which A. B. Phillips, now in Augusta, Ga., was for some years the popular pastor. Its membership is from four to five hundred. O. P. Shrout has recently accepted the pastorate of this church. Soon after the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati J. V. Coombs, the well-known evangelist, conducted a five weeks' meeting with the congregation, which resulted in the addition of about one hundred and forty persons to its membership. In what is called the West Side Church, B. M. Easter ministers in holy things. The membership of this church is probably two hundred and fifty. The Springfield Avenue Church, with a membership possibly smaller than that of the West Side congregation, is peculiarly fortunate in having the services of T. P. Haley in the pastorate. He has been with this church two years. The interest which he exhibits and the pride in the ongoing of their comparatively small church are beautiful to witness. For forty years he has preached in Kansas City. For a number of years he was pastor of the church on the corner of Eleventh and Locust Sts. He participated in the dedication of our first house of worship in this place in 1859. The life of Bro. Haley has been busy and useful; but never did he render more valuable service to the cause of the Christ than at the present time. His presence in the midst of our churches in this wonderful city is a benediction. To T. P. Haley more than to any other one man are the Disciples of Christ indebted for their commanding position and influence in Kansas City. The West Port Church, with a membership of about two hundred, is now without a pastor. Bro. Mundell is shepherd of the Sheffield flock. There are from fifty te seventy-five members in this church. There are three missions under the supervision of F. L. Bowen. He has been in this position between two and three years. Bro. and Sister Bowen are highly esteemed for their work's sake. These missions are destitute of houses of worship. The congregations in Kansas City unite in the support of Bro. and Sister Bowen. It is a pleasure to record the fact that there is among the Disciples in this city a remarkable unity in thought, in speech, in aim and in effort.

Kansas City, Kansas, is so related geographically to Kansas City, Mo., that a stranger may well be excused if he does not know, now and again, where he is "at."

In Kansas City, Kansas, there are three congregations of the Christian Church. G. F. Shields is pastor of the North Side congregation, which has a membership of possibly three hundred. This church owns a house and is free from debt. Elmer T. Davis was pastor of the Armourdale church. Armourdale is a part of Kansas City, Kansas. This congregation is without a pastor. Argentine is also in this Kansas City. The congregation in Argentine is small in numbers and has no house of worship. W. H. Embry is pastor. There is in this Kansas City a congregation of Disciples of Christ made up of American citizens of African pedigree. William Alpin is the faithful shephard of this flock. Its strength is from two hundred to two hundred and fifty. The Board of Church Extension is giving assistance to this church. There is also a congregation of colored persons in Kansas City, Mo. This church owns a lot with a building which, although not erected for such a purpose, is used as a place of public worship. The white brethren give financial assistance to this work as individuals.

Kansas City, Mo., is the home of the Register-Review, a weekly paper devoted to the interests of the Christian Church. It is a sweet-spirited, sixteen-page, up-to-date paper. It deserves a good circulation and support.

This is also the home of the Board of Church Extension. G. W. Muckley, its wide-awake secretary is out among the churches presenting its claims and pleading the cause of the weak congregations. The fund of this board is now more than $200,000. There must be a quarter of a million of dollars in its treasury by the end of 1900. It would be easy to use many times that amount of money in the holiest of causes.

The brethren are making preparations for the meeting of the General Convention in 1900. A very large attendance is expected. A most cordial invitation awaits all who will come.

St. Louis Letter.

While we have a number of women in the Church of Christ in St. Louis who can address a public audience, our lamented Sister Younkin was probably our only regularly licensed woman preacher. She was a most earnest speaker on any subject on which she addressed an audience. She traveled extensively in the interest of the Christian Orphans' Home and hundreds of people in many states have been touched by her earnest pleadings for truth and righteousness. She will ever be remembered as an earnest defender of righteousness and preacher of the gospel of Christ.

Mary Wisdom Grant is a familiar name on our convention programs, especially in Missouri. Few women or even men are more self-possessed in the pulpit than Sister Grant and few are more analytical in their methods. There is nothing slow or dry in her public addresses. Her leading line of work is in the Sunday-school.

Mrs. H. M. Meier, the president of the Christian Benevolent Association, is another of our St. Louis women who can both teach and preach. We have already indicated her line of work. She has also been one of the libearal donors to the Christian Orphans' Home. Sister Meier speaks with great earnestness and ease. She always knows her theme, becomes absorbed in its spirit and has been before our largest conventions.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz, now state C. W. B. M. secretary for Missouri, is another of our sisters who can command the attention of a public audience. She is a woman of marked intellectuality and strong convictions of right and duty, and is never at a loss for words to express her thoughts on any subject. She speaks with ease and force and always to the point.

Mrs. W. D. Harrison was fitted both by nature and education for public duties, but it is only of recent years that she would venture on a public address. She was afraid of Paul. But since she has understood him she has greatly extended her usefulness in the church and in benevolent work. She is also a woman of ability, large reading and strong convictions. She has been before our conventions and her addresses have commanded the highest respect.

We have never heard Mrs. D. R. Dungan in an address, but we have heard it said that she is the best posted woman on the Bible in St. Louis; perhaps also in other higher literature. When writing "On the Rock" it is said that the author would not reveal the nom de plume over which it was written, to his wife, until he found out that she commended the story and advised him to read it. Perhaps he was afraid of her criticism. Perhaps he is debtor to her for much of his fame as a preacher. But of this we are certain: Sister Dungan could easily show many of our preachers "the way of the Lord more perfectly" and as gracefully as did one of old.

One of the benefits of the Christian Orphans' Home work is that it has discovered to a number of our sisters that they can preach and are preachers. Mrs. O. C. Shedd is one of this class. One of the most interesting addresses in the conference on benevolences in Cincinnati was delivered by Mrs. Shedd. Her whole soul is in this work and has been from the first. She is not one who loves the work she is doing in word only, but in deed and in truth.

Mrs. A. J. Marshall goes at an audience like her husband or any other competent preacher. We have not heard Sister Marshall yet, but have knowledge of her pastoral visits and addresses. We had the pleasure of hearing their daughter before sailing for India and saw no lagging of interest in a large audience while she was speaking, and the same tribute has been paid to Sister Marshall.

One of our regularly employed sisters in religious work is Miss Frankie McCarron, of whom we have already spoken. Her preaching is chiefly from house to house,but she can address any audience with perfect ease and to their intellectual delight. She always has something to say when she comes before an audience. She is widely known and loved for her work's sake and hundreds who have been relieved by her hand and heart call her blessed. She is now at work in the field of the Second Church as assistant pastor to W. D. Pittman.

Mrs. Jennie Conway is the assistant pastor to Baxter Waters of the Central Christian Church. And in addition to her visitations and house-to-house preaching she edits The Clarion and thereby assists in preaching to the congregation and others. The Clarion is now in its second year, is a newsy church leaflet and greatly assists in the intellectual equilibrium of the congregational news.

Women do not have to go into the pulpit to be preachers nor to address the public. Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, Mrs. R. Mason, Mrs. O. C. Shedd, Mrs. H. M. Meier, Mrs. J. H. Garrison, Mrs. Lelia W. Patterson and others are preaching to a very large audience continually, through the Orphan's Cry, of which Mrs. Hansbrough, Mrs. Shedd and Mrs. Mason are the editors, the former, in-chief, and the two latter, associate. Mrs. Mason is also the publisher of the Cry and only Christ can know the hearts that this journal has touched and the good thereby done. One of the addresses of the Benevolent Association conference in Cincinnati was prepared by Mrs. Rowena Mason, which with others was published in the Orphan's Cry.

Then there are the pastors' and preachers' wives, all of whom are prominent in church work of one kind or another and whose names are enrolled in heaven if not in this letter. And not only these, but many other women whose works in St. Louis have endeared them to the churches and to the public. We should like to name them all if space permitted; but we have indicated by this letter, thus far, that we have Phœbes and Priscillas and Dorcases in the Church of Christ in St. Louis, and of no names are we prouder than of those of our women, who have helped to make our St. Louis churches, activities and benevolences what they are to-day. Neither are we a bit fearful or squeamish about publishing their names and their work. Many of them are already on the honor roll in heaven and many others will be. No, the Church of Christ will not go to pieces should the true, noble, brave women therein be occasionally mentioned in church papers, even as preachers. God bless the women who have labored and sacrificed so nobly for the cause of Christ, for our benevolences, for purity, for our homes and for humanity. W. W. H.

Chicago Letter.

The papers this morning (January 26) are saying that Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kansas, may in the near future share the pulpit of the Central Church with Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus. This church is the one that was established down town in Central Music Hall by the lamented David Swing. He was succeeded by the brilliant Newell Dwight Hillis, recently called to Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, since whose departure Dr. Gunsaulus has occupied the pulpit. As at present conducted, Central Church has no evening service. Under the able ministry of Dr. Gunsaulus the attendance has grown until hundreds cannot secure sittings. The idea is to invite Mr. Sheldon to preach Sunday nights, and possibly carry on other work during the week.

Upon this subject Dr. Gunsaulus is reported as saying: "Dr. Sheldon is a wonderful man and an extremely powerful man. He has done great work in the fields in which he has labored, and I believe he is well fitted to take up the work I am now trying to do and which Dr. Hillis did so successfully before me." As to the issuing of the Topeka Daily Capital for a week as a purely religious journal the Doctor says: "I am in sympathy with Dr. Sheldon and admire him greatly, but I do not believe that his paper will prove very much."

The Christian Scientists are not alone in vigorous propaganda work. The Single Taxers are unequaled in skill and energy and patience. In this city they hold meetings every Sunday afternoon in Handel Hall, with an average attendance of five hundred, and no matter what the subject of the lecture, at its close the chairman calls on one of the members to tell "What the Single Tax Will Do and How It Will Do It." Last Sunday the lecturer was Mr. Ernest H. Crosby, of New York, a son of the well-known minister, Dr. Howard Crosby. He spoke for an hour and a half on "Tolstoi and His Philosopy of Life." Having had the advantage of a visit with the philosopher in his own home, as well as acquaintance with his voluminous writings, Mr. Crosby was able to hold the unflagging attention of his audience to the close. It was a brilliant talk. He stated that the refusal of the Cosmopolitan to print his story, "The Resurrection," without censuring it, was due, not so much to grossness of language as to the fact that in this story Tolstoi advocates the taxation of land values. For example the sentence, "He became convinced that the private ownership of land was a grievous wrong" they made to read, "He became dissatisfied with the system of land tenure in Russia."

There is among these reformers what they call the letter-writing corps, a group of people who pledge themselves to write at least one letter every day to some one urging upon his attention the Single Tax theory. Why not a letter-writing corps to spread the great ideas of the Current Reformation?

Illinois is following other states in the establishment of state employment bureaus, a most commendable enterprise. The private bureaus are often nothing but leeches, taking, in the form of registry fees, the last penny of the unemployed and holding out hopes of employment that are never realized. In the state bureau there is, of course, no fee. The figures from one of three bureaus show that for the last two months of 1899 the number of women who applied for employment was 1,331; the number of applications for woman help was 1,751; positions secured for women, 1,150; 236 positions for housework were filled by women who applied for other work; the number of male applicants was 4,350; applications for male help, 2,609; positions secured, 1,742. The best way to help people is to help them help themselves. Now we want, next, state pawn shops and state dispensaries to handle the sale of liquor.

The Chicago churches joined in a Silver Jubilee missionary service January 21st and 22nd. A. McLean and F. M. Rains came up from Cincinnati and preached Sunday in four different churches. Monday morning at 10 o'clock the clans gathered in the Assembly Hall of the Palmer House and spent the day in singing and speech-making. Among those from abroad were President Hardin, of Eureka; G. B. VanArsdall, of South Bend, Indiana; A. E. Cory, under appointment for work among the Japanese of Hawaii; H. P. Williams and wife, who leave next fall for Manila, and John L. Brandt, of Valparaiso. D. R. Lucas came down from Rockford to listen and approve. Messrs. Cory and Williams each spoke on the field to which he soon departs.

The attendance was quite satisfactory. The C. W. B. M. members turned out in force, every auxiliary being represented. It was a good meeting, a fine prelude to the March offering. F. M. Rains appointed a committee to work up the collections in Chicago churches, with the suggestion that they unite in raising $600 for the support of a missionary. This letter would like to report some of the bright as well as the inspiring things that were said. For instance, speaking of the population of India, A. McLean said: "Many of the boys are married men!"

There was an impressive thanksgiving service for the character and ability of our workers, the deepening of spirituality among us and the encouraging growth of the missionary spirit. The day closed with a great meeting at the Monroe Street Church, where E. W. Darst is assisting C. C. Morrison in a two week's meeting.

Is It True?

Not is it amusing? But is it true? This is asked concerning the chief point made in the article of "Hezekiah Hobson," of "Beanville, mo.," whose name is something else and whose address may possibly be St. Louis. It may be entirely in order to speak of the Christian Standard as "the Crischun Battel Flag wich is publisht in Cincinatty," and it may be altogether amusing to represent "Bruthur Wilsun" or some other man as regarding extracts from "the departmint of biblical krittysizzum as co-ordynait with revelashun:" It perhaps cannot be proved that some one does not do this. Neither is it objected that ridicule is used. Ridicule is proper at times. Of course, the use of it leaves the way open for some one to cry out "bad spirit," and for others to read a lecture about correcting the brethren "in love." It might even lead some one to write without point about efforts to take away the liberties of some of the brethren by injuring their influence. This you know has been done in other cases, and with as little reason. But these are comparatively small matters. The question before us is, Does Hezekiah Hobson, of Beanville, Mo., represent correctly "the departmint of biblikel krittysizzum?" In the presence of this question everything else is of secondary consideration.

The so-called "Hezekiah Hobson" makes the so-called "bruther Wilsun" say:

"Even in our own brutherhood thare are men who haz gone so far astray that they no longer denounse awl hire kritticks as infiduls and awl hire krittysizzum as infidelitty."

This is to make the impression that the great majority of our brethren who speak or write on the subject do so denounce all higher critics and all higher criticism, a thing which no intelligent man has ever done.

Farther on in the article, "bruther Wilsun" is asked to state what higher criticism is, and he is made to answer that it is infidelity. Then Wilsun is asked, "What maiks you think so?" and is made to reply: "Because the departmint of biblikel krittysizzum sez it iz." To this the imaginary modern thinker, Hezekiah Hobson, says, "Jesso, I thot az mutch." This is downright misrepresentation. The biblical department of the Christian Standard has never said such a thing. It has again and again said quite the contrary. If Hezekiah Hobson reads the Christian Standard there can be no apology for this misrepresentation. If he does not read it, but reads instead those papers that are constantly giving aid and comfort to those who are explaining away many of the miracles of the Bible and filling it with legends and untrustworthy history, then there may be some apology for him. For his representation of the biblical department does not differ much from theirs. In one way or another they have been representing Pres. McGarvey in pretty much the same way, though perhaps not quite so directly. These misrepresentations open the way for some brother to read a lecture on "speaking the truth in love." H. McDIARMID.

Hiram. O.

[The foregoing is the article of Prof. McDiarmid which was referred to in a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and from which a criticism was quoted concerning the article of Hezekiah Hobson. Prof. McDiarmid insists, however, that our reference to his criticism did him injustice, and insists that his article be published entire. We do not think his point is well taken. We believe his criticism was fairly met in the letter of Hezekiah Hobson in reply. The charge against the article of Bro. Hobson is misrepresentation. The specification under that charge is that "bruther Wilsun" is made to say that the Department of Biblical Criticism teaches that higher criticism is infidelity, and that in response to that statement Hezekiah Hobson says: "Jesso; I thot az mutch." This last remark Prof. M. interprets as an endorsement of "bruther Wilsun's" statement, whereas Hezekiah Hobson explains that what he meant was that he was not surprised to learn that "bruther Wilsun" had received such an impression from the D. of B. C. In his reply to Prof. McDiarmid, Bro. Hobson said:

Sertinly the departmint ov biblikel krittysizzum nevver sed awl hire kritticks wuz infiduls, or that awl hire krittysizzum was infidelitty. I nevver sed it did say so, eether. I sed bruther Wilsun sed it sed so. Praps I shood hav correctid hiz staitmint, but I thot it mite be jest as well to let it stand, az it shows what kind ov impreshun the departmint ov biblikel krittysizzum iz maikin on the minds of menny ov its reeders—thoze who, like bruther Wilsun, are good, honist men, but who are not well informed, and do not know how to cairfully annaiize what they reed in the papers.

There can be no doubt, we presume, that many good people have received that impression from the stock references to this subject in extreme conservative journals. It seems necessary to remind Prof. McDiarmid that Hezekiah Hobson's peculiar style of writing is not to be interpreted too strictly or mathematically. His articles are in the nature of cartoons, and cartoons exaggerate certain features to make a point stand out more prominently. We would hardly expect to see Hon. M. A. Hanna with $-marks all over his clothes, nor with a double chin covering part of his shirt-front, although that is the familiar figure which artist Davenport has given us. Hezekiah Hobson, in spite of his peculiar orthography, sees some things which he thinks can be better answered by a good-natured caricature than by solemn argument, and the cartoonist does seem to have a mission in religious as well as in politic] discussion.—EDITOR.]

The Gnat and the Camel Again.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 23.—Very erroneous dispatches have recently been sent out from Washington, New York and Boston, some of them mixed up with two stories of Professor Samuel Dickie, alleging that I said to a Boston preachers' meeting that I saw wine bottles brought out of the President's room in the Capitol shortly after adjournment of Congress on March 4th, and that the statement was incorrect. The statement I did not make nor has it been disproved. Speaking in Boston on the nullification of the anti-canteen law by the Executive and of the President's approval of the repeal of prohibition in Alaska, I added, as a bit of circumstantial evidence as to the President's relations to temperance, that a certain reliable witness, whom I named that all might estimate for themselves the value of the testimony, had told me of seeing a lot of champagne bottles brought out of the President's room shortly after he had been there engaged with his advisors in the supreme task of signing the last bills passed by the last Congress. The doorkeeper of that room who, eight months after this charge was telegraphed everywhere, is denying that anything but appolonaries was used, which by no means proves that the witness was in error, but this "gnat" may well be waived, it is so small compared with the "camel" of the canteen which no one denies the President might abolish in the army by such an order as that by which Secretary Long suppressed it in the navy. I will be glad to furnish the whole story of the canteen case to any who apply with stamp. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Practical Christian Unity.

We are all rejoicing in our successful efforts to raise our church debt. This burden of $1,000 has hung over the church for thirteen years. The success of this enterprise is due to the untiring efforts of Bro. C. W. Smith. The last $250 of the debt was raised at a grand union meeting of all the churches of our town. In this service the M. E. pastor preached a good union sermon and then a call was made for money. The amount was soon raised. Then the members of the church, and those of our sister churches, and those of no church, rejoiced together. We praise God for his blessings to us. J. N. THOMAS, Pastor.

Missionary.

THE SUPREME MOTIVE FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Addressed to the Churches.

CHAS. LOUIS LOOS.

The plea for world-wide missions does not rest for its strong ground, i. e., its primary motive, on the temporal blessings which Christian civilization brings to the nations. This argument with all it embraces—of vast moment and most legitimate beyond all question—must yet not be placed in the foreground to support the great plea for the evangelization of the unchristian world. Liberal Christianity, that regards sin only as an inevitable moral weakness to be overcome by the power of a higher ethical, even spiritual culture, and by the force of time in growth, as infantile weakness is conquered by maturity of years, and holds the cross of Christ as but a sublime example of moral and spiritual heroism, powerful in its regenerating effect on the human soul—would make the rescuing of our race from its ignorance and degradation, and its elevation to a high state of intellectual, moral and spiritual development and life, necessarily the first and supreme motive of any effort to Christianize the yet degraded peoples of the earth. Hence, Liberal Christianity, in any of its forms, has therefore never been a missionary power. It has a certain passion for propagandism at home, but reveals no ardent desire to seek the dark places of the earth to bring into them the light of the gospel of salvation. The temporal blessings, that are the attendants of higher civilization, constitute the lesser, the secondary reasons in the argument for the evangelization of the nations. "Bring forth your strong reasons, saith the Lord." These strong reasons the Word of God supplies; Jesus himself proclaims them. Hear him:

"Thus it is written," he said to his disciples immediately before his ascension, "and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." And—

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned."

The charge of Jesus to Paul, the missionary to the Gentile world, is the fullest form of the apostolic commission: "I have appeared unto thee for this purpose: to make thee a minister and a witness both of the things which thou has seen, and of the things in the which I will yet appear unto thee, delivering thee from the people [the Jews] and the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee; to open their eyes in order to turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may have forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them who are sanctified by faith that is in me." Here Christ himself sets forth the true motive for missions.

That sin has come unto the world, and that condemnation has come upon all men because all have sinned. That sin has separated between man and God; that it is the source of all human woes—of the great world-sorrow. That Christ has come into the world as "the Lamb of God," by his sacrifice to take away the sin of the world. That repentance and remission of sins is to be preached through Christ for the salvation of men—these are the potent elements of the mighty argument for Foreign Missions. This plea reaches deepest into the human heart, down to the very fountain of moral and spiritual life, and is mightiest to rescue fallen man from the dominion of Satan and bring him to the power and glory of a new life of righteousness.

To preach this gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to Jew and Gentile; to preach it with all the passionate love, the energy and authority which it inspires—this is our mission to the pagan world, indeed to all mankind. "God forbid that we should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world has been crucified to us and we unto the world."

I have written this as an appeal to the Christian people to whom it may come, in behalf of our Foreign Missions. For, properly understood and properly proclaimed, it is the most potent motive, also, that can be offered to the church to arouse it to put forth its utmost strength in support of this holy cause. Herein is God's motive and Christ's; and that which moved the apostles and the early church to bear the message of the cross to the nations and so wonderfully sustained their faith and devotion as the messengers of Christ amid all the perils of martyrdom, and inspired the apostolic men of every age who have gone into the world of darkness in the face of every peril, to rescue our race from sin and death. It has been "mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds" of Satan and to the overcoming of the unbelief of Christians and their sinful indifference to the cause of God in "the regions of darkness and the shadow of death." I repeat it, where this argument fails with the hearts of men in the church and in the ungodly world, all fails.

And yet, after this chief argument, we urge others, whose virtue follows it as the effect does the cause. But always "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these" other great blessings "shall be added."

It is with enlightened Christians a matter beyond all controversy, that the church that is richest in its sincere devotion to the holy cause of the world's evangelization is richest also in all that exalts and glorifies it in the divine life. And this is true also of the individual Christian. We see this with our eyes everywhere.

It is a noteworthy fact, moreover, that the wonderful progress our cause has made during the last generation has coincided with the period of our real activity in Home and Foreign Missions. And that the lines of this remarkable prosperity have fallen upon those churches that have been most generously zealous in the missionary cause, and in proportion to this devotion, is also evident. Not only have we ourselves learned to know this, but others—and the best judges among them—have attributed our growth largely to the development of our activity in missions. This is the mystery of the great Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati last October, the like of which was never witnessed before in our land, or perhaps anywhere else.

And yet, let us well understand it, we have only begun our effort for the evangelization of the great unchristian world. No man can measure the vastness of this field, nor understand the mighty labor its conquest involves. All we know is that it is to us measureless; all we can do in wisdom, and in view of this, is to develop the utmost strength of our resources, as did God, in the work of saving the world.

To make what we have done really effectual, we must steadily enlarge and strengthen our forces in the fields. Our missionaries feel this intensely; they cry to us constantly for increased help in every respect. And we, here at home, who know well the situation abroad and have the success of our work at heart, are fully and painfully aware of this urgent need.

We look anxiously, but still hopefully, to the first Sunday in March to reveal to us the ardent, large sympathy of our churches with this glorious work of God among the nations afar off.

A. E. COREY AND WIFE.

[A. E. Corey is the successful pastor of the church at Oskaloosa, Ia. They will sail for Hawaii in March.]

Plans for the Year.

The Foreign Society has formulated the following plans for the Silver Jubilee Year:

1. To raise $200,000. This amount can and ought to be raised. The society has received $1,300,000 since its organization, twenty-four years ago.

2. To enlist, if possible, 3,500 contributing churches. Last year the number was 3,051. All will agree this is not an unreasonable gain to expect.

3. The churches as churches are asked for $75,000. Last year they gave about $56,000. The average last year was only $18.61. Shall we not make the average this year at least $25?

4. It is hoped the Annuity Fund will be increased from $70,000 to $100,000 by September 30. This fund has proven a wonderful help in providing necessary buildings.

5. At least three new missionaries will be sent to Japan. The need of more workers in this field is most distressing.

6. At least one good man must be sent to Turkey, if the receipts will justify.

7. It is proposed to reinforce the mission at Bolengi, Africa.

8. Two missionaries will sail for the Hawaiian Islands in March.

9. Four missionaries will go out to Manila, Philippine Islands, in October or November next.

A cry for reinforcements comes from every field. Much more than the above ought to be done, and every possible effort will be made to carry out the above program.

All depends upon the receipts from the churches the first Sunday in March. That day will be the supreme test of our missionary growth for the whole year. It will mark a forward step or a retrogression.

We cannot afford to go backward. We must not stand still. The hand of the Lord beckons us onward!

The offering will not be what it ought to be without careful and thorough preparation.

A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

March Offering Notes.

W. E. Reeves, Denison, Kan., says: "The March Offering will always be taken where I preach. It always has been." This kind of preachers is what makes our work grow rapidly and permanently.

Many churches do not have a pastor, but they will observe the March Offering, notwithstanding. Clinton Payne, Bryan, Ohio, represents hundreds of churches in the following: "We have no pastor at present, but I will work the matter up the best I can."

There is a growing appreciation of the apportionment plan. A day does not pass without somebody asking what the apportionment of his church is. C. J. Saunders, McPherson, Kan., says: "We expect to pay our apportionment and as much more as possible."

W. E. Crabtree, of San Diego, Cal., knows the value of Foreign Missions. He says: "Our church is never happier or more whole-hearted than when giving to Foreign Missions."

W. J. Grinstead, Trenton, Ky., has a large outlook for the future, and well may he have. He says: "We are heartily in the movement for $200,000 in this the Silver Jubilee Year, and $1,000,000 in ten years more."

This cause of World-wide Missions is taking deep and firm hold upon the hearts of our preachers especially. The following from Vernon Stauffer voices the sentiments of hundreds of our preachers when he says: "The foreign work becomes increasingly important to me."

We are hearing from scores of church officers and other brethren who lament the fact that their preachers will not make any move toward preparing for the March Offering. In many cases the church is far ahead of the preacher on the subject of World-wide Missions.

The churches will do well to take a pardonable pride in excelling in the way of the offering. H. Warner Newby, of Guthrie, Okla., sounds the proper note when he says: "Guthrie will try to be the banner church of Oklahoma for Foreign Missions."

A young lady who is not a member of the church proposes to pay one-half of a missionary's salary one year if some one will agree to pay the other half. This young lady works for her living. Last year she sent us $200, and has just sent us $50 on this year. The salary of a missionary one year is $600. Who will give $300 of the amount?

It is hoped every church will take a special interest in raising its full apportionment. If this is done it will insure the $200,000. Let the whole day, March 4, be given up to raising the apportionment.

PASADENA, CAL.—"This church is $835 in debt. Its membership is from forty to sixty. There is only one member worth more than $1,000, but we will have part in the $200,000.—Loren Howe." It would be difficult to imagine a much weaker church than this, and yet it has an interest in the evangelization of the world. Such a church will grow and prosper.

If you have not already done so, please order March Offering supplies. The most thorough preparation should be made. Address

C. W. B. M. News Notes.

The first quarter of the missionary year, which closed with the passing of 1899, has been very full of activity. Five new missionaries have been furnished India. These are Dr. Mary Longdon and Miss Freddie Ehrenberg, who are stationed at Deoghur; Miss Susie Rawson, at Mahoba; Miss Ottley, at Bina, and an assistant teacher for Mrs. Lohr in Bilaspur. This reinforces each of the India stations.

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Omer, of Martinsville, Va., are stationed in Monterey, Mexico, having reached their field Jan. 14th. They write hopefully of the outlook. Miss Clara Case, of Ann Arbor, Mich., has joined them; Miss Bertha Mason, of Houston, Texas, will be with them soon, and Francesco Puebla will follow, giving five new missionaries to Mexico.

The work in the home field has also been enlarged, six new points having been added to the list of states and local fields helped by the C. W. B. M. This enlargement calls for activity all along the lines of our organization, for the work both old and new must be fostered.

The situation in India calls for prayerful consideration and relief. Bilaspur and Bina, two C. W. B. M. stations, are in the midst of the famine district and the missionaries are working heroically to meet the responsibilities thrust upon them. We need help for them. Send it to us that we may forward it to them for relief work. But let each member of the C. W. B. M. understand the regular offerings of the auxiliaries should not be sent for the famine fund. The regular offerings provide for our pastors, evangelists, missionaries, teachers, physicians, nurses, Bible women, orphans and workers of various kinds in both home and foreign fields. To divert the auxiliary offerings will mean to cripple the work. Personal gifts, self-denial offerings, money from friends whose hearts are touched by India's bitter need, these should come and we trust they will come freely and rapidly. They should be sent to the corresponding secretary, 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

MRS. O. A. BURGESS, Pres.,
MRS. HELEN E. MOSES, Cor. Sec.

Who Will Help?

Many of our C. W. B. M. auxiliaries are languishing for lack of nurture. They are planted like a flower in the snowy Northland and left to the blighting influence of ignorance and lack of sympathy, and have about equal chances with the flower for life.

What man would plant his seed and say to it "grow," and with no further effort await the perfected fruit? Who would invest his money in a business venture and then retire, and with scissors in hand, calmly await the time when he should clip coupons from bonds accrued from its profits? This is just what we are doing with this work of Christ's. We establish it, then leave it to die, but hoping all the while for rich fruitage. It must be watched and tended with love and care, or death, slow or swift, will surely overtake it. But what can we do? Our hands are tied by lack of money for state development, not because the women are unwilling to give for it, but because they do not realize the need. Help must come from without. God has opened the eyes of many to the importance of this work. Some are crying, "Come to us or we must disband." Some are asking, "What can I do?" One woman, not rich, but strong in love for Christ and state, has offered "to go" if we can pay her expenses. Four others are ready to go for small salaries. Isn't it sad that with so much unused money in our commonwealth these willing to go cannot be sent to those eager to have them? There should be, at least, four women out during the spring months. Who will help to send them? Will not the men and women of wealth, to whom the service of Christ is sweet, come at once with personal gifts to this fund that we may put these willing servants to work now? Surely, there are many willing to help if they only knew the need. $50 will keep two women in the field a month, or $25 will pay for one. $10 will supply traveling expenses for a month. These or lesser sums will be gratefully accepted and promptlyput into use. All amounts will be acknowledged through the press.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. L. G. BANTZ, Sec. Mo. C. W. B. M.

The Only Solution.....

There is no longer any question as to how Schrader, Schlatter, Dowie, the Christian Scientists, Magnetic Healers, and all other so-called divine and supernatural healers, produce their phenomena. They are all (though ignorantly) using a natural law, psychology, which is universal in its application when properly understood. We have mastered this science, and can demonstrate it. It is all in suggestion. It is applicable to saint and sinner alike. We cure all kinds of diseases. We teach others the science in class and by mail. Our new mail course is the most complete ever published. Write for our pamphlet, which is free to all. We are endorsed by the doctors and preachers. Hear what the great evangelist, J. V. Updyke, says of our mail course: "I have read the mail course of the Parsons School of Suggestion, and can heartily recommend it."—J. V. Updyke. Address

Fifth Illinois District Notes.

W. H. McGinnis has lately taken up the work at Atwater and Shaw's Point. We are very glad to see these churches under pastoral care again. The brethren at Greenfield are planning for a tent meeting next summer. Our cause there is evil spoken against by the beloved "branches" of the church. But thereby a few faithful souls are being provoked unto good works. Brother Shayse, of Girard, is in a meeting, ably assisted by our singing evangelist, Guy B. Williamson. Several have made the good confession. J. W. Knight is in a meeting with H. S. Mavity at Pleasant Plains. The district will hold a meeting at Raymond in February, conducted by Evangelist Knight. All churches that have not raised their apportionment for state work ought to do so before Foreign Missions claims too much of their attention. The district would like to keep an evangelist in the field, but can not do so unless the churches will hurry up with their apportionments. The district secretary will stay at Virden another year.

Notes and News.

Four Months in New York.

The undersigned took charge of the work in West Fifty-sixth Street on the first of last October. He found the membership rather discouraged. They are now cheerful and expectant. The people are alive, enthusiastic and are pushing forward. Thirty-seven new members have been added. Our audiences have grown most encouragingly. Some folks are now prophecying a "full house." Our finances, which have presented our most difficult problem here for years, are improving steadily and give promise of sustaining the work without a deficit in a short time. The writer has built up a Bible class of an average attendance of thirty-five, not one member of which was heretofore in our Sunday-school. Our Y. P. S. C. E. is larger by some thirty new members, with an average attendance at its prayer-meeting of about eighty. The C. W. B. M. had an enrolled membership four months ago of forty-three. We meet next week to celebrate the securing of the one hundredth member, and now lead the state in membership. We are publishing a weekly paper, which is entered at the post office as second class matter and is sent to subscribers every Saturday, containing sermon announcement for the next day with all announcements for the week. It now reaches four hundred people thus and its circulation is rapidly growing. We find it one of our most effective ways of securing the attention of the people. We find some most earnest and efficient people here with whom to work, and to them under God's blessing is due the credit for what has thus far been accomplished. We have not solved all our problems, nor climbed all the steps, but we are getting under good headway and look forward to victory, led by the Master. B. Q. DENHAM, Pastor.

Bishop McCabe.

THE FAMOUS MINISTER'S EXPERIENCE WITH COFFEE.

The well-known bishop said to one of his friends, some years ago, "I was a great sufferer from severe headaches, and at times after traveling many miles to dedicate a church or perform some other important duty, found myself confined to a bed when the time came, and was unable to carry out my work. I finally discovered that when I left off coffee for a few days, the headaches disappeared, and by further experiment, discovered that the coffee was undoubtedly the cause of the difficulty, which finally entirely disappeared when I left off coffee altogether."

The person to whom this remark was made is Mrs. Amy K. Glass, wife of a Methodist minister at Rolfe, Ia. She says: "My own experience with coffee was very convincing. I was grown up before I ever drank coffee, but was advised by a friend (who meant it kindly) to use weak tea and coffee, because a warm drink aided digestion. I soon thereafter commenced to have nervous and sick headaches; could not believe it was the coffee.

"My husband, who had suffered from dyspepsia while a young man in college, and found relief by leaving off coffee, often told me he was satisfied my headaches were caused by coffee, so I gave up the coffee and took up Postum Cereal Food Coffee. The change taught me in a most convincing manner that coffee was the cause of the headaches, but now I have an equally good coffee in Postum, and its health-giving properties are simply undeniable. Our little children use Postum regularly and go off to school as healthy and happy as children should. If ever husband or myself take a drink of weak coffee at an evening gathering or church social, we are kept awake until past the middle of the night. Yours for health."

State Mission Notes.

When this comes to you the month for state mission collections will be gone. It has been a month of joy and sadness; joy that we had responses from so many and some of them such noble ones, sadness that we could not interest all enough to secure a contribution. There has not been a single failure reported where the preacher has brought the matter before the church. Now we want to give you this

NOTE OF JOY.

This has been the best January for state missions for several years. More churches have responded and more money has been given. I am sure this will come as a great gladness to those who have helped to realize it, and to those whose appeals have been awaiting this month's returns. I want you to see the list up to and including Friday morning, Jan. 26, of those churches and individuals who have sent contributions. Those marked with a * have paid their apportionment in full; those with  have doubled theirs. Look in this list and see if your church is there, and if not it will be in order for you to ask why? Here is the have said we will take our collection later on. We have received assurances from some of the assistant corresponding secretaries that they will not rest till every church in their jurisdiction has sent some kind of contribution.

Among these are S. D. Dutcher, Audrain; G. E. Prewett, Chariton; D. O. Smart, Kansas City; W. F. Hamann, St. Louis; F. M. Rogers, Jasper; W. W. Blalock, Barton; M. S. These be men whom God delights to honor, for it is written, "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." Others too will do their best even though they have not yet reported. With this fine array of help we can but do more than ever for state missions. If you have not sent in your contribution send it now. It is needed. To one and all we send a hearty God bless you.

ANNUAL REPORTS.

CALIFORNIA, MO.

The Bible-school here is in a flourishing condition, with T. M. Fulks as superintendent. Two hundred and forty-five in school the 21st. All departments of church work are prospering under the leadership of C. C. Hill. He has greatly endeared himself to us all. P. D. GUNTER.

TOLEDO, ILL.

I closed a two weeks' meeting with the Jewett Church last night with four additions, the church re-established and money raised for regular work. Jewett is a small town near here in which we have a church that has been in bad shape for two years. No "prejudice removed," but it was a triumph for country and village evangelization. I have a letter from Bro. C. C. Rowlison, of Indianapolis, in which he says: "This church has grown to a membership of one thousand, almost entirely by emigration from the country. The work you are engaged in is of supreme importance." I go to Fairview Church this week. It has been dead three years. E. E. HARTLEY.

JOPLIN, MO.

I entered on my second year as minister of this congregation on January 1st. During 1899 we received at the regular services 120 members and lost 14, leaving a net gain of 106 and a total resident membership of 413, with all our various departments well organized for aggressive work, A total of $2,672.98 was raised, which paid all debts and current expenses. This included a mortgage debt of nearly $800. The church is now free from debt for the first time in many years. Offerings were made to our various missions and benevolences. We are now planning to erect a new building and open a mission in the South End. Joplin has 30,000 people and we need two strong churches. W. F. TURNER.

LEXINGTON, KY.

With December, 1899, the writer closed the eighth year of his ministry with the Broadway Church, Lexington. In nearly every respect it was the most successful year of his ministry. There were, without any outside help, 141 additions, 69 by letter, 66 by confession, three restored and three from the Baptists. We dismissed 77 by letter, 27 of these going to strengthen the weaker congregations of the city. Twelve of our members died. We raised in all departments for expenses, $4,498.58, for missions and benevolence, $2,232.04, making a total raised for all purposes of $6,720.62. Every department of our work is in good condition. We start off in the new year full of hope. M. COLLIS.

GREAT DEMAND FOR BELLS.

The Output of 1900 will be Greater than Ever Before.

Churches, schools, public buildings and farm houses have made such extraordinary demands upon the famous Blymyer bell foundry at Cincinnati that it has been found necessary to build a new factory twice the size of the old one and to double its capacity for making these sweet toned monitors. The new factory is 320x118 feet, situated so conveniently to the trunk-line railways that better facilities for rapid filling of orders are gained. Blymyer bells are manufactured by the Cincinnati Bell Foundry Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, who will send to prospective purchasers an illustrated catalogue giving reasons for the excellent quality and great durability of their product.

My permant address for the future is 1384 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill. I can be secured on very reasonable terms to hold special meetings. —H. T. MORRISON.

Newville, Jan. 29.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting at this place. Twelve made the good confession and were baptized into the body of Christ. Bedford, Feb. 1.—We are in the third week of the meeting with 60 additions. R. W. Abberly, of Columbus, O., is doing the preaching, and well and forcibly is he doing it. The old gospel, when preached fervently and eloquently from a pure heart, is still the power of God unto salvation. The congregation last Sunday unanimously voted to put up a new church building composed of oolitic limestone, of which Bedford is famed. The structure will cost about $20,000. Intense interest and unity pervades all the services. Milton O. Reeves, of Columbus, Ind., "the sweet Hosier singer," has helped us greatly in our meeting.—JAMES SMALL.

Charlestown, Jan. 28.—The churches observed the week of prayer, and by previous agreement we all began in our own churches a series of special services. We agreed to hold a union service each day from church to church and at night preach in our own pulpits. I am pleased with the experiment, for it aroused the entire community and was a great success. When the 10 days agreed upon closed there had been added to the Presbyterian Church seven new members, to the Methodist Church 10. I baptized 21 and received five otherwise, making 26. The meeting ended yesterday with a total added to Chsistian Church of 28, or 34 since I came here three months ago. Home.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

Home, what is home? A tent beside a stream,
A marble house in town.
Home is a place to rest in and dream,
To throw the burden down.
Home is the place where love is, that is all—
A port for those who roam.
Four walls of stone may make a house or hall,
But love must make the home.

I do not know what heaven is, or where,
If it be near or far;
Perhaps it lies around us in air,
Or in some distant star.
And if it glimmers green with turf and tree,
Or white with spire and dome,
I neither know nor care—enough for me
That I shall be at home!

The Lost Emigrants.

CHAPTER XIII.

At our next meeting, in obedience to the expressed wish, Prof. Fergus arose and said: "As to how the Jews under the Old Testament before the Savior were saved it would be a waste of time to consider.

"The all-important question with us is: How are we Gentiles, under the New Testament and after the Savior, to be saved?

"I recognize the value of the Old Testament. But its value is because of Christ. Not a word of it would ever have been written but for Christ. It is full of Jesus. He is there in history, in prophecy, in song, in type and symbol, from Genesis to Malachi. It is the index finger of God pointing the world to the coming Savior. It was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, but when he is come we are no longer under the schoolmaster—we are not under the law, but under the gospel.

"However preached in promise in the Old Testament, the gospel was never preached in fact until it became a fact.

"It became a fact only when Christ was crucified and raised from the dead (1 Cor. 15:1-4). How could he save us from our sins until 'he died for our sins?'

"It was after that and not before that he issued the great commission, saying: 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you' (Matt. 28:18-20). This is the first and only commission in the history of the world that ever proposed terms of salvation to Gentiles—to us. Analyze it as given in the four Gospels and you will agree with me that the duties of the sinner are:

"1. He must hear the preached gospel.
"2. He must believe.
"3. He must repent.
"4. He must be baptized.

"This is the logical conclusion to which any one must come who studies the commissiom of our Savior.

"It now remains to consider whether the apostles, to whom this commission was entrusted, were faithful in carrying out its requirements.

"The Acts of the Apostles is generally conceded to be an inspired account of conversions. It is the book to study if we would learn how people were saved under the gospel. The first conversions were on the day of Pentecost. Peter, faithful to his trust, preached the gospel of a crucified and risen Lord. They heard. They were pierced in the heart. Under conviction they cried, 'What shall we do?' Promptly came the inspired answer: 'Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye', etc. (Acts 2:38).

"Now I ask: Did Peter or did he not carry out the terms of the commission?"

McGregor: "One condition omitted. He did not require them to believe."

Prof. Fergus: "Very true, and why not? A wise physician adjusts his remedy to the exact stage of the disease. So did Peter to the sin-sick soul. Did he ignore faith because it was unimportant or a matter of indifference? Nobody believes it.

"Observe: Peter had declared Jesus to be the author of the wonderful phenomena they had witnessed. He declared him as both Lord and Christ.

"When they heard this they were pierced in the heart. Why? Because they believed what Peter said, that Jesus whom they had crucified was Lord and Christ. Nobody in the world doubts their belief of this. Now look at the case:

"1. They had heard the gospel.
"2. They had believed.
"3. They must repent.
"4. They must be baptized.

"I have not time to go over all the recorded cases of conversions, and so I say, if you will faithfully study them, you will nowhere find a case in which the apostles failed to require a compliance with all the conditions of Christ's commission."

"Pardon me," said Mr. Smithson, "but until you explain a case or two I must doubt the ingenious uniformity of which you speak. The jailer (Acts 16) asked of Paul and Silas, 'What must I do to be saved?' and the answer was, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.' Was not that a case of salvation on the one condition of faith?"

Mr. Fergus: "I thank Mr. Smithson for bringing up this case. In the first place, I answer, if salvation is offered to one person on faith alone, it is to all. But it is not so granted to all, for 'among the chief rulers many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God' (John 12:42,43). Here are unsaved believers. Again, 'Faith, if it have not works, is dead, being alone' (Jas. 2:17). Will a dead faith justify? If not, it follows that faith alone will not.

"But a living faith will justify. Because it is immensely greater than an abstract faith and comprehends the entire surrender to Christ. Let us look at the jailer's case.

"He was a pagan. Paul and Silas were the first preachers that ever entered Europe, and this was their first city. The jailer was in absolute ignorance of Christ and his salvation. He had heard these men singing praises to their God in their dungeon. He had felt the earthquake's shock, which has liberated the prisoners. He was about to commit suicide. Paul prevented this. The jailer then asked, What must I do to be saved? An unbeliever, he must believe on the Lord Jesus.

"That he might believe, Paul and Silas preached the gospel. 'They spake unto him the Word of the Lord and to all that were in his house.' He believed the inspired message, for 'he took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes.' Yes, he who had brutally scourged their bare backs and thrust them into the dungeon now washes their lacerated backs. That action speaks with more eloquence than words of penitence and change of heart. He loves these men whom he had hated. Having done this deed of kindness, he was baptized, with his house; and do we wonder that 'he rejoiced, believing in God with all his house?"

"From the recorded facts, Mr. Smithson, we will have to classify his case with the others.

"1. He heard the gospel.

"2. He believed.

"3. He repented.

"4. He was baptized."

Mr. McGregor: "There is another case I want to submit to you: that of the direct and instantaneous conversion of Saul by the Lord on the highway to Damascus. If you can reconcile that with your ingenious theory, I will surrender."

Prof. Fergus: "When you say, 'direct and instantaneous conversion,' I am not so sure but you are taking for granted the very thing that is to be proved; but waiving that, what do you take to be the purpose of the Lord's appearance to Saul?"

McGregor: "To convert him, of course."

Fergus: "Will you read Acts 26:16?"

McGregor reads: "But rise and stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose: to make thee a minister and a witness."

Fergus: "Very well: when Jesus declares the purpose, let us be careful not to contradict him by asserting another purpose.

"Saul could have been converted by hearing the gospel preached by man, but he could never have been an apostle without Jesus appearing to him. When an apostle was chosen to fill the place of the Apostle Judas, Peter declared he must be taken from the personal companions of Jesus, 'to be a witness with us of the resurrection' (Acts 1:21, 22). Paul (1 Cor. 9:1) says: 'Am I not an apostle? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?'

"I say, therefore, the specific purpose of the Lord's appearance to Paul was to make him an apostle, and incidentally it led to conversion.

"But was he instantly converted? I think not, because he was left in the dark physically and mentally. He asked for light, saying: 'Lord what wilt thou have me to do?' The answer was not given, but he was told to go into the city to learn his duty. Three days he spent in the city in blindness and mental gloom and prayer. Three days of waiting to be told what to do. Then an inspired preacher was sent to tell him. Let me read (Acts 22:14-16): 'And he [Ananias] said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldst know his will, and see the just One and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.'

"From the incontrovertible facts before us we are bound to classify this case with the others, and to say:

"1. Saul heard the preached gospel.

"2. He believed.

"3. He repented.

"4. He was baptized."

"Well," said I, "Professor, I admit the logical consistency of your views. I am learning and am thankful. But the conversion of Cornelius, you will certainly admit to be an exception to your rule. That was surely in direct answer to prayer."

Fergus: "Yes, Miss Winston, yours is a strong case. Cornelius 'prayed to God always.' His prayers and alms had 'came up for a memorial before God.' All you attribute to Cornelius as a consecrated, praying man is granted. More: he was a believer in God—a penitent believer, but he needed something more. He needed to believe the gospel and to be saved by the Lord Jesus, 'the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved' (Acts 4:12). Living in an age after the New Testament had been sealed by the blood of Jesus, he was serving God under the law, which was done away. He was therefore in disobedience to the gospel.

"God heard his prayer and sent an angel to him, not to preach the gospel to him, for Jesus had committed that work to man, but to set in motion at Cæsarea and Joppa the complicated machinery to get an inspired preacher to tell him what he ought to do. This was Peter, of whom it is said (Acts 11:14): 'Who shall tell the words whereby thou and thy house shall be saved.'

"To be brief, Peter came and preached the gospel to Cornelius and his household—told them the story of Jesus—and while he spake 'the Holy Spirit fell on them as on us at the beginning;' that is, it now fell on these the first Gentile converts, as it did on the Jewish disciples on the beginning day of Pentecost—in both instances conferring supernatural gifts. Then Peter said: 'Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.'

"Observe: the first command to the pagan jailer is to believe. Why? Because he had not taken the second step, hearing being the first.

"The first command on the day of Pentecost was to repent, because having heard they now believed that Jesus was the Christ, but had not taken the third step.

"In the case of Cornelius the command is to be baptized, because having heard and believed and repented, the one remaining duty was this fourth step.

"And now no one will dissent from our summing up:

"1. Cornelius and his household heard the gospel.

"2. They believed.

"3. They repented.

"4. They were baptized."

Grit to Say "I Erred."

Governor Roosevelt has been reviewing the acts of Police Commissioner Roosevelt. In 1896, as police commisioner, he attended a pugilistic exhibition in New York, and pronounced it unobjectionable. In fact, he waxed rather enthusiastic over boxing as a manly sport. Thereupon the New York police so construed the Horton law under which boxing was permitted as to open the door wide to the most brutal prizefights. New York has had a two years' carnival of bloody, rib-smashing slugging. Sluggers burly and sluggers bantam have been receiving the unadulterated homage of the newspapers and theatre-goers. Politicians formed companies to promote prizefighting.

With such ideals before them, the muscular youths of New York naturally turned to prizerings as the shortest road to glory and gorged pocketbooks. Boys that were earning five dollars a week with kicks, came under the spell of the "manly sport," and aspired to become Sullivans and make $5,000 a night and applause. Prizefighting be came so common in New York that all disguises were dropped, until the triumphant reign of the beetle-browed bruiser offended common decency.

It is a fine commentary on the manliness of Governor Roosevelt, with his rugged predilections for athletic sports, that he now sees the Horton law in its true light, and recommends in his message to the legislature that it be repealed. It is not consistency, but inconsistency that is entitled to be called a jewel in this case, and hope for the future looms up big in a public official that has the moral courage to go against himself and his past errors in judgment in so robust a way.—Christian Endeavor World.

How the Sewage Comes Down From Chicago.

(With apologies to Southey.)

From a St. Louis point of view.

W. T. MOORE.

Here it comes seething,
There it goes breathing—
Breathing with endless germs of disease;
Now it moves slowly,
With mien calm and lowly,
As if some merited wrath to appease.
Again it moves faster,
Bearing death and disaster
In every dark crest of its foam;
Down, down toward the ocean,
With ceaseless commotion,
It starts on its mission of woe to each home.
Running and crawling,
Springing and sprawling,
Wrangling and striving,
Swimming and diving,
Rising and bubbling,
Retreating and doubling,
Rolling and tumbling,
Fretting and grumbling;
It makes the flesh quiver
As it comes down the river,
And simmering and glimmering and shimmering,
And plunging and lunging and sponging,
And groaning and moaning and droning,
And pouring and roaring and scoring,
And ranting and canting and panting,
And wheeling and reeling and stealing,
And soaking and croaking and smoking,
And rumbling and crumbling and tumbling,
And wheezing and sneezing and freezing and greasing,
And dashing and crashing and splashing and smashing,
And clattering and battering and shattering and spattering,
And jumping and thumping and bumping and lumping,
And skipping and flipping and ripping and dipping,
And boiling and toiling and oiling and coiling,
And rattling and battling and prattling and tattling,
Resisting and twisting and whisking and frisking;
With ceaseless endeavor,
No matter what weather,
That sewage will move on its way:
When it reaches our city
We'll say, "Oh, the pity"—
And that won't be all we will say.

Another Failure of the Editor's Sleep Remedy.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—

I have seen your recipe for insomnia. I have been troubled that way myself lately, and thought last night I would try it.

This was my experience: I found that I could in a general way direct my mind to the boyhood period, but when there it ran wild and selected its own memories. I remembered my next older brother and myself had two white calves in which we took special pride. One of them had gained the distinction of winning second premium at a county fair. My still older brother paid us a visit, and we turned his white horse into the calf lot. In a few minutes we looked out of the window and saw the horse in hot pursuit of the calves, the larger one in front, then the small one and next came the horse with ears laid back. The pursuit had become furious—the calves in terror, tails straight out behind, had taken the downgrade; too frightened to turn, the larger one struck square against the fence, fortunately the rail broke and he went through without pause into the next field, and his mate went through the same hole without a scratch; the horse brought up with a crash against the fence. The next day that leading calf had a bump on his nose. I got to thinking that every pioneer for liberty got a bump on his nose, and that was not conducive to sleep.

My mind then took a jump to the time when we undertook to scare father. We took a bag and stuffed it with straw and dressed it like a man and hung it over a beam with a rope and fastened the end of the rope to the barn door latch, so that when the door was opened it would fall in front of the one that opened it. Then we hid in the hay mow to see the fun. It worked better than we had expected, as father's plug hat did testify, for he was a prompt man, and whenever he opened a door he went in quickly. The dummy did not fall in front, but on the head of our parent. There were wakeful impressions made on me on that occasion, which time cannot efface.

Then my mind flew away to a certain Fourth of July, when the same boys were hunting for fun, not content with the ordinary firing of crackers. We thought of a way to elevate the noise, so captured a barn swallow in a net as it flew through the swallow hole, and then tied a cracker with a long thread to the swallow's leg, lit it, and then let the bird fly away. It worked. That afternoon, as the usual row of swallows were in place on the gable ridge of the barn, all but one was perched straight as penguins; that one was industriously trying to untie a string from its leg. I got to thinking what a heathen that boy back there was, and got so mad at myself that I could not sleep.

The next jump was to the woods lot, where we bent saplings. We climbed to the top of a limber sapling and then swung off with feet in air, and kept fast hold with our hands, trusting to the sapling to bend properly and land us safe. This was fine sport as long as it worked well. However, my brother tackled an unusually large one, which happened to be very limber at the top and very sturdy at the bottom. The result was that it bent only at the top and I soon discovered him, like Absalom, suspended in midair, only he hung by the hands and not by the hair, calling lustily for help. I had to climb that sapling out over the curve and add my weight to his, which was a slow process, and even then our feet did not touch the ground, and we had to drop by an agreed signal, which was oral. I was a little too quick for him and he got an extra toss and came to the ground in a disorganized heap. I, of course, expected gratittude, but if you had heard the string of adjectives which were only allowed to a preacher's boys on rare occasions—calling me a miserable, ungrateful, lazy, good-for-nothing, and threatened that he would never make me another bow and arrow as long as he lived, and he had a good notion to thrash me—you would have known that he was not specially grateful for his deliverance. The reason was that he knew I was immensely tickled all the time, and that because I was laughing I could not climb faster. The moral which came into my mind was that a boy or a man will forgive all things but ridicule; and I got wider awake than usual. No, Bro. Garrison, it will not work; only where the boy is a quiet, pious, sleepy boy. Then I conceive that boyish memories might send one fast asleep.

How did I get to sleep? I tried to compose, in my mind, a suitable editorial for a religious newspaper. Not one of the "Jack the Ripper" sort, but a very moral and orthodox one, and was soon in the arms, not only of approving conscience, but of Morpheus.

Yours as ever,

C. C. SMITH.

[We should have stated, perhaps, in connection with our Easy Chair prescription for insomnia, that it would not work with unimaginative, matter-of-fact men, like McPherson and Smith, who would be unable to control their memory and guide it along bright and sunny pathways, and steer it around those boyish escapades, the recollection of which stirs up the conscience to lash the offender for unrepented sins. However, as the experience of these brethren has led them to make long-delayed confessions, we trust their slumber will be sweeter in the future.—EDITOR.]

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifie- in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purr pose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

The Advance Society.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Do you read five pages of history and thirty lines of poetry every week? No, you don't; at least some of you who are looking right at these very words, don't; and you know it. Why don't you? Don't you want to improve yourself? Are you willing to just grow up like an ordinary person—say Topsy—without the graces of polite literature, without knowing the pleasure that is to be obtained from good, wholesome books? You know your duty; do it. Join the Advance Society. You think thirty lines and five pages too small a thing, perhaps. Well, we don't object to you doing more. It's the habit we wish you to form. Don't lay down this paper and say, "Yes, the Advance Society is a pretty good thing," and go around without doing anything about it. Learn a quotation a week from a great author and thus absorb the aroma of genius. Why shouldn't you grow to like what is best? Stories are all right, if of the right sort. I like to read good stories. I like to write them. But I'll never spoil my teeth on fiction so I can't chew more substantial food!

"We write to send our names as members of the Advance Society. We are members of the Christian Church. We think the Red Box Clew so nice; we wish you had two pages instead of one."—Clara Aylsworth (13) and Maude Roland (15), Bethany, Neb. "I have been wanting to join the Av. S. I go to school and am 11. I read the Red Box Clew. I think Frank Douglas is the daughter of Mrs. Dew. I cannot believe she is the daughter of that old woman, Nance."—Pearl Bagley, Mabelvale, Ark. "Our society has not been very prosperous. We have had a hard struggle; none of us are ready for the Honor List; but beginning with to-day we mean to have our society grow. There are six of us. To-day we we gave a party at my home; twelve were there. It would encourage us if one of another band would write, telling how they are getting along."—Mabel Gunther, Waterloo, Ia. (529 Independence, Ave.) "I am very glad to say I have been on the Honor List. March 9th Jessie Shafer was having a jolly time on her birthday (I read her letter in your page). We were having a sorrowful time getting ready for our baby's funeral. I renew my membership. Instead of doing each week what you said to do, I did it every day."—Maude Seelinger, Butler, Mo. "I am very sorry to confess that I have not kept the Av. S. resolutions, so I want to join again. Summer is so full of play that I can't find time to do anything but swing and have a good time. Just think—I am 12! Last summer I had a "Mother Goose" party; all were dressed to represent some character. I represented Queen of Hearts. There was a Jack Horner pie and many other Mother Goose dishes. We had a large goose on a sheet with Mother G. riding it. The head of the goose was cut off and each child tried to put it on the right place, like you do at a 'donkey party.' Virgie Snyder got the first prize. We just had a splendid time, I tell you! I forgot to tell how interesting the Red Box Clew is. I enjoy it very much, and it always leaves off at the most interesting part, just like a chapter in a storybook. I think Frank is Mrs. Dew's long-lost daughter."—Minnie B. Snyder, Milton, Ky. "We keep a record of books lent to people, so we keep track of them. I wish you would have a suitable button made for members of the Av. S. I am reading Pilgrim's Progress."—Gerald Dever, Hume, Ill. "I have started to read the New Testament through and have finished the first four books. I read a chapter a day. I have read Robinson Crusoe through, and have started Black Beauty."—James L. Ledden. "I like the Red Box Clew and think Frank and Vega will be good friends. They got my quotation wrong; it is: 'Concentration alone conquers, by B. Buxton."—Madge Masters. "My cousin, Minnie Snyder, has begged me to join the Av. S. I have decided to do so. I am 11. Minnie and I go to Madison, Ind., to school; we have to cross the river every day, as we live on the opposite side. There is so much ice in the river now that we cannot go to school, and we are having a fine time at home. When my cousin was small her mother told her they were going to move to-morrow. The next morning when she awoke she exclaimed, joyfully, 'Oh, mamma, we are going to move; to-day is to-morrow!' I like the Red Box Clew very much; I think Frank is Mrs. Dew's daughter, and the husband of the woman who gave her the red box is the man who stole her."—Virgie Snyder, Milton, Ky. "Nov. 26th I began as a member of the Av. S., and have followed all the rules. You may again enroll my name."—Helen Ross, Independence, Mo.

Children, did you ever lose anything and prowl up and down the house without finding the least clew to it? Well, it's just so with some of your letters. I have lost them, and have looked in vain. I wish those left out would write again and tell me about it. One wrote of winter amusements, another of a narrow escape—all lost! Try me again and I won't do so any more. JESUS AT JACOB'S WELL.*

After the brief visit to Jerusalem, during which occurred the conversation with Nicodemus, embraced in last week's lesson, John tells us that Jesus and his disciples tarried a while in Judea and baptized. He himself did not administer the ordinance, but the disciples did so under his direction, as we are informed in John 4:2. John the Baptist had meanwhile changed the scene of his ministry from Bethabara to "Ænon, near to Salim," a place whose locality is now uncertain. We only know that it was a place whose abundant waters furnished facilities for the administration of the rite to which the Baptist was calling Israel. While here tidings came to John that Jesus was becoming the object of the people's attention, and that his disciples were now baptizing many more than were coming to the ordinance at John's hands. How nobly does this servant of God reply to this appeal to his baser nature. "He is the Bridegroom. I am but the friend whose chief joy it is to present the bride to him. My office is then ended. He must increase, but I must decrease. They who turn from me to him are turning from the reflecting moon to the light-giving Sun. All things have been given into his hands by the Father, and to believe in him is everlasting life."

But the Master did not long continue this phase of his ministry. So soon as he perceived that the multitude were coming to him, and that he and his disciples were in danger of being looked upon as mere successors of the Baptist in his prophetic and reformative work, he left Judea and went into Galilee. We hear no more of baptism being performed by him or his disciples until after his death and resurrection, when he had put into the ordinance such stores of truth and grace as should forever make sacred its striking symbolism. By the temporary administration of the rite introduced by John, Jesus gave his personal endorsement to the Baptist's ministry and sealed it as of heaven.

The journey into Galilee could be made in three ways, but Jesus chose the shortest, that which led directly through the province of Samaria. The people of this district were of mixed blood and corrupt religion. The story of their origin is found in 2 Kings, 17th chapter, and should be carefully read. Between this mongrel people and the pure Jews of Judea there could be no social or religious fellowship. They hated the Jews as bigots and hypocrites, who had added to their religion the traditions of their fathers until its primitive simplicity was lost. They were despised, in turn, by the Jews, as "dogs," who had mixed idolatry with the worship of Jehovah. After the return of Israel from the captivity, being forbidden to share in the worship of the temple in Jerusalem, the Samaritans built a temple on the summit of Mount Gerizim, the ruins of which were still sacred in the time of Jesus, as indeed they are to this day. It had been destroyed by Hyrcanus, about two hundred years afrer the time of its erection. Amid its ruins they still worshiped God and looked for the Messiah to come and honor their holy mountain with his presence. On the twin summits of Gerizim and Ebal Joshua had stationed the Levites and elders of the people, to rehearse in the ears of the whole nation the blessings and curses which would result from their obedience or disobedience to the Lord. In the narrow valley between these peaks was the parcel of ground given by Jacob to his son Joseph. The well of Jacob, lying at the foot of Gerizim, and at the mouth of this little valley, where it opens out into the larger plain, was a sacred spot in the eyes of the Samaritans, who prided themselves on their descent from Ephraim, the son of Joseph.

The Master and his disciples reached this station in their journey at the hour of noon. Jesus was weary and sank beside the well, sending his disciples into the adjacent village to secure food. No sooner was he left alone than there approached a woman from Sychar with her waterpot. Jesus asked her for a drink, a request which would scarcely be denied, one would think, even to an enemy. But so selfish and bigoted is the woman that she expresses surprise at the simple request. Without rebuking her for this want of humanity, the Master seeks to arouse in her a sense of her need of his gracious ministry. "Had you known who it was that asked you for a drink you would have sought from him the water that never faileth." Her life of toil rose up before her at his words, and she longed to find release from life's almost intolerable burden. At first she did not perceive his meaning. "Whence have you living water? You have no way of drawing it from this well. Are you greater than our father, Jacob, who digged this one, and have you found somewhere a better spring and more abundant?" Then he threw a glimpse of light into her dark soul by telling her that he could satisfy the thirst of the inner spirit, and make the heart that had been barren and desolate a very wellspring of life eternal. So carnal, however, has been the life of this poor woman that she cannot perceive the higher meaning of his words. She must be taught that sin is that which obstructs this stream of life and makes the soul barren. When, therefore, she asks that she be given this water of life, the Teacher bids her go and bring her husband. With these spiritual longings struggling for utterance within her, the woman cannot act a lie by representing as her husband one with whom she knows herself to be living in open sin. She humbly answers: "Sir, I have no husband." To her amazement the stranger at once recounts the story of her wretched life, and shows that its secrets are not hidden from his searching eyes. Ah! she would hide that shameful experience beneath some question or religious doctrine if she could. We want to change the subject when our consciences are being pricked. "Sir, I perceive that you be a prophet. Tell me, which people is right, your's or mine, in the dispute concerning the proper place of worship?" Jesus answers her by stating one of the most profound and beautiful principles that ever found its way into man's mind and heart. Not the place or circumstantials of worship, but its substance and spirit, are the essential factors in the service of the living God. "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship in spirit and truth." By this divine charter every loving, believing heart is made a holy temple, every spot on earth is made holy ground. Renan, the French philosopher, says of this declaration of the Master: "He founded the pure worship of all ages, of all lands, that which all elevated souls will embrace until the end of time. Not only was his religion on this day the best religion of humanity; it was the absolute religion, and if other planets have inhabitants endowed with reason and morality their religion cannot be different from that which Jesus proclaimed near Jacob's well." And yet, Renan would have us believe that the founder of the universal and ultimate religion was a mere dreaming, scheming Galilean peasant. Such is the credulity of unbelief.

This high and lofty truth is yet simple enough to make its impression on the mind and heart of the poor, sinful Samaritan woman. Does this not suggest to us that there is no truth too exalted to be given to the very simplest, provided only that the teacher have an overmastering love in his heart, and will embody the truth in simple speech? In the wakened soul of this poor sinner arises the memory of the promise to which even her people had been looking forward, of the Messiah who, when he came, would reveal to them all things. She speaks out her hope, and Jesus completes the joyous answer to her desires by revealing himself as the Christ. His wonderful knowledge of herself, his gentle rebuking of her sinful life, and his marvelous revelation of the spiritual character of true religion combine to prove that it is indeed he; and she hastens into the village to tell the people of the gracious presence that was at their very doors. A short stay in the town suffices to bring from the lips of many of the people the confession that Jesus is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world. Thus to a poor, sinful woman does Jesus make his first declaration of himself as the Christ; and to a village of outcast Samaritans does the conviction first come home that he is the Savior of the world. The story of this brief visit will help to explain the marvelous results of the coming, in after years, of the evangelist Philip to this region, as narrated in the eighth chapter of Acts. There were many who would remember the story of the woman and the words of the gracious teacher who had lingered a few days in their midst.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 18.

THE SIN OF LIQUOR-SELLING; HOW END IT?

(Hab. 2:1-15.)

President Hadley, of Yale University, has been suggesting to the country at large that the way to put an end to trusts is to ostracize the men who make them. Simple, isn't it? But who is going to do the ostracizing? People. But will the people do it? If they believe trusts to be an evil, and if they wish to put down evil practices. So there you are. The whole matter resolves itself into the education of the people on public questions, and the screwing of the people's courage up to act on their knowledge. In other words, Pres. Hadley's suggestion, which has been hailed as something great and new, is nothing more than a putting of salt on the bird's tail. It is but a superficial prescription, which implies a long process of preparation; and that preparation, when it is fulfilled, will usher in the millennium.

Now is it not the same with this matter of the saloon? How will you do away with it? "Why, easily enough," says one. "Let's just prevent it."

But who will prevent it? The people. But when will the people do it? When they are educated and obtain the moral backbone. And there you are at the same old stand, demanding a process of education. "Do you mean to say, then," says the objector, "that you would do nothing at all; fold your hands for a little more sleep?" By no means; but go at the good old process of studying the question of educating the people and stiffening their spines to act on their knowledge. It's an old-time prescription, but a precious good one and sanctioned by the Lord Christ.

There are some good men who do not find in the saloon an unmixed evil. Why was it that there was a movement sometime since, in New York, to sell liquor in certain of the churches, so as to provide more wholesome surroundings for its consumption? "Horrible!" you say. Well, but the men who engaged in that movement are not horrible. I know some of them and they are God-fearing men.

Then, there are the utterances of Dr. Rainsford, of St. George's Church, New York, who insists that "the saloon is a good thing for the rank and file of the poor. It is an assembling place. It supplies amusement. In short, it is the poor man's club house. To the overburdened in the slums of great cities there must be some relaxation. No church life is supplied them. The church is recreant to her trust and seeks the boulevards and avenues. They cannot afford costly clubs; therefore they take what is provided them. Only the few are led to excess by it. The multitude are benefited." This is Dr. Rainsford's argument. "He's a fiend!" you say. No, he's not a fiend; I know him, and I know he is a very fine type of English gentleman; one who loves the poor and studies their needs. I am far from endorsing these views. I am only seeking to show that there are many things to think of; and that we who can meet at the church door to talk horses or real estate, or who can whittle sticks on the goods boxes at the corner grocery, or read the periodicals and chat with friends in the leather chairs at the clubs, cannot deal with a great question like this in a jiffy.

You may rail at the saloonkeeper, and denounce his sin, and manufacture smoking rhetoric against him. But it would be more to the purpose for you to get to work and root out the business from the corner grocery, or the drugstore in your ward, where the veiled evil is much more damaging than the open. For smoking words let's have some smokeless study of conditions and some rapid-firing acts. One man who will do his duty in his own ward is worth two or three talkers on the stump.

Furthermore, while the process of education goes forward let us make a study of the Norwegian system of dealing with the liquor question. There is some good in it. Let us also get all the legislation passed that we can, limiting the music in saloons, demanding open doors and no blinds, and all the other stinging processes we can devise. Mauser bullets will serve where thirteen-inch guns cannot be brought to bear.

University of Indianapolis.

Of a Business Nature.

The Master Key, "a catechetical digest of the Bible, presenting a system of study designed to stimulate interest and give permanent results," is a little booklet by A. M. Chamberlain, recently published by the Christian Publishing Company. Its plan and purpose can best be stated in the following extract from the author's preface:

The main purpose of this compend is to restore to use, in Bible study, a didactic method which, in its place, is certainly of greatest value. It is not proposed as a substitute for processes at present in almost universal use, but as distinctly complementary thereto. There is no lack, already, of scholarly comment and fruitage of research; but there is danger that, in constant presentation of complex details, some clarity of conception as to the gross structure of the biblical writings should be lost. For intermediate and advanced classes in Sunday-schools, as basis of weekly ten-minutes drill, as well as for Normal classes and Teachers' Meetings it is believed it will be found useful.

We heartily recommend this new aid to students and teachers of the Bible, and believe that the book will be cordially welcomed. It will be mailed by the Christian Publishing Company on receipt of the price, 25 cents.

We have already received a number of responses to our advertisement of Sunday-school Song Books, which appeared in the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but our stock is not yet exhausted. The prices placed upon these books are the lowest in the history of the book business, we verily believe. If your Sunday-school is needing new song books, this is the opportunity to get them for less then half the usual price.

All publishing houses and book dealers have their heaviest trade during the latter half of December and the first half of January, and the Christian Publishing Company is no exception to the rule. This season, however, the "rush" did not end with the middle of January, but has kept on, and still continues. We did a much larger business in January 1900, than was ever done in any other month in our history. We shall take pleasure, on receipt of a postal card request, to explain how this has happened.

We could easily dispose of 5,000 copies of the "Treasury of Song," which we are offering for one dollar, if we could show a copy to each of our readers. It is a book that has always sold for $2.50. We secured a number of copies in a bankrupt stock, some time ago, and are closing them out at this remarkably low figure—lower, considerably, than we could buy the book from the publishers at wholesale. It is a volume of piano music by the greatest composers, beautifully bound in cloth. We send it prepaid on receipt of price, $1.00.

TWO FINE SPECIMENS

Of Physical Manhood.

No form of athletic exercise demands such perfect physical condition as prize fighting. Every muscle in the body must be fully developed and supple, and the heart, lungs and stomach must act to perfection.

Whether we endorse prize fighting or not, it is nevertheless interesting to know the manner by which men arrive at such physical perfection.

James Jeffries, the present champion heavy weight of the world, and his gallant opponent, Tom Sharkey, in the greatest pugilistic encounter that has ever taken place, both pursued much the same course of training and the first and most important part of this training was to get the stomach in condition, and keep the digestion absolutely perfect, so that every muscle and nerve would be at its highest capabilities.

This is not done by a secret patent medicene, but both of these great pugilists used a well-known natural digestive tablet sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and composed of the digestive ferments which every stomach requires for healthy digestion.

Champion Jeffries says: "Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets prevent acidity, strengthen the stomach and insure perfect digestion. They keep a man in fine physical condition." Signed, James J. Jeffries, champion of the world.

The gallant fighter, Sharkey, says: "Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets remove all discomforts after eating. They rest the stomach and restore it to healthful condition. I heartily recommend them." Signed, Thos. J. Sharkey.

The advantage of the daily use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is that they keep the people well and ward off sickness and are equally valuable to well persons as to the dyspeptics. Another advantage is that these tablets contain no cathartics, or poisons of any character, but simply digestive ferments which are found in every healthy stomach, and when digestion is imperfect it is because the stomach lacks some of these elements and Stuarts Dyspepsia Tablets supply it.

They are no cheap cathartic, but a perfectly safe and efficient digestive and the demand for them is greater than the sale of all other so-called dyspepsia cures combined. No remedy could possibly reach such a place in public esteem except as the result of positive merit.

Full sized packages are sold by all druggists at 50 cents and the best habit you can possibly form is to take a Stuart's Tablet after each meal. They make weak stomachs strong and keep strong stomachs vigorous.

Literature.

The Presbyterian and Reformed Review (quarterly) contains as its leading article a treatise on "Dr. McGiffert's Historical Methods," by Prof. W. P. Dickson. In addition to much which seems to us mere fault-finding and irrelevant criticism of minor details, there is a thoroughgoing arrangement of Dr. McGiffert's historial methods.

Free Church College, Glasgow, contained a few years ago a group of young men which might well arouse the envy of other schools of theology. Bruce, Drummond and George Adam Smith were there, besides other less known in this country. This group is depicted, with especial emphasis on Prof. Bruce, in an article in the Bibilcal World for February.

Donald G. Mitchell, the dean of American men of letters, is treated appreciatively by Arthur Reed Kimball, whose article in the February Scribner's on "The Master of Edgewood" deals particularly with the beloved "Ik Marvel" as a son of Yale and a resident of New Haven. Mr. Barrie's "Tommy and Grigel," of which the second installment appears in the same magazine, gets better as it goes on.

It is a great mistake to suppose that the English language has reached its fixed and final condition. Of course, it is somewhat less fluid than it was in the days before Shakespeare and the King James Version, but even now most authors exercise the right of the free coinage of words whenever they feel the need. The Chautauquan contains a second symposium on the subject. For prospective travelers abroad we have seen nothing so helpful as the series entitlod "A Reading Journal Through France."

A brighter or a better written article than Gerald Stanley Lee's "Journalism as a Basis for Literature" in the Atlantic Monthly has not appeared recently and, what is more, it contains some ideas which are both true and timely. Whether Kipling is "the Hooligan" or not, he is a power, and he was a jonrnalist first. He came to his power as a literary artist, not in spite of his journalism, but through it, and he is not the only literary light of to-day who has done that. Most of the writers whom we recognize as distinctly modern have been newspaper men at one time or another. That is where they got their modernness.

Mr. Black, writing in the International Monthly, gives it as his conclusion from long experience as a professional music critic that "the populace of Chicago, like most other cities, does not care to support good music, for the simple reason that such music gives it no pleasure, being, in fact, more apt to bore it. Why pay three dollars and fifty cents to hear a grand opeara which they do not care for, when for one dollar and fifty cents they can hear a tuneful operetta which appeals to their taste?" Exactly. And the thing about the light music which chiefly appeals to the taste of the degenerate public is its cheaper price as compared with the extortionate price of the "best music"—by which the critic means grand opera. The uncultured masses do not generally indulge in many bursts of enthusiasm over anything which costs three dollars and fifty cents per burst. If all good books were published in editions de luxe at five dollars a volume and all poor books in cheap and convenient form, the circulation of the latter would not be large. But it would not follow that the populace does not like good books. It simply gets the best it can afford. In St. Louis a company composed of excellent stars of the second magnitude has been singing the best music that was ever written, eight performances a week at popular prices, and the people go. We can't say how it is in Chicago, but in St. Louis the populace likes good music and patronizes it.

While the world of art and letters is mourning the recent loss of Ruskin and the less recent but equally grievous loss of William Morris, it is time for Americans to learn that we have in our midst a man who is in many respects the successor of both Morris and Ruskin. Mr. Elbert Hubbard, of East Aurora, N. Y., is a man with Ruskin's devotion to beauty and his conviction that the place of art is not above life, not a fringe from the garment, but the warp of the fabric of which life is made; and with William Morris's practical facility for promoting artistic industries. The genesis and development of Mr. Hubbard's "Roycroft Printing Shop" and the artistic handicrafts which have sprung up around it, are an instructive object-lesson in the possibility of uniting art and industry. The Roycroft books are modeled after those of the early Venetian printers, but the spirit of his whose enterprise suggests rather the German renaissance—Nuremberg is the time of Durer and Stoss and Vischer. Mr. Flower writes interestingly in the Coming Age about the East Aurora enterprise.

To Clean Matting.

Few things can be used to clean matting; salt and soda have been used, but experience has taught that the best way is to have the matting thoroughly swept, and then go over it with a solution of warm water with Gold Dust Washing Powder dissolved in it; it is best to use a woolen cloth; a tablespoonful of Gold Dust Washing Powder to a quart of water is the proportion; wring the cloth almost dry and rub quickly, but the moment the water gets dirty, change it for fresh; follow the wet cloth with a dry one. This cleans perfectly.

PIONEER DISCIPLES IN THE EAST.

By F. D. Power, Director.

(The second in a series of four articles on Pioneer Disciples.)

Coming southward from New York the fathers did nothing in New Jersey or Delaware. In each of these states we are now represented by one small church.

The work in Eastern and Central Pennsylvania was successfully established by Dr. Silas E. Shepard and Nathan J. Mitchell. Churches were founded in Bradford and Center counties. The church at Canton was in 1829 rejected by the Chewning Association, because unwilling to take any other course than the Word of God directed. The church in Troy was organized in 1830. Dr. Shepard preached at Smithfield in 1838, and the church resolved: "That we will pay Elder Shepard for our minister one-half his time for one year, $150 for his services, payable in wheat at $1 and corn and rye at 50 cents."

In Philadelphia pioneer work was done by James Challen, Geo. W. Elley and William Rouzee. Mr. Campbell preached here in 1833, using the Universalist church and the Callow Hill Street meeting house, where 16 were added. The church which had been organized the year before with eight members then met in Bank Street under the care of William Ballantine, a teacher who had worked with the Haldanes in Scotland. Here, as in New York, the great restorer was denied the pulpits of the Baptist churches. His preaching, however, made a profound impression, and no one can estimate what might have been the result had he given his talents largely to the work of proclaiming the gospel in these great centers. While in Philadelphia Mr. Campbell preached on Sunday evening in a hall and tells us he "trespassed upon the patience of the hearers for three hours and twenty minutes!" David S. Burnet held a meeting for the church while in Bank Street. William Rouzee came from Kentucky to Philadelphia in 1836. A man of strictest integrity, tall and commanding in appearance, thoroughly grounded in the Scriptures, and unyielding and firm in the faith. Through a long period of years he served the congregation. From Bank Street the church moved to a little schoolhouse on Pear Street and thence into Cherry Street. While in Cherry Street Wm. Hunter, of Ireland, and G. W. Elly, of Kentucky, ministered to them. In 1841 Thomas Taylor became the shepherd of the little flock, and in 1842 Walter Scott held a successful meeting for them. At that time they numbered about one hundred souls. Soon after this they bought a frame building located on Fifth and Gaskell Streets, and while here were visited by Benjamin Franklin, who came from Tennessee to take a course in medicine in Philadelphia. They continued their wanderings for some time, until in 1851 they bought a lot on Twelfth above Wallace and erected a good house of worship. But little advance had been made by the congregation during this gypsy period of its life. With the building of the new house, however, a call was extended to James Challen to labor among them, under whose leadership the work began to show signs of prosperity. He served as pas or until 1858. This is, briefly, its pioneer history. It stands to-day among the most substantial in the brotherhood.

Baltimore had its beginning, as far as this movement goes, in 1830. Back of that, however, the germs may be found. In 1817 a young man by the name of Ferguson was s nt out by the Bible School in Edinburg, Scotland, organized by the Haldanes. He came to Baltimore and addressed a little Baptist congregation which met in a sail-loft at Fell's Point, and was presided over by Mr. Henly, a dyer by trade. He afterwards hired a house at his own charges and organized a church with five members. This was probably in 1819. Only two of the names of this original number have reached us, William Carman, who had organized the first Sunday-school in Maryland, and Allen L. Innes. They worshiped at Fell's Point for several years. They next moved to a house on Saratoga Street, then to Baltimore Street, near Lloyd, then to a bazar on Harrison Street, and finally to a church edifice, erected by the congregation on North Street. This was in 1834. To show the views of some of the fathers touching the matter of raising money for the Lord's work it is stated: "All the expenses have been borne by the church from principle. No person out of the church was asked for a cent. We think we might as justly ask for aid to build houses for ourselves to live in as to solicit assistance to build a house for the church to meet in. We cannot countenance brethren in going from home, in imitation of the sects, soliciting aid to build meeting houses, and therefore we would not ask any."

About this time a number of members of the First Baptist Church, some of them very prominent, united with these brethren. In 1834 Henry Metzel became a member of the congregation. He seemed to know the Bible by heart—the one honored Book of this body of people.

In 1833 Alexander Campbell visited Baltimore and held a meeting in Scott's Hall. The first person baptized was Theodotus Garlick, a student of Maryland University, who afterwards became famous as a sculptor and as a plastic surgeon, went to Ohio and founded the church at Youngstown. The church organized at Fell's Point now became identified with the Campbell movement.

In 1840, July 26, a number of scattered Disciples organized the Paca Street Church. The number signing the covenant was thirty-seven. After moving a number of times they at last found a permanent home in a building on Paca Street, which was dedicated May 26, 1850, by Alexander Campbell. Francis Dungau and George Austin were among the pillars of the work. David S. Burnet was identified with it from 1863 to 1867, and among the pioneer pastors was George Elley and A. Anderson.

The churches at Jerusalem and Beaver Creek also began in the 30s. The Beaver Creek congregation has been one of the most noted in the brotherhood. It began its career in 1833. Its meeting-place until 1845 was an old schoolhouse. A. Campbell preached for them in a tent, and later in a barn. Robert Ferguson, J. R. Frame and George Caldwell were among the earliest preachers. E. Adamson, Jesse H. Berry, John Mitchell and Samuel Mathews served them at a later period. The good works of this congregation are known far and wide. Only last year two members of this church, both blind people, Alexander Newcomer and his sister, Ellie, gave $18,000 to the cause of mission.

The Reason Why.

We are informed that one million Singer sewing machines were made and sold during the year 1899. This probably equals the production of all other manufacturers combined, and the question arises as to why the Singer should be so greatly preferred all over the world.

There is a valid reason for everything whether we are able to find it out or not; and the reason for the tremendous and constantly increasing distribution of Singer sewing-machines is easily explained.

From the very beginning there has been a constant evolution in the construction of these machines, a ceaseless attempt,to enlarge their usefulness by adapting them to the performance of every stitching operation, a continuous improvement in the processes of manufacture.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care from the best materials, fitted in its place with utmost exactness and tested and retested so many times before leaving the factory, that they never get the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty.

Such a high degree of mechanical perfection can only be obtained through long experience in the operation of immense factories containing tools that are peculiar to these works and are unequaled for their purposes. The system of testing, inspecting and assembling at the Singer factories is such that it seems well-nigh impossible for a Singer machine or any of its parts to leave the works in an imperfect condition.

Of course, this elaborate system of inspection and testing materially increases the cost of manufacture; but it is only by the use of such means that really first-class sewing-machines can be made. Imitation is the sincerest flattery, and imitations of old forms of sewing-machines long since discarded by the Singer Company are made by unscrupulous persons, and put upon the market to deceive the unwary. The difference between the cost of a high-class sewing-machine, embodying the best of materials and workmanship and its spurious imitation, made of cheap materials in the cheapest way, is soon eaten up by the added cost of the latter for repairs and lost time in the workroom. The Singer Manufacturing Company aims to maintain its well earned reputation for fair dealing during all time. It is permanent, its offices are in every city in the world, and parts and supplies can always be easily obtained. Thus it may be seen why Singer sewing-machines have the preference whenever their merits are fairly investigated.

San Juan Reading Room.

I. N. McCash, of the University Church, Des Moines, Iowa, has shipped a lot of good books direct to San Juan, and says: "This is a good work."

The C. E. Society of the First Church, of Sedalia, Mo.; the society of Carrollton, Mo.; the society in E. L. Powell's church, Louisville, Ky.; the society of the First Church, Austin, Texas, and a number others are collecting good books and will soon ship them.

Bro. S. T. Willis, 1281 Union Ave., New York City, has consented to receive all packages and send them to San Juan for us. All parties sending books will please send them to him and not to Cincinnati, O., as was first announced. Parties shipping books are requested to prepay freight to New York City and the Home Society will pay the freight from New York to San Juan. All parties sending books will please send me a list of books sent. We hope to hear from many others who will undertake to collect a number of good books.

This is a good work and one which any person who loves the Lord and wants to do Christian work can do. Every good book sent to San Juan is a missionary sent out and may continue to work for the Master for years to come. If the pastor in any of our churches will call the attention of the young people to this work he will be pleased to see how gladly they will take it up. How many pastors will call attention to this at once? In a personal letter from our missionary in San Juan, Bro. J. A. Erwin, he says: "We are in great need of reading matter in our work. Please urge the brethren to help us in this good work at once."

There has been some cash contributed. and this is very acceptable as we must place in the rooms current literature. Besides this the rooms must be furnished with chairs, tables, book cases, etc.

Good alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Do not forget that our rate of One Dollar in Clubs of Twenty-five will be withdrawn after March 31st.

If you really want the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST read by the members of your congregation, now is the time to realize your desire.

The brethren generally are showing that they are awake to the unusual opportunity of securing a Two-Dollar (in real value) paper for one-half the price. We have never seen subscriptions coming in at anything like the present rate.

In view of the character of the contents of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, together with the first-class material and high order of workmanship, all of which are readily apparent upon even the slighest examination, it is a problem yet to be solved as to whether such a journal can be published, without loss, at the price of One Dollar in clubs of twenty-five. It is true, of course, that a very large increase is being made to our subscription list, and this will offset a certain amount of the loss. If we felt justified in filling up our columns with advertising of all kinds and sorts there would be little difficulty in solving the financial problem; but we realize the necessity of exercising care and discrimination in this regard. We therefore limit our club offer to orders received before the first day April. That allows sufficient time for the formation of clubs where a reasonable amount of interest is taken. At the end of that time the rate will be One Dollar and a Half regardless of numbers. We will then count the cost, consider the additions to our list and determine whether such a low rate is justified for any further time.

We are not "just talking" when we say we wish we could tell our friends just how a great number of our congregations are assisting us in this campaign for increasing the influence of Christian literature. We are only able to mention a few of the larger reports and to say that we appreciate heartily all that is being done for us. This is the kind of endowment of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that tells.

Maryville, Mo., has a great church. They are preparing for greater things. We know this because they have increased the number of families into which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST goes weekly, from thirty-five to seventy-five. That's the way to double the list.

Bro. F. M. Cummings sends us a list of twenty-eight subscribers from Marlboro and New Baltimore, O. This is an increase of just twenty-seven; not a bad percentage of gain.

The First Church of St. Joseph, Mo., adds twenty-seven to our list, with more to follow. Springfield, Mo., increases the list there to fifty-five.

Bedford, Ind., sends word that thirty subscriptions have already been taken and they hope to make it fifty. Springfield, Ill., has the campaign in full swing and does not propose to be left in the count of subscribers, but will report later. Lebanon, Mo., Albion, Ill., and Burlington Junction, Mo., all deserve mention on account of clubs sent in.

THE RIGHT THING AT THE RIGHT TIME

That is what our splendid MAP OF THE TRAVELS OF JESUS is. The International Sunday School lessons during all of the present year and the first six months of next year will be on the LIFE OF CHRIST. These lessons cannot be properly studied or taught without this map, which shows all the journeys of Jesus during the three and one-half years of his ministry on earth. Two weeks ago we announced the reduction in price of this map, and have received a great many orders from Sunday-Schools. If your school has not yet sent its order, suppose you see to the matter.

WHAT THE MAP IS

This map is the result of many years of labor, study and research by Rev. A. P. Stout. The map of the Travels of Jesus has been made a life-work by him. He designed it especially for Sunday-schools and Bible Classes. It is a large and correct map of Palestine at the time of Christ, showing in colors the Territorial Divisions according to the most recent explorations and surveys. Its large size, and clear, distinct style of lettering, have combined to produce a map that will be welcomed in every Sunday-school. No expense has been spared to make this map as near perfect as possible.

Strong lines of different colors show the Journeys of Jesus, beginning with the Nativity and ending with the Ascension. The most minute details of our Lord's itinerancy are distinctly shown, giving every act, incident, event, miracle, parable, etc., in the order in which they occurred in his life. Showing a complete chronological chain of events, which practically explain the worst seeming contradictions of the New Testament. The Journeys of Jesus are shown so simply and clearly that a child can comprehend. Every effort has been made to make this an improvement on any map of Palestine that has preceded it.

SIZE, 72 x 36 INCHES. PRICE, THREE DOLLARS.

VARNISHED, MOUNTED ON ROLLERS, READY TO HANG UP.

This Splendid Map has always been sold for FIVE DOLLARS. A short time ago we were fortunate enough to secure a lot of several hundred copies at a price that enables us to offer it at the greatly reduced rate of THREE DOLLARS. We pay mail or express charges. If your Sunday-school has not a copy of this map, it should secure one at once.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxvii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, February 15, 1900. No. 7.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The week in Kentucky has been marked by continued but fruitless attempts to secure an agreement between the two contending parties; by renewed appeals to the courts by both sides, and by an increasing certainty that the difficulty will be settled in one way or another without violence. The terms of agreement, as given in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of last week, were modified to make their acceptance by the Republicans more probable. As finally agreed upon by the fourteen representatives at Louisville, they were substantially as follows: State troops shall be withdrawn from the capital as promptly as possible; the General Assembly shall meet in joint session without hindrance; if it shall adopt a resolution ratifying its recent action in seating Gœbel and Beckham, then Taylor and Marshall shall submit without further protest; "all parties shall unite in an effort to bring about such a modification of the election law as will provide for nonpartisan election boards and insure free and fair elections." After a conference with about one hundred and fifty prominent Republicans of the state, Taylor decided not to accept these terms, on the ground, first, that to leave the decision to the legislature, a majority of the members of which had already committed themselves, was virtually to give the case away; and second, that the last quoted clause of the agreement did not contain a sufficient guarantee of the repeal of the Gœbel election law. The Republican branch of the legislature met in London in response to Taylor's call, but, having no quorum, could do nothing but discuss the situation informally and adjourn from day to day. The Democratic members assembled in Louisville with a majority of both houses. Warrants were issued for the arrest of enough Democrats to make a quorum at London, but no attempt has been made to put this desperate plan into execution. Gœbel's funeral occurred in Frankfort on Thursday, but was not largely attended by the Democratic members of the Assembly, who said that they feared arrest. Taylor has declared that a state of insurrection no longer exists in Frankfort and has ordered the legislature to resume its sessions at the Capitol. The state troops are being gradually removed.

As the matter stands now, there is a legal battle to be fought out before either party in Kentucky is apt to take any further steps. The state courts have already granted a temporary injunction restraining Taylor and Marshall from discharging the functions of governor and lieutenant-governor. It was while serving the notice of this injunction that the notary was arrested week before last. The petition to make this injunction permanent will be heard by the same court this week. But the Republicans have also invoked the courts. Two petitions for injunction have been filed with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati; the first by the Republican state officers below lieutenant-governor, to restrain the Democratic contestants from interfering with them in the discharge of the duties of the offices for which they hold certificates of election; the second by citizens of Louisville, to enjoin the state board of election commissioners from interfering further with the de facto government. The case was argued before Judge Taft on Monday by ex-Gov. Bradley, who held that the Goebel election law is unconstitutional in that it virtually destroys popular election by putting the decision of all contests in the hands of the party which controls the legislature. This is not in harmony with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which declares that no state shall "make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." Judge Taft reserved his decision until Wednesday. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the dispute has gotten out of the atmosphere of brawl and bluster and is to be settled in the calm atmosphere of judicial inquiry. There will be no justification for Gov. Taylor holding on by force to the office to which we believe that he was elected, if the courts decide against him; and he does not threaten to do so. On the other hand, we can see no reason why he should surrender until the highest authority has pronounced its verdict. Governmental wrongs ought always to be righted peaceably, but that is particularly hard to effect when the wrong which needs to be righted attacks the very means by which wrongs are righted peaceably—the ballot. The Goebel law does this. Let the United States courts decide. They at least have not been vitiated by the operation of the Goebel law.

General Buller's silence in regard to the situation in Natal was broken by the news that he had crossed the Tugela, for the third time in seven weeks, to make another forward movement for the relief of Ladysmith. Under cover of a demonstration in the vicinity of Spion Kop, General Littleton built a pontoon bridge and crossed the river about eight miles to the east, between Potgieter's Drift and Colenso. The plan apparently was to break through the Boer center and make for Ladysmith by the shortest possible road. After hard fighting with considerable casualties, a position was taken at Vaal Kranz. This was held for two days under heavy fire from Boer positions on higher ground on both sides, but at last it became necessary to abandon the position and retire south of the river again. Gen. Buller's explanation is that the nature of the ground rendered it impossible to throw up intrenchments. It is suggested that this movement was intended only as a feint to prevent Gen. Joubert from sending re-enforcements to Magersfontein and Modder River, where Gen. Roberts is beginning operations. At any rate, the mysterious movement of Roberts and Kitchener "to the front" has turned out to be a movement to Modder River, where Roberts has relieved Methuen of his command. The problem there is somewhat similar to that which has been baffling Buller in Natal. There is a strongly intrenched Boer position between the besieged city, Kimberley, and the relieving army. Roberts' task, like Buller's, is to hold the enemy's front and turn his flank. Having an army of not much less than 40,000 men, against a Boer force estimated roughly at from 10,000 to 15,000, he has a much better chance of success than Buller ever had. Military experts agree that the attacking force in such a case must outnumber the defense three to one to have an even chance. Buller never had more than one and a half or two to one; Roberts has about the requisite proportion. In the vicinity of Colesburg there has been continued activity under Generals French and Gatacre, but the most significant event is the retirement of French from the position which he took last week. Since the failure of Buller's third attempt to relieve Ladysmith, there have been indications of an aggressive movement by the Boers in Natal. For several days it has been known that a flying column has been working around to the southeast through Zululand. Another party has apparently crossed the Tugela east of Colenso, and is making a movement southward to cut Buller's line of communications.

The possibility of intervention by the Powers in the South African difficulty has been hitherto a matter upon which intelligent speculation was scarcely possible. Those Powers which might be expected under certain circumstances to intervent, would certainly not intervene to help Great Britain, and up to date it has not appeared to be necessary for any one to intervene in aid of the Boers. The presence of Dr. Leyds, the accredited representative of the South African Republic in Europe, and the cordial reception which he has received in Germany, Belgium and Russia, has given rise to many questions as to what he is really trying to do. When he left Berlin a few days ago, after a stay of nearly a week, it was reported that he had failed to secure a German loan or German intervention. But nobody knows that he wanted either. The fact that his credentials were received by the Russian government is claimed as a virtual recognition of the independence of the Transvaal. At any rate, the cordiality with which Dr. Leyds has been received in Europe and the degree of attention which has been bestowed upon him, indicate that the Continent is ready to give a good deal of moral support to the Boers, especially in those indefinite ways which cost nothing and give England no specific ground for complaint. At the same time it seems to us that Dr. Leyds has been receiving a degree of prominence which is scarcely justified by the importance of his mission unless he is making an official appeal for help which the Powers mean to grant. Mr. Montagu White, whose mission in this country is similar to that of Dr. Leyds, though not identical with it, is pursuing a much more intelligible course. He called upon Secretary Hay and announced that he had no official credentials to present. All he wants is to be let alone and allowed to collect contributions from private sources for the aid of the Boers.

Judge William H. Taft, of Cincinnati, has been appointed by the President as head of the new Philippine Commission, to which is to be entrusted the task of establishing civil government in the archipelago. The appointment has been received with universal approbation by all parties. Even those who believe that we should have nothing further to do with the Philippines admit that, if we are going to establish a civil government, no better man than Judge Taft could have been selected to do it. There will be five members in the new Commission, including probably one or two who served on the former Commission, of which Mr. Schurman was president. Mr. Schurman and Admiral Dewey have both declined to serve. The other members will be appointed very soon and the commission will sail for the Philippines not later than April 1.

The Baltic Provinces and Finland are the two parts of Russia which are at present suffering most severely from the encroachments of the autocratic power. Both have been joined to Russia in comparatively recent times. Both brought with them ancient charters of liberties which the Czars promised to respect. In both the provisions of these charters are being daily disregarded in the effort to assimilate them completely into the Russian Empire. Some of the recent steps which have been taken in Finland are set forth in "Finland," a magazine published in England in the interests of the Finnish people. During the century in which Finland has been a grand duchy of Russia, it has been customary for each Czar on coming to the throne to issue a confirmation of the ancient rights. Nicholas II. did as the others had done, but of late years the attitude of the Russian Government has been so glaringly contrary to these assurances that, as a protest, a printing office in the north of Finland issued without note or comment a fac-simile of the successive Oaths of Assurance. The Governor-General is making inquiries preparatory to punishing those who are responsible for this cogent argument. The same Governor-General, Bobrikoff by name, has applied to the Russian Minister of War for permission to prohibit all bands in Findland from playing the Finish national airs; the case is still awaiting decision. It is now an old story, how the Czar refused to receive the monster petition of the Finlanders in which they prayed for the maintenance of their guaranteed rights. An address in behalf of the Finnish people, signed by 1,050 of the most eminent men in Europe, received the same treatment and the Czar refused to give an audience to the six delegates who presented it. By the activity of the Governor-General and the press-censor, most of the Finnish newspapers have been suppressed on one pretext or another. To fill the breach which has thus been created, a new paper is being started which will be printed in the Russian language instead of the Finnish. Only about one-fifth of one per cent. of the inhabitants of the country speak Russian, though it is the language of their conquerors. By a decree of the Czar, 30,000 marks are to be paid out of the Finnish exchequer for the establishment of this instrument of Russification and the same amount annually for its support. In the light of these facts —and these are only samples—the inner autonomy, which Russia claims to give to Finland, does not appear to amount to much.

SOME REVIVAL TRUTHS.

IV. SALVATION: ITS SOURCE, MEANS AND MEDIUM.

Such a salvation as we have described in a previous article can have but one source; it is from God. He took the initiative in man's salvation as he did in man's creation. Salvation flows from the heart of the infinite Father. "For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have eternal life." This great passage sets forth three important truths concerning salvation: (1) its source—the love of God; (2) its means—the sending of God's Son into the world, and (3) the medium through which this salvation is offered to men—faith in Jesus Christ.

1. The passage quoted above is revolutionizing our theology. It is giving us a truer and worthier conception of God and of His gracious purposes toward man. The view once prevailed that salvation had its origin in an unalterable decree of God, whose supreme sovereignty gave Him the right to select certain persons to be saved, and to pass others by, leaving them under everlasting condemnation. It cannot be said that love was eliminated from God's character by this theory, but it was by no means the controlling motive of His administration. The divine sovereignty eclipsed the divine Fatherhood. Under this vie it was not deemed inconsistent with divin justice for those who never "sinned afte the similitude of Adam's transgression" to b consigned to everlasting punishment, no for those who had so sinned to be passed b without any call to repentance and salva tion. The sovereignty of God over being whom He had created, it was held, gav Him the right thus to dispose of the destin of men. With this view of the divine char acter, Christ's death was regarded as sacrifice to appease the wrath of God an make Him propitious toward men. It is no difficult now to see how utterly inconsisten such theories are with the plain trut enunciated in this text: "God so loved th world that He gave His only begotten Son. This is quite another theology. We ow Christ's death, not to the wrath of God, bu to His love.

And this love, let it be noted, is for th whole world. This feature of universality i God's love makes it worthy of the divin Being and commends it to our wonder an admiration. No more wonderful or vitaliz ing truth is revealed to us in the Hol Scriptures than that the great and infinit Being, who is the Creator of all things an the Author of our being, not only loves th world, but so loved it as to give His onl begotten Son for its salvation. How thi truth dignifies man and honors God! Wha hope and inspiration it gives to human life It places all history in a new perspective and spans the future with a rainbow o hope. It lifts salvation out of the category of law and places it in that of grace. "By grace have ye been saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God not of works, that no man should glory" (Eph. 2:8-9). If God loves us, then we may rest assured that all will be done for our salvation that omnipotence, guided by love, can accomplish. If we are not saved the fault is ours.

2. But what means will Infinite Love employ to rescue man from the dominion of sin? There was but one method. Infinite Love must be incarnated. Hence God "sent His only begotten Son into the world." This brings us to the very core of the gospel. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us." He who was with God in the beginning and was God, who "being in the form of God counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross" (Phil. 2:7-8). This is the most wonderful story the world has ever heard. Nor did angels ever listen to a story more sublime. Infinite Love stooping down from heaven to earth, becoming incarnate, sharing our human sorrows and burdens, healing our diseases, showing us the path of life by walking therein, and finally suffering the agonies of crucifixion to show us the heart of God and make a way of access to Him—no wonder the angels desired to look into it. No wonder it is marshalling a mighty sacramental host under the banner of Christ and promises to subject the whole earth to His reign.

This, then, is God's means of salvation—the sending of His Son into the world, involving the incarnation, the life and teaching, the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. This is the gospel story. This is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. "O, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!" (Rom. 11:33.) O, the infinite height and depth and length and breadth of the love of God as manifested in Christ Jesus our Lord! He is a divine Savior. He can "save to the uttermost all who will come to God through Him." He overcame sin and death, and He can give us power to do the same. He came into the world that men might have life and have it more abundantly. "In Him was life," and His purpose is to share that life with all who become united with Him. It is the possession of this divine life as a regnant power in the heart, molding character and conduct, that constitutes salvation. It pleased God to reveal this life in a Person in whom was embodied both "grace and truth." In no other way could God have come so close to humanity, and have drawn so many souls into union with Himself. Sermons spring out of every phase of this great truth which might well be vital with divine power to touch the heart and influence the lives of men.

3. The medium through which the life that is in Christ may be communicated to men is faith. Faith is the name given to the soul's aptitude for perceiving spiritual realities and its highest manifestation is a loving obedience to and an unshaken trust in God, as He has revealed Himself in Jesus Christ. This is no arbitrary requirement. It is the normal and the natural relation which should exist between God and man. It is the only way by which men can be sharers in the life of God. Faith is the channel of communication between man and God, between the seen and the unseen. It is the medium through which God comes into our lives with His redeeming love. It is the power by which we appropriate Christ and enter into union and fellowship with Him. To believe in Christ, truly and loyally, is to become attached to Him, identified with His cause, committed to His personal guidance and loyal to his will. It is to come into fellowship, not only with Christ, personally, but with His thought, His purposes and His plans. No other faith than this is adequate for salvation. But such a faith, laying hold of Christ as it does, shares in His omnipotence and overcomes the world.

We are justified by faith only as faith brings us into union with Christ and makes us just. This faith comes through seeing, through hearing, through doing the will of God, through being loyal to the light that is in us, through cultivating the spiritual and keeping in subjection the carnal nature. It grows by exercise. It is nourished by the atmosphere of devotion, it is strengthened by our religious experiences, until at last it brightens into knowledge, so that we can say with one of old, "I know Him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that He is able to guard that which I have committed unto Him against that day" (2 Tim. 1:12). Notice that the faith is in Him, and the knowledge of Him, even Christ Jesus the Lord, from whom alone we receive life and salvation.

It would take three sermons, at least, to fill out the foregoing outline with anything like completeness, and a volume on each head would by no means exhaust their treasures of truth.

Hour of Prayer.

TO NINEVEH OR TARSHISH: WHICH?

(Jonah 1.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 21.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The path of duty is the path of safety, and we cannot escape from "the presence of the Lord."

The Lord frequently tests the faith of his servants by calling them to some arduous service, some difficult undertaking. It is a crisis in one's life when such a call comes to him, and he is considering whether he will accept or decline it. If, influenced by considerations of escaping danger or privation, or what may seem to us unfruitful labor, we turn away from the path which the Lord has indicated, we are certain to be met with difficulties and dangers with which we did not reckon.

Such a call came to Jonah, the son of Amittai, when the word of the Lord came to him saying: "Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me." Now Jonah had no doubt often heard about Nineveh, its greatness and its wickedness, and as he thought about the magnitude of the undertaking—he, singly and alone, confronting a great and wicked city, and that, too, outside of the Jewish fold, and calling upon it to repent—his heart failed him, and he decided upon a much more difficult and impossible task, viz., to "flee from the presence of the Lord." He conceived the idea that if he were only at Tarshish the Lord would not find him there and he would thereby escape great responsibility and probable danger. He had not yet reached the lofty conception of God expressed by the Psalmist:

Whither shall I go from thy spirit,
Or whither shall I flee from Thy presence?
If I ascend up into heaven, Thou art there;
If I make my bed in Sheol, behold, Thou art there;
If I take the wings of the morning
And dwell in the uttermost part of the sea—
Even there shall Thy hand lead me,
And thy right hand shall hold me. (Ps. 139:7-10.)

Acting, however, on the false idea that he could escape the presence of the Lord, he went down to Joppa, paid his fare to Tarshish and took passage on a ship leaving that port. Soothed by a sense of false security, he laid down in the hold of the vessel and went to sleep. The incidents which followed—the raging storm, the vain efforts of the sailors to turn back and reach port, the casting of the lots and its falling upon Jonah, the confession of his disobedience to the Lord and his willingness to be cast out into the sea, the efforts of the sailors to avoid this dire alternative, but their final decision to cast him overboard and his being swallowed by the great fish—are all familiar. Here was a catalogue of disasters on which Jonah had not reckoned. He supposed he would have smooth sailing and that the eye of God would not follow him in his journey to escape the task which had been laid upon him.

Jonah learned from his experiences that it was a good deal safer to go to Nineveh than to Tarshish. Even the sailors on board the vessel were deeply impressed with the lesson which Jonah's experience had taught them, viz., the dangers of disobedience. But Jonah has not been the last man to learn, by sad experience, that "the way of the transgressor is hard," and that it is better to face danger and difficulty in the path of duty than to seek to escape these by following one's own plans and inclinations. If Jonah had only remembered that God never assigns a man a task that he does not give him the ability to accomplish, and that it was not his business to consider the question of results, but to obey God and leave the consequences with Him, he would have gone direct to Nineveh instead of taking ship for Tarshish. What Jonah seemed to forget we would do well to remember.

To Nineveh or Tarshish—which? The issue is a constantly recurring one in human life. It comes to every man, not once, but often. Shall I undertake this difficult task, to which the Lord, by his providence, seems to be calling me, and which promises little or no earthly reward, or shall I turn aside from it to follow a less difficult path and undertake an easier task, and one that has the promise of greater earthly honor and compensation? When such issues arise we are likely to try to find justification for our turning away from the difficult undertaking, as no doubt Jonah did. But he that, having once had opened to him the gates of opportunity to a great, though difficult service for God, and turns away from it to avoid privations and dangers, and to seek earthly emoluments and honors, has committed the mistake of Jonah in trying to "flee from the presence of the Lord," and is likely to find his path obstructed by dangers of which he did not dream. How plain the lesson is, and yet how difficult it is for men to learn it, that the only path of safety is the path of duty, the path of obedience to God!

If we allow Nineveh to stand for duty and Tarshish for selfish ease and pleasure, how important the question becomes, and how often we are called upon to make the decision! Young man, starting out in life, which shall it be—Nineveh or Tarshish? Duty or pleasure? Young woman, what is your choice? Are you ready to go to Nineveh at the call of the Lord, or do you prefer taking a pleasure excursion to Tarshish? Preachers of the gospel, how is it with you—Nineveh or Tarshish?—easy fields with large salaries or difficult places where God needs a faithful representative, but which offers more toil than reward? Business men in the church, what is your destination—Nineveh or Tarshish? Do you transact your business on Christian principles, even though it involve temporary loss, or will you follow the frequented paths of dishonesty for the sake of increasing your gain? Will you attempt to flee from the presence of the Lord by following your own devices, or will you seek to abide in His presence and in His favor by pursuing the path of duty, no matter how difficult?

In one form or another this question comes to all of us and presses for decision. Let us be sure we cannot escape the presence of the Lord by attempting to flee from Him, and that the path which He indicates is the path of safety leading to eternal reward.

PRAYER.

O God our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast a plan for each individual life, and that whoever seeks earnestly to know what Thou wouldst have him do, never fails to find the path of duty. We thank Thee that Thou dost call us to undertake great things in Thy name and in the strength which Thou dost supply. Help us, like Thy servant Paul, to be obedient to the heavenly visions of truth and duty that come to us, and never to turn aside from any task to which Thou dost call us, to seek safety or honor or emoluments in pursuing our own plans. So shall we honor Thee, O God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, to whom be glory forever. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

These lines are penned on the anniversary of Mr. Lincoln's birth. We have been thinking of his great but sad career. Honored as he is now by all sections of the country, as a large-minded, kind-hearted, patient man, an incorruptible patriot and a far-seeing statesman, he lived and died under an almost total misapprehension of his character and motives by practically half the nation. Never did any statesman bear a greater burden on his heart than did he during the stormy days of his administration, when he was striving to save the Union, and perhaps the greatest part of that burden was the consciousness of being misunderstood and misrepresented by so large a section of the American people. But "with malice toward none and charity for all," he strove to "do the right as God gave him to see the right," and he is numbered with the immortals. By pursuing a different course, by holding his conscience in abeyance, he would probably have been more popular while living, but his fame would not have been so lasting nor would his name have occupied the place it does in American history. The lesson is, that, sooner or later, the world puts a just estimate on the character and services of its heroes and reformers. Sometimes it comes sooner, sometimes later, but at last it is sure to come. The smoke of the conflict passes away. Reason and judgment assert their sway. Truth emerges from the mists of prejudice and the crown of thorns becomes a wreath of unfading honor.

Since the foregoing was written the lightning brings us the following extract from a poem on Lincoln, by Edward Markham, read at a Lincoln celebration in New York yesterday:

The color of the ground was in him; the red earth,
The tang and odor of the primal things,
The rectitude and patience of the rocks,
The gladness of the wind that shakes the corn.
The courage of the bird that dares the sea,
The justice of the rain that loves all leaves,
The pity of the snow that hides all scars,
The loving kindness of the wayside well,
The tolerance and equity of light
That gives as freely to the shrinking weed
As to the great oak flaring to the wind,
To the grave's low hill as to the Matterhorn
That shoulders out the sky.

When the preacher, yesterday, was telling us about the meek possessing the earth, and how the gentler forces, such as humility, patience, courtesy, love and sympathy, were becoming the potent forces of the world, there came before us the picture of Jesus at the bar of Pilate. Armed with innocency and purity, reinforced by a life of good deeds, the majestic Prisoner stands quietly, with dignified bearing, but with calm and patient resignation, in the presence of his accusers and of the Roman governor. He makes no resistance and no defense, even, when they falsely accuse him, condemn him, spit upon him, place the crown of thorns on his brow, and mock him, and lead him away to crucifixion. And now the world crowns Him as its greatest hero, its truest benefactor. We compared that picture with another imaginary one, in which Jesus, armed with carnal weapons, rallies his friends to resistance unto death, and dies amid a heap of his slain enemies. How the latter picture grates on our idea of His character and mission! In the light of that contrast, we felt ashamed of every word we have ever written or spoken, inspired by the tit-for-tat spirit, or that had in it the sting of unkindness. Why should we hate those who hate us and despitefully use us? Why shouldn't we love our enemies as Jesus taught? Yes, it is the meek who are to inherit the earth, and blessed is the man who has the courage to do and say what he believes to be right, and leave his defense with God.

We read recently in some book a statement to this effect: The history of all religious movements shows that they degenerate from the type of religious life and thought shown in the founders and their colaborers. It was part of an argument to show that the history of the religious world does not present a picture of continuous, unbroken progress, from lower to higher forms of life, but that there were periods of declension followed by reformation. But the fact, if it be a fact, that there is always a declension in religious reformations from the lives of their founders or originators, is worthy of serious attention. What is the cause of this phenomenon, the existence of which, as a general rule at least, we admit? We should say it is losing the spirit of the reformers while allowing the doctrines they used to harden and crystallize in our hands until they have lost their original force. Every one knows the difference between a living truth, freshly conceived, personally investigated and accepted, and proclaimed with the power of personal conviction, and a mere repetition of traditional doctrines which have come down to us. What is needed to avoid the declension above mentioned is to hold fast to the spirit and principles of the reformers, so far as they are right, and to maintain the same freedom to adapt Bible teaching to the needs of our day that our fathers claimed for themselves in their day. Losing this spirit we cease to be a movement and become only a monument to remind the world of something that was but is not.

Questions and Answers.

A well-known brother, who has just concluded a successful meeting in one of our larger city churches, in which more than half the additions to the church during the meeting were by letter and statement, asks: "Why is this thus? There is faithful pastoral work in this church, and the pastor is deservedly popular. Can you throw any light on the reason for this?"

This is indeed a rather remarkable fact under the circumstances mentioned. The church is a popular one, the pastor is an able and popular man, and our cause stands high in the city referred to. A number of reasons might be surmised as to why so many professed Christians permitted themselves to remain for a considerable time disconnected from any local congregation, such as inability to attend regularly, or the desire to go around and visit other churches and see what they are doing, or the feeling that they were unable to contribute to the finances of the church, and therefore preferred not to be united with it. But when all these have been mentioned the real cause has not been named. A lack of interest in the church or in the Christian religion is the only adequate explanation of this condition of things. It is marvelous how soon and how easily people lose their interest in Christianity and in the church when they stay away from religious services for awhile and allow their minds to be wholly occupied with worldly interests. Perhaps, too, there is lacking in such cases thoroughness of conversion or proper religious training in the congregations from which they came. It is probable, too, that there is a false idea associated with the matter of church letters that is partly responsible for this dereliction of duty. The idea seems to prevail that the possession of a church letter in one's pocket or trunk absolves the holder of it from his religious responsibilities, and gives a sort of interregnum, during which he is under neither the divine government nor that of His Satanic Majesty. When it comes to be understood that a letter asked for and received by any member does not sever his relation with the church, but is only an introduction of the member holding it to another congregation, and his membership remains in the church giving him the etter until he is received into another church, the abuse of church letters will not be so prevalent. If pastors or officers of congregations from which members go should notify pastors in the city or elsewhere where the removing members may go of their presence there, it would greatly help to solve this problem of a floating membership. The only radical cure, however, for the evil under consideration, is to implant in the minds of church members a higher conception of the church and of their obligation to it, as the organization through which Christ is working for the extension of His kingdom in the world.

What is meant by the word "paradise" (Luke 23:43), where Jesus said to the malefactor: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise?" John Leffingwell.

"Paradise" was the name given by the Jews to the abode of the righteous dead. "Hades," or the unseen world, embraced both paradise, the abode of the blest, and gehenna, the place of the wicked. Jesus adapted his language to the understanding of the people in the use of the word "paradise," by which he signified the acceptance of the penitent thief as a pardoned man, whom He should meet that day in the spiritual world in peace and blessedness.

1. What is the attitude of the Christian Church as a church (without regard to discipline) towards the dance, social cards and the theatre?

2. Does the Christian Church, claiming to stand for apostolic Christianity, give even tacit consent to these things?

3. Have not the most prominent men in the Christian Church from time to time plainly and emphatically put themselves on record against all such? C.

1. "The Christian Church," meaning by that expression, as our querist does, the aggregate membership of the churches associated with the reformatory movement of the present century, has never taken any attitude as such toward the things mentioned. Each local congregation takes such attitude toward these questions as seems to it proper. It is safe to say, however, that the general sentiment of our churches is adverse to all the practices mentioned, though with varying degrees of tolerance in different communities. Much depends upon the character of the dance and of the theater as to the degree of tolerance with which they would be regarded. If we admit that they are all more or less evil in their influence, yet it must be granted also that some are more injurious than others. Most churches rely on sound teaching from the pulpit and moral suasion, and the wisest pastors on furnishing their young people with enough work to keep them busy, as the best preventive for these and kindred practices.

2. Few if any of our churches give even "tacit consent" to these things from the pulpit, though, as indicated, these matters are seldom made matters of discipline, unless it be dancing.

3. This is evidently true. We think, however, it is less common now than it formerly was to single out these three practices as specially deserving discipline. Intelligent Christians are coming to see that covetousness, dishonesty in dealing, oppression of the poor, extortion, slander or evil-speaking are far more malignant evils than those mentioned by our querist, and perhaps not less prevalent in the churches.

When do we receive adoption as sons: at our confession and baptism, or at the second coming of Christ? A Reader of the C.-E.

When we receive "the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father" (Rom. 8:15,16.) This takes place, if we are properly taught, when the soul has fully surrendered to Christ as indicated by confession and baptism. The "redemption of the body" (Rom. 8:23) is a still further adoption that takes place when the mortal is exchanged for the immortal—the adoption as a revealed or manifested Son of God in the glory of the resurrection.

Current Religious Thought.

One of the leaders of the "revival of religion" which is now in progress in Brooklyn is quoted as saying that "all Unitarians are sinners and all sinners are Unitarians." Some of the other leaders of the movement have expressed the intention to make the revival a crusade against higher criticism. Commenting upon this "revival of intolerance," the Outlook says:

> The defense of the religious persecution of the Middle Ages rested on two premises: first, that intellectual error in religious matters is sin; second, that it is the duty of the state to prevent sin. We have no reason to suppose that the leaders in the so-called Brooklyn revival hold the second of these premises, or would inflict civil penalties on men because of their religious opinions; but it is clear that they hold the first. They think that to believe as James Martineau believed is a sin; to believe as Dwight L. Moody believed is a virtue. And we have no doubt that a good many people who will be repelled by the arrogance which affirms that all Unitarians are sinners, yet really, though unconsciously, entertain the premise from which that conclusion is derived; that is, they believe that an error in religious opinion is a sin.
> In fact, this concealed premise, which underlies all religious intolerance, has no warrant either in philosophy or in Scripture. Sin and error are not synonyms. Sin may lead men into error; error may lead men into sin; but the two are not the same, and never should be confounded. Error is intellectual, sin is moral; error is a mistaken action of the intellect, sin is a wrong action of the will. . . . The exponents of this intolerance will look in vain in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ for any moral condemnation of intellectual opinions. Christ condemned with vigorous invective the Pharisees, whose opinions were orthodox and whose liturgical practices were pious, but whose lives were unloving—who "devoured widow's houses and for a pretense made long prayers." But he never denounced the Sadducees of his time, though their intellectual errors involved a denial of the immortality of the soul and of the authority of revelation.

As an example of reckless etymology in a good cause, we submit the following from G. Campbell Morgan on The First Commandment, in the Record of Christian Work. A sermon is doubtless a thing of more value than a point in grammar, but even Hebrew grammar has some rights which the preacher is bound to respect. Students of Hebrew will appreciate the absurdity of the derivation of the name Jehovah, as readily as the general reader will appreciate the homiletical value of the teaching to which it is applied:

> There is deep significance in the name by which God here declares himself, JEHOVAH. It is a combination of three Hebrew words, which may be translated into an English form, thus: Yehi, "he will be;" Hove, "being," and Hahyah, "he was." A combination is made from the three words by taking the first syllable of the first YEHi, the middle syllable of the second, hOVe, and the last syllable of the third, hahyAH, so that we have the name YEHOVAH. The whole name means "he that will be, he that is, he that was." Thus the very name brings man into the presence of the Supreme, the Eternal, the Self-existent God, who is because he is—a great and perpetual mystery to the finite mind of man, and for the most part beyond all human analysis. If your mind reaches out to the limitless stretches of future generations, God says, "I am he that will be." If you think of the present moment, with all its marvelous manifestations of life and order and mystery and revelation, God says "I am he that is." If you carry your mind as far back as you can into the infinite spaces of the past, God says "I am he that was."

It is generally believed that the project of building a railway from Cairo to the Cape originated in the ambitious mind of Cecil Rhodes and was actuated solely by the desire for the political and commercial expansion of the British Empire. The Christian Commonwealth tells us that before the days of Cecil Rhodes the scheme had been suggested by a son of the missionary, David Livingstone, as a means of evangelizing Africa. A correspondent of the Times is quoted as saying:

> The inception of this idea was due, not to Rhodes, but to Tom Livingstone, one of the sons of the great missionary doctor and explorer. Sending for me on his return from Cairo on the Blue Nile, early in 1876, he developed the dream of his life; and requested me to organize for him, and accompany him on an expedition from Cairo to Cape Town. "We will go through from here to Cape Town," he said to me, "and preach a railway, and it shall be called Livingstone's line."

Rev. D. C. Garrett, an Episcopal minister of San Francisco, made the following statements in a newspaper interview on the question, Are Ministers Underpaid? Generally their salaries are inadequate, he says, but, while this does not justify the illiberality of the congregations, there are compensations:

> In some respects the ministry has an advantage over other professions. While the young doctor or lawyer often has to wait a long time before he earns anything, the young minister usually has some salary at the start. The other professions may make more money in the long run, but I can only say with Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, "I sometimes wonder why everybody doesn't go into the ministry. Men talk about making millions in business. They ought to make millions, to repay them for not being clergymen. I had rather go to the rudest country church to speak to men crude and rough and ignorant, and keep that little band pointing toward God's shining city than do anything else in the universe or sit upon any throne."

We closed a four weeks' meeting in the First Christian Church, of this city, last Sunday. Bro. B. B. Tyler did the preaching, this being the second such meeting he has held for us. The people heard him with constantly increasing delight. As a Bible teacher and preacher he seems to me to have scarcely a peer. The Bible has become a new book to many through his wonderful opening up of its treasures of truth, and his simple, familiar, yet reverent handling of the sacred writings. There were 40 additions to the congregation and a quickening of all the springs of Christian love and service. His coming was a benediction to our cause in this city.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

SOME OF OUR PRESSING NEEDS.—III.

The Need of More Earnest Bible Study.

W. T. MOORE.

There is much greater need for studying the Bible as we have it than there is for any change of its structure, or any better understanding of its origin. I do not underestimate the value of any honest inquiry into the history of the books which compose the Bible, but I cannot overestimate the value of the earnest study of the grand old Book from cover to cover. We ought to believe in the Bible as a whole, but we cannot do this intelligently without believing what is in it. Undoubtedly there are not a few who are always ready to express their faith in the Bible as a book, but as soon as they open its pages they find something that they are more than anxious to change or else practically explain away. Indeed, I fear that some at least of the reverence expressed for the Bible is little more than superstition, for certainly it is not based upon any intelligent understanding of the Bible's contents.

Now this ought not to be so. Christians at least ought to study the Word of God diligently. Nevertheless, I fear that this important matter is much neglected among even the professed followers of Christ.

This is partly the fault of our preachers. I would not like to say that many of the preachers themselves do not earnestly study the Bible, but I fear that some of these study almost everything else rather than that which "makes wise unto salvation." Topical preaching is one of the most dangerous innovations that has crept into our churches. It has practically driven out of our churches the spirit of prayerful investigation as to the teaching of the Word of God. I know the Scriptures teach that "like people, like priest," but it is equally true, "like priest, like people." As the preacher is, so will his congregation be in many respects. If his preaching is profoundly spiritual, his people will to a large extent become imbued with what he says. If his preaching is exegetical, thereby emphasizing the importance of a critical study of the Bible, he will gradually cultivate a taste in even the dullest of his hearers for that which is "sweeter than honey in the honeycomb." Nearly all the great preachers of the past, as well as those of the present, may be properly classed as exegetical preachers, in contrast with those who adopt the habit of topical preaching. I do not say that the latter habit should always be avoided. Sometimes it may be used with advantage, but for the most part it is "a delusion and a snare."

But no matter how this may be, it cannot be denied that intelligent, prayerful study of the Word of God has ceased to be a prominent feature in our churches. The time was when this was otherwise. Whatever fault may be legitimately found with the olden days, one thing at least can be said in their praise: the Disciples of Christ in those days delighted in the study of the Word of God. Doubtless this study was emphasized in its importance by the opposition which the movement received during its early history. Self-defence usually compels the use of the best means; and certainly nothing could have served the cause of the Disciples so well as a knowledge of the Word of God.

Nevertheless, it is probable that the intense individualism of those days also had something to do with the earnestness which characterized each Disciple in a daily study of the Bible.

We now rely upon organized effort. Our Sunday-schools and C. E. Societies are practically substituted for study at home. I fear that in the family circle the Bible is seldom read with any degree of carefulness; and, what is still worse in many cases, it is not read at all. Possibly the old-fashioned meetings, where our elders presided and read a chapter with running comments, may not have been an ideal form of teaching; but in my opinion it was preferable to the short, scrappy, incoherent humdrum that we have in many of our Sunday-schools and C. E. Societies. In our Sunday-schools it frequently happens that the teacher knows less about the lesson than those who are to be taught, and none of them know much except as it is recited by looking upon the lesson leaves, which ought to have been studied at home as a preliminary preparation for the Sunday-school. Most of the helps we have are useful enough if in the hands of well trained and conscientious teachers. But the way these helps are abused makes much of the teaching in our Sunday-schools a mere pretense, which has nothing whatever to recommend it.

As proof that I have not overstated the case, I will quote what Pres. Harper, of Chicago University, has recently said. Here are a few sentences from a very suggestive article:

"Nine-tenths of the teaching in the Sunday-school is, as teaching, a farce. The work of many of these so-called Sunday-school teachers, if judged upon the standard of ordinary principles of pedagogy, is ludicrous and at the same time criminal. It is ludicrous to call such work teaching. The work is criminal if looked at from the point of view of the innocent pupils who suffer from it." These are strong words, but I fear they are too true to be treated lightly.

In any case, there is something fearfully wrong with respect to Bible knowledge. Very few of the younger members of our churches have the slightest idea of the scriptural grounds upon which our great plea rests. They have learned a few shibboleths, and are able to pronounce these according to the traditions of the fathers, but they know little more, and if put to the test would be helpless in any earnest defense of the faith delivered to them. This ought not to be the case. We are essentially a distinct people, and have a special mission in the world. But how can we make that mission a success if the Word of God does not dwell within us richly?

What shall be done? Is there any remedy for this state of things? I believe there is. Let me make the following suggestions:

(1.) Let every preacher study the Word of God more diligently himself. I fear that part of the trouble lies at his door. The preacher who goes into the pulpit or into any other service of the church with his mind richly stored with Bible truth will always have an inspiring and helpful message for his people. But if he takes with him simply the topics of the hour, and treats them for the benefit of newspaper readers, he will soon find his congregation sadly deficient in that which "makes wise unto salvation."

(2.) Let the preacher of every church organize a class for at least one evening of each week, the object of which shall be the earnest study of the Bible in its literature, history, doctrine and life. All the members of the church should be encouraged to attend this class, and if conducted properly the results will more than justify the highest expectation.

(3.) The course I have indicated would soon give us qualified teachers for the Sunday-school and workers for the C. E. Societies. In fact, the whole church in all of its departments would readily respond to the touch of the new inspiration which would come from the faithful training of the church members. The whole consequences of this reformation can be measured only in eternity.

MR. CAMPBELL IN THE COLLEGE OF PROFESSIONAL TEACHERS.

B. A. HINSDALE.

I have often thought that "Alexander Campbell as an Educator" might be made the subject of an interesting and valuable study, if it should fall into the right hands. He was a man of education, a careful student of education, a great believer in education, a practical teacher in schools of various kinds a considerable part of his life, and a frequent writer and lecturer upon different phases of the subject. The writer of the study that I have in mind would need to understand the history of Mr. Campbell's philosophical opinions, his system of religious thought, the native character of his mind, his lines of study, and particularly his work as a practical educator. It might not be altogether easy to find a man who combines all these qualifications, but some old Bethany student should prove himself equal to the task. It would be all the more difficult because so little has been preserved, or at least published, relating to Mr. Campbell as a teacher. Dr. Richardson, in his Memoirs, mentions a number of schools in which he taught, but Richardson is so absorbed in the religious side of his subject's life and work that he does not even give us a picture of Bethany College as a school, to say nothing of permitting us to look into the earlier schools with which Mr. Campbell was connected. My purpose in this article is not at all to undertake the study that I have described, but only to present a view of Mr. Campbell in the College of Professional Teachers.

The organization that bore this name was formed in Cincinnati about the year 1830, and continued twelve or fifteen years. For the first two-thirds of its history it was a very active and influential body, made up as it was of the educators, teachers and friends of education in the Mississippi Valley, and dealing with opinion and practice when both were in the formative state; but it finally began to lose its vigor and then broke up altogether, owing to causes that have never been very fully explained. It would be impossible to write the history of education in several of the Western states, and particularly in Ohio, without making the College of Professional Teachers considerably prominent.

So far as the records show, Mr. Campbell first appeared in the College at the annual meeting held in October, 1836, and at once took an active part in its proceedings. He was made vice-president for Virginia, and put at the head of three committees that were appointed to report the next year, one on "The Causes which Conspired in the Revival of Literature;" the second on "Whether Infant Schools Ought to be Constituted Rather with Reference to Moral than Intellectual Culture," and the third on "The Practicability and Importance of Creating Departments in our State Governments, Having the Subject of Public Instruction under their Immediate Supervision." On the first committee R. Richardson was associated with him; on the second, Rev. Dr. J. L. Wilson, of Cincinnati, and on the third, Samuel Lewis, C. E. Stowe and E. D. Mansfield, of Cincinnati, and three other gentlemen, two of them from Indiana and one from Tennessee. But the thing that made Mr. Campbell's attendance upon the College noteworthy was his lecture on "The Importance of Uniting Moral with the Intellectual Culture of the Mind," which he delivered on invitation of the Executive Committee. This lecture, elaborate and lengthy, beginning with the elements of the subject and building up its arguments from the bottom, as the lecturers before the College were apt to do and as was congenial with Mr. Campbell's mind, was noteworthy both in itself and in that to which it led. I should be glad to give a full resume, but have space for only two extracts. The first one embodies the lecturer's ideal of education:

"Then the excellence of education will consist in . . . . teaching and training man to think, to feel and to act in perfect harmony with his own constitution and with the constitution of nature and society around him; not merely to think, not merely to feel, not merely to act right, but to think, to feel and to act rationally, morally and religiously, or in harmony with the whole universe and with his relations to each and every part thereof."

The second extract embraces what Mr. Campbell calls "the accomplished teacher's creed" in seven articles, which are here presented in a form somewhat abridged:

I. "The human soul incarnate operates only through organs, and only through organs can be operated upon.

II. "An organ is a natural instrument, such as is the brain, the eye, etc. The human soul thinks and feels by the brain, sees by the eye, etc.

III. "A faculty, contradistinguished from its organ, is the power of the organ. The eye is an organ, but seeing is its faculty or power, etc.

"IV. Organs and faculties are simple and compound. Eye and ear simple, brain and hand compound, etc. . . . There are faculties which require a plurality of organs; e. g., the faculty of perceiving a single object, requires but one organ of the brain, while the faculty of remembering an event requires various organs.

V. "Operations are to be distinguished from the organs and the faculties. Organ is the instrument, faculty the power of that instrument, and operation the act of the faculty, or of the organ; e. g., the eye is an organ, seeing the faculty of that organ, and a particular look, sight or seeing the operation of that organ, etc.

VI. "The strength of an organ is its size and firmness. It is a law of the natural economy that exercise directed by reason enlarges and confirms every organ. . . . By strengthening and making more active an organ, we not merely improve its faculty, but also every particular operation of that organ. Education, if rational, will, therefore, seek to improve the mind by improving the organs. . . . Single acts precede habits and strengthen the faculties, and these faculties strengthen the organs, and then the organs in turn strengthen the faculties, and the faculties strengthen the particular acts and operations.

VII. "The exercise of any one organ only improves itself. . . . No person will seek to improve the memory by improving the imagination, etc. Neither will a wise man seek to improve the moral powers by exercising only the intellectual. This leads to the very point set before us, viz., the importance of uniting the moral with the intellectual culture of the mind."

As is well known to those who are familiar with Mr. Campbell's history, the celebrated debate between him and Bishop Purcell grew out of something that he said in this lecture. Furthermore, those readers whose memories go back to the days of the itinerant phrenological lecturer and examiner of heads will at once see in this lecture plain evidence of the influence that phrenology exerted upon his mind. He does not formally avow himself a believer in the psuedoscience, still "organs" if not "bumps" stick out all over the address. There is plenty of other evidence, however, that he was a believer in phrenology. Indeed, one of the curious things about Mr. Campbell's mental history is that he contented himself, first and last, with a purely sensational philosophy of the most superficial character.

Something that I had intended to say about Mr. Campbell's later appearances in the College of Professional Teachers must be omitted, owing to the length to which this article has grown.

THE REMISSION OF SINS—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

W. H. THOMAS.

As it is almost impossible to get a full understanding from only one point of view, it may be of interest to your readers for one who is not especially identified with the Disciples to pass judgment on the matter lately discussed by Bros. Jones and Briney.

It seems to the writer that these brethren, in their discussion, confounded sin with its penalty; and in this way really discussed the remission of penalty instead of "the remission of sins."

While I think Bro. Jones is right in making a distinction between actual and formal remission, he has failed to give a definite idea as to what he means by either the actual or the formal.

It seems to me that these descriptive words necessarily take their sense or significance from the nature of the thing remitted; and that the remission can only be actual when the sin is actual, and formal when the sin is formal.

If I am correct in this, it follows that to get a correct idea of what is actual sin and formal sin is first necessary before we can have a correct understanding of what actual and formal remission means.

To my mind the Scriptures plainly teach that formal sin is the transgression of the letter of the law, consisting in outward words and deeds, while actual or real sin consists in the evil desires, motives and purposes of the heart. Formal sin may not always be real sin, and real or actual sin may not always be formal, any more than what is lawful is always just and what is just is always lawful.

There is no such thing as formal and real righteousness; and this distinction, more than anything else, is what makes the difference between the old and new covenants. The old or law covenant could only take cognizance of sin in the outward conduct, and for this reason its transgression was formal and not always real. Then, the transgression being formal under the law, its remission was formal also; and this formal remission consisted in setting the penalty back, and not in setting it aside, for under the law there was a remembrance of sin every year (Heb. 10:3). But the purpose of the new or gospel covenant is to go deeper and reach and purify the heart, and thus supplant the necessity of any formal remission by bringing about real remission.

I prefer the use of the word "real" to that of "actual", for the reason that "the remission of sins" is not an act, but a moral process. Remission of penalty is a legal or formal act; but for this very reason it is also a rectifying or correcting act; for in its final analysis it is the correcting of a mistake previously made by judge or jury, and no governor of a state is justified in remitting penalties under any other circumstances.

As we all know, on account of the limitation of human knowledge juries may err or circumstances be such as to render the penalty of the law unjust and unnecessary, and on this account legislative bodies have granted to governors the right to pardon criminals by remitting penalties. But God does not remit penalties, for the reason that his government, based on his infinite knowledge, must be so perfect as to prevent any mistakes, and consequently he has none to correct.

Fulton, Mo.

[But suppose sin's penalties are sin's consequences, under the operation of "natural law in the spiritual world:" then the remission of sins would be followed by a cessation of the consequences of sin, as flowing from violated law. And forgiveness would be the natural—but not the less supernatural—act of the Father-heart of God in such a condition of things. This forgiveness could be declared through a positive institution like baptism.—EDITOR.]

A PURPOSEFUL DISCIPLESHIP.

J. M. LOWE.

Sometimes—I fear many times—it is true that people, while pursuing a course entirely their own, fall carelessly into the way that Christ is going and when in this way, though governed entirely by their own wish and will, they give themselves credit for being followers of Christ. They are following him, but why? Merely because their own course happens for a time to coincide with that of Christ. It is surprising to note how many people presume to follow Christ while at the same time they are doing exactly as they please. Many go into the church, not because they believe Christ wishes them to, but because "every one should belong to some church."

If the motives that lead people into the churches and keep them there could be analyzed, what a multitude of motives there would be! I presume one would better enter a church through a secondary motive rather than not at all, but I am constrained to believe that the highest motive is not enough in evidence. One's service of Christ cannot be any higher and holier than the motive that led him into that service. If the motive was to please his friends or advance himself in business, he has his reward. Loyalty to Christ and eternal life do not come in on that score. Jesus did not say, He that advances his business and pleases his friends shall be saved; but, He that "takes up his cross and follows me." It is quite possible, however, that he who devoutly follows Christ will please his friends and increase his business interests; on the principle that "all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." For many have a purpose of their own in entering the church. Loftiness of motive is the need of the hour. It is indeed but a superficial observation, that a divided and warring church is begotten of divided and warring motives. This is equally true when applied to Christendom. Unify motive or purpose and a unified church is forthcoming.

I candidly submit that to enter a church to save one's own soul is not the highest motive. The soul's salvation is bound up in a larger purpose. The purpose that brought Christ into the world is the proper motive to lead one into his church. The salvation of the race, what a heroic mission! To thrill you and me with this broader and better patriotism was the mission of Christ. The soldier enlists in the army, not to please the general or himself, but to assist him in fighting the battle and winning the victory. We enlist in the army of the Lord restless in the spirit of conquest; such a conquest as leaves the war champions of this world out of consideration. Where are the swords of the Cæsars? Where are the Roman eagles? Lost under the driftwood of the onflowing centuries. King Jesus is marching on at the head of an ever-increasing army. The present is eloquent in his praise and the future is full of his glory.

Could we but put this purpose of a world-wide conquest into the heart of every disciple of our Lord, soon would the uttermost islands of the sea be singing his praise and Africa's outstretched hands would be filled with the bread of life. This is the business of the church. Onward to every creature! is her watchword. She may build colleges and churches and educate preachers on the way, but she must not lose sight of her supreme mission—to preach the gospel to every creature.

In such a purpose as this, moved with such a motive as this, the individual need have no fear of his own salvation. Engaged in the salvation of the world he works out his own.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF GIVING.

LEVI MARSHALL.

"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." We cannot expect to return an equivalent to Christ for what he has given us, but it should make us enthusiastic in serving our Master. Paul says, "Who loved me and gave himself for me;" that was the reason that he never felt he could do enough for Christ until he had given comfort, property and life for him.

In giving of our means for the spreading of the gospel which has brought us our protected homes, our enlightened and civilized country, and the moral and spiritual power that is lifting the world toward God, we bring great blessings on ourselves. It keeps our lives fresh by the changes that it causes. While we watch the current going out in consecrated giving for the Lord's work, we see other means flowing into our possession and it becomes blessed in passing the shrine of devotion to duty. We should see that the overflow of our lives is towards God and not on the side of the world.

The giving which Christ meant and which spreads his gospel does not expect a return in kind or from the same persons, but like the rain that falls to-day it flows into the ocean of God's love and comes back again through the influence of the Sun of Righteousness to bless us in other forms.

Then giving also blesses us in the transformation of the gifts into higher values. What are a few dollars, given for the reclaiming of a soul from barbarian bondage, compared with the new life after God has taken possession of his heart? The money has been brought under the influence where God can bless it and he breathes into it the breath of life and it truly becomes a living soul, for the one benefited has been made partaker of eternal life.

The consciousness of doing good is a great blessing. If it were not so, many of our foreign missionaries would cry out bitterly; whereas they are quiet and patient, for they are walking with God in service that regards not material rewards, and as to the supply of temporal wants they say, "I do not ask to see the distant scene; one step enough for me."

A few evenings ago I listened to a soul-stirring address by Dr. John G. Paton. He spoke with patriarchal grace and earnestness, and his words were made plainer by those spiritual eyes that pleaded from beneath his silvered locks. He has transformed values. He will finish this life feeling himself the richest of men, for he changed the cannibals of the New Hebrides into lovers of Christ and doers of his will.

I heard the founder of a great college make a speech on commencement day. Standing on the rostrum with the graduating class, he looked around and said, "These are all my boys and girls," and then broke down and wept like a child. He saw the new life and consequently the new value in those faces. That was a great blessing to that man. So in giving for Foreign Missions, we turn the money into soul-development and salvation. Many feel that they have to run the gauntlet of satisfying the world before they have anything for the Lord, and mostly find that the purse is empty at the end of the line, or closed selfishly against benevolence.

Let us free ourselves from the cold fangs of any outside formalities that may hold us from enjoying the grace of giving. The giving God (John 3:16) has made everything in this world to be valuable in proportion as it is noted for this quality. Notice the soil, the rivers, the clouds, the sun, moon and stars, heroes, reformers and statesmen.

We do not increase our gifts as we grow in financial ability. The amount one gave a few years ago, that was stamped with the marks of toil and sacrifice, may now be an offering of indifference. We should give until the effort is such as to cause us to know well the investment we are making. There is a heroism about Foreign Missions that arouses the best within us. We can never know fully the blessedness of the meaning of God's Fatherhood and the brotherhood of man until we have given for world-wide missions till we feel it.

Let us all try to enjoy the blessings of giving by making a real sacrifice, and "look up and not down, look forward and not back," and "lend a hand" to raise $200,000 for Foreign Missions this Silver Jubilee year.

USES OF THE RELIGIOUS PAPER—IV.

What is Our Duty Regarding the Religious Paper?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

The work of the pastor as distinguished from that of a mere preacher is to be the spiritual shepherd of his flock. He sees danger from afar and protects his people from it, and leads them forth into all spiritual life. If there be "green pastures" and "still waters," he must know where they are, and lead his flock to them. He is immeasurably more than a teacher, unless teaching be made to include training. The pastor who preaches, leads social meetings, buries the dead, marries the living and seeks to induce his people to attend and take part in the services of the church, has not yet even entered upon his more important task. The pastor must know the time and see the subtle currents that are moving below the surface and devise means, both to save his people from harm and to lead them forth into larger life—and must carry these measures into effect. The pastor is the man who CAN. He is the man who accomplishes things, who brings things to pass in others' lives. He does not try to do it; he does it. This is precisely his mission. His work is that of the statesman, who not only sees what should be done, but brings it to pass. The church is his little nation, and he must put it into ways of prosperity. Like the statesman, he will often meet with opposition, especially in some of the older churches, fossilized in lower ways of living, and this may in some cases change his whole method of pastoral procedure; but his course must still be procedure. Whatever he does he must not do nothing. He must make headway. It is his very mission to do the impossible. If he cannot do all he would, he must do much, and never become the victim of that worst of all practical heresies, "I cannot make my people a spiritual people." Some of our pastors cannot too soon change their ideal and realize that their true work is more that of the statesman than that of the orator.

One of the things which the true pastor will watch with closest care is the reading of his people and that of their children. Reading is a species of society, and has within it the potency of immeasurable mischief or of incalculable good. How many pastors ever preach on this subject? But more than this is necessary. The pastor must be the wise man, who shall tell his people how to manage this unmanageable thing. There must be teaching. Oliver Wendell Holmes has said that the best time to begin to train a child is a hundred years before it is born. You can begin to train a child in its choice of good literature long before it has learned to read. A certain father always gave his little children a reward for bringing the samples of trashy literature, which were almost daily thrown on his step, to him to be burned. Then, when they could read, he provided them with good reading matter, and not one of them ever desired to read anything else. But teaching is not enough. "Thou shalt not," in reading as in most other things, will utterly fail. The house swept and garnished is never safe. You cannot reform men by starving them. You cannot pluck down the stars, but when the sun is up they are gone. You must outshine bad literature with good, or you will utterly fail. When you have reached this point, you are where you will say, if you are a Christian, "I must have the religious paper." It will be as bread to the mendicant whom you would rescue from devouring the filth of the street. You must have it in this battle of literature, and you must teach your children to read it. In a world of evil and good you cannot trust your children to drift into the good. Talk of the bright things of the paper before them, discuss its themes and get them interested in them, and make them feel that they will find the paper a mine of good things. Do this and, if the paper is what it should be, you have given your child a guardian angel for life; for when he is old he will not forsake it. Weave it into childhood's bles ed memories and it will remain a "joy forever."

What the wise parent will do in his family, the pastor may do with his people. He may often refer to the good things of the church paper, discuss its themes, and sometimes preach on them. If the paper is what it should be, its contents will furnish eminently suitable matter for conversation and allusion. Then, the Bethany Reading Course comprises works on the religious history of our people, on missions, on doctrine, etc.; but there is one other work that should be united with these—the religious paper. It gives the vital, quivering, portentous history of the hour. The newspaper is a flying history, keeping up with time. It is the most vitally important of all history, because it is history in the making and still pliant to the touch. No world is ours so much as that of the present moment. The religious paper should be king among the works of the reading course. We may study the lives of our pioneers with great profit, but there is much splendid inspiration in what is being done for God at this very moment; and we must have this, too; and this is best of all. PUT YOUR RELIGIOUS PAPER IN THE READING COURSE, teach your young people to read it, to recite its stirring spiritual lessons, and let them learn in the days of their youth to be wise unto the hour, and when they are grown they will be the makers of great history. We live in this age, in this hour, and we must know it above all else. It is the most golden wisdom. The past is great, but the present is greater; and it alone is ours.

But what shall we do just now? It is the beginning of the year, and the most favorable time for taking subscriptions. How shall we undertake this work?

In the first place, the membership of our churches should be thoroughly taught on the subject. The new duty growing out of the new dangers and new opportunities of our time should be explained and strongly enforced. "Shall I preach on the subject?" Why not? Why preach on anything if not this? Shall we dwell forever among the clouds, dealing in generalities which reach no definite end? I know of no subject with which we could more profitably deal, nor on which we could make a more powerful appeal. It has in it the matter of a score of sermons; and the promise of incalculable good. It should be urged as the duty of every Christian to enter into this larger fellowship, to become communing members of the larger brotherhood, and to draw spiritual sustenance from these vaster fountains. Why should we longer trifle? Let us choose the most fitting time and present the question fully, thoroughly, urgently before our people. Let us not then make the very common mistake of leaving the matter to take care of itself. Why does the blacksmith heat his iron but that he may strike it with his hammer and shape it to his will? Having sown the seed, let us go forth to gather its fruitage. No better pastoral visiting could occupy two weeks of our time than a personal solicitation for our chosen paper in every home. Or we may call to our aid the right person or persons, who will make a spirited canvass of the entire church, presenting the case in the light of its great importance. If any are too poor to take a paper, let them share the reading of another's; or, if this be not practicable, let one be provided for them. They need it as the body needs food. It is one of the conditions of spiritual health in the new mental climate of this nineteenth century, and the poor should not be deprived of it.

It is important to say that a public solicitation from the pulpit will not effect very much. When I was raising money for building the Ft. Wayne church, I went into a certain country congregation in company with the best collection-taker in the state. He proposed that at the close of an evening sermon the object of our visit should be stated and a collection taken. He presented the plea, and did it well. It resulted in a collection, as I remember, of about five dollars. I proposed, then, that we visit every man in his own home and make a personal appeal. The result was about one hundred dollars.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST desires to double its list this year. Why be content with this? Why not inaugurate a journalistic revival? A religious paper read in every family would be worth more than a revival to any church; it would be a revival of the most desirable sort.

We never accomplish any great thing for Christ until we say with Paul, "This one thing I do." Why shall we not say this? And why shall not the one thing, during the early winter months, be this thing?

There are two magical words to conjure with, if we would work miracles. They are THIS ONE THING and NOW. Try them and see what will happen.

Our Budget.

—Foreign Missions first Sunday in March.

—No church among us can afford to neglect it.

—The next few weeks ought to be a period of intense activity in the churches.

—We have the stimulus of a great idea—the world for Christ, and that ought to generate enthusiasm enough to make converts at home.

—Never did our circulation department have more to do than at present, in keeping up with the clubs and in getting out the paper to new subscribers. Let every one of these join in the crusade for a big March offering.

—We hope that joining the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family means both studying the things of God and doing the will of God. Let none of our readers be content to be hearers of the Word only and not doers.

—We offer a number of good things to our readers this week. Help yourself freely, and when you have appeased your hunger, pass on the paper to your neighbor if he is not also a reader. What we covet of our readers is a thorough reading of the paper, for those who read their religious paper most appreciate it best.

—The friends of our foreign work must be gratified to know that more and more churches are giving on a larger scale than in years past. The increase in the last five years is very gratifying. What has been done is a prophecy of still larger things in the years to come.

—In the first year of the Foreign Society's history 20 churches contributed to its treasury. Last year 3,051 churches sent offerings. In five years the income of the society has been more than doubled. It is hoped that this year at least 500 new churches will contribute to the work carried on in the regions beyond. The churches should remember that there is that that scattereth and yet increaseth, but there is that that withholdeth more than is meet and which tendeth to poverty.

—An all-day rally in the interest of the March Offering for Foreign Missions is to be held by the churches of this city, March 1st, at the First Church, at which G. L. Wharton, missionary from India, will be present and deliver one or two addresses.

—The last number of the Christian-Courier speaks very encouragingly of the outlook for Add-Ran University. The attendance is larger, the faculty stronger and the prospects, financially, brighter than for some time in the past.

—There appeared in a recent number of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, of this city, an editorial on "The Home" so vital to its welfare that we have reproduced, it in full in our Family Circle this week, and we commend it to the most careful consideration of all our readers.

—Owing to the demands of a great protracted meeting in Allegheny City, Pa., Bro. Lhamon was unable to send his article for the Bethany C. E. column, and the space this week is occupied by a strong article from J. Z. Tyler, which will do you good to read. The value of the B. C. E. R. C., especially as they relate to missions, do not yet seem to be understood nor appreciated by the brotherhood. The hope of missions for the future lies most largely with the younger element of the church, and any educational factor, such as our Bible-schools, Endeavor Societies and the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, cannot be other than useful—even vital. It is to be hoped that interest in these reading courses will widen and deepen until they shall come to their full power in preparing the future church for its future work.

—Elsewhere we publish an appeal from F. G. Roberts, the corresponding secretary of the I. T. M. B., of Vinita, in behalf of the brethren in that place. Brother Roberts says that if our people understood the needs of that field they would surely help these brethren. While all such help, if possible, ought to emanate from the state board, yet when the board is helpless a people in this condition cannot do otherwise than appeal to the brethren. And we trust that their appeal may not be in vain.

—Two new Reading Courses are offered by the American Institute of Sacred Literature, viz., "The Teachings of Jesus" and "the History of Israel." It is said that more than five hunered ministers of all denominations religiously, are now at work upon these courses. The courses are arranged by a council of seventy, which it will be remembered is a body of biblical teachers representing the leading colleges and seminaries of this couutry and Canada. Presieent John Henry Barrows, of Oberlin, is the president of the council, and President William R. Harper, of Chicago, the principal of the Institute. The principal or the secretary of the Institute may be addressed at Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

—Bro. A. McLean informs us that Bro. Rains is at home sick. As we are now in the midst of the campaign for the March offering for Foreign Missions this sickness comes at an inopportune time. The office of the Foreign Missionary Society at such a time is certainly overwhelmed with matters needing attention and Bro. Rains' absence will greatly increase the burden upon those present. But in this sickness, not only Bro. Rains, but Bro. McLean will have the sympathy of the entire brotherhood, and they will see that the cause of Foreign Missions does not suffer because of this sickness of Bro. Rains. We hope, however, that he will soon be at his post again, urging on the hosts to the largest March offernig from the churches in our history.

—Prof. McDiarmid submits another criticism on "Hezekiah Hobson." It is that in his comments on the "Beanville Banner" he draws the inference from admissions put into the mouth of its editor, of "dishonesty on the part of certain unknown editors that are opposing certain phases of higher criticism." Perhaps Bro. Hobson might claim, in self-defense, if he were permitted to answer the above criticism, that his conclusion does not necessarily include all who oppose "certain phases of higher criticism," and that Prof. M. does not know that it is unjustly applied to some editors who have been suspected of advocating certain things, and opposing others, from other causes than convictions of truth. While we would not deny that there is good ground for the suspicion that such has been the case, in a few instances, we do not believe it can be justly applied to all of even the anti or opposition press. In so far as "Hezekiah Hobson's" remarks are capable of a different interpretation, Prof. M.'s criticism is just.

—A late Associated Press dispatch from Paris, France, announces that three eminent physicians, co-operating in their experiments, have discovered a serum for the cure of chronic alcoholism. The serum is said to be obtained from the blood of horses whose food has been steeped in alcohol, and it is claimed that the serum acts as a counter poison, rendering alcohol antagonistic to the system. Ever since Dr. Keeley demonstrated that it was practicable, in most cases, to remove the intense craving for liquor, scientists and an army of medical practitioners, actuated perhaps no less by the commercial spirit than by philanthropic motives, have been in search of a remedy which would go even further than Dr. Keeley's and render the system immune against alcohol. Dr. Paquin, of this city, claims to have discovered such a remedy and has succeeded in convincing a number of the principal business men of the city of the value of his remedy and inducing them to invest a large sum of money to introduce his immunizing treatment. We have examined some of the testimonials concerning Dr. Paquin's treatment and they seem quite sufficient to convince the average layman of its efficacy, however professional men and scientists may regard it. We shall watch with interest the development of this new treatment as a means of mitigating the frightful evil of alcoholism.

—How to raise a club: Let a few friends who are taking the paper, or who wish to take it, get together and talk the matter over. Decide who is the best person to have charge of the matter and do the correspondence with this company. Let some others be appointed to help him in the work of soliciting. Get the preacher to give you a list of the church membership, and to announce from his pulpit that a club is being raised. Do not limit your canvass to your own church members, however. Set the wheels in motion at once if they are not going.

—In the past few days the Foreign Society has received over $7,000 in special gifts.

—We regret to hear of the death of R. S. Hester, mentioned elsewhere in this paper, and extend our sympathy to the widow and relatives in their deep sorrow.

—In the program of the Indianapolis Congress, recently published, the name of A. McLean should be substituted for that of B. L. Smith, and the Conference on City Evangelization for Friday should be omitted.

—The Chautauquan informs us that the word "Chicago," originally spelled "Shekago," means "foul odor." Dwellers along the route of the drainage canal will not fail to appreciate the prophetic appropriateness of this appellation.

—The church in Bedford, Iowa, now has over $7,000 pledged toward a new church building. Lawrence E. Beard recently added $1,000 to his former subscription for the building. J. Will Walters is the pastor of this liberal, flourishing congregation.

—The tracts distributed by the Free Tract Publishing House, Audrain, Mich., we are informed, are written by a brother who was recovered from infidelity by the gospel of Christ. These tracts are an expose of the various issues and modern forms of infidelity and may be had by enclosing stamps for their carriage. The brother desires them distributed in large quantities.

—J. E. Lynn, pastor of the church in Springfield, Ill., says that the course of lectures on "The Beginnings of Christianity," by Dr. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, given under the auspices of the church in Springfield, without cost, were attended by large and appreciative audiences. Also that the best people of the city were enthusiastic in their praise of the course and grateful to the church for bringing Dr. Willett to the city.

—We believe that we are publishing the soundest missionary literature, that which will strike deeper and be more enduring in its effect, in this campaign for Foreign Missions, that we have yet published. The articles are strong, appealing to both the head and heart, and leave the impression that personal responsibility and greater liberality lie at the basis of all successful mission work. An aroused conscience is all that is necessary to assure larger offerings for Foreign Missions, and those who read the literature in our columns from week to week from our able secretaries and others cannot slumber. We must not falter. The hour is at hand. Let us pray and preach and work for the largest March offering for Foreign Missions in our history.

—M. Pittman, pastor of the church in New Orleans, writes that they will welcome all brethren who may visit that city during Mardi Gras week at the church on the corner of Coliseum and Melpomeme Streets. The church will be open during business hours and a reception committee will be on hand to greet the visitors. There will be a Christian literature table and a bureau of information in the church for the benefit of those visiting in or about the city during that week. Let every Disciple who visits New Orleans that week report at the church.

—Not long ago we mentioned the serious sickness of Brother Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo. We are glad to receive this later word:

I am happy to write you that after five weeks' illness, and the past three very dangerously so, we feel very much encouraged to-day because of so many indications that he has so well passed the crisis of the disease. Very truly,

Feb. 5th. J. C. WYATT.

Concerning a visit recently made to Jacksonville, Ill., by G. L. Wharton, of Hurda, C. P., India, A. C. Roach writes:

Bro. G. L. Wharton, Hurda, C. P., India, was with us yesterday. He spoke on "India's Need of Christ," and "What an India Famine Means." The audiences were large and enthusiastic. Bro. Wharton speaks from seventeen years' experience and his words find a place in hearts. No collection was taken, but nearly $50 was offered after the meeting closed. These addresses will surely have an effect to augment the March collection.

—The pulpit is waning in its influence. We have but to cite a few instances to show that it is losing its grip on the people. Newspapers and magazines and authors are taking the places of preacher.

So says Dr. Hillis. But we do not believe a word of it. It may be true that a certain kind of preaching "is waning in its influence," but a living gospel, preached by a living man, whose soul is aflame with love for God and for men never had more appreciative hearers than it has to-day.

—The Courier, Dallas, Texas, last week published the following statement, complimentary to the Disciples of Christ, publicly made by Sam Jones while in that city recently:

Sam Jones made the statement in a public lecture in Dallas last Lord's day, that the Disciples of Christ are the only Protestant religious people in this county who are growing. "Not because they are better than the people of other religious bodies," he said, "but because they are a hustling people." "And let me tell you," said Mr. Jones, "I have never seen one of their preachers who is not a prohibitionist."

—Commenting on the religious statistics of the past year, in this country, the Christian Commonwealth, of London, has this comment:

Of individual denominational increase during the past year the Reformed Catholics show the largest per cent. But of the better known evangelical bodies, the Disciples of Christ are again foremost, their gain being three per cent. Although having a membership about one-fifth as large as the Methodists, their converts number only 270 less than those of the larger body; while, though not double the numbers of the Congregationalists, the Disciples have nearly fourteen times as many converts. Baptists have, in actual numbers, made the greatest gain, viz., 89,000; but this is only two per cent. on their membership. The great need for Christian union is strikingly set forth by this table. Thirteen bodies of Baptists, seventeen divisions of Methodists, twelve branches of Presbyterians, to say nothing of Spiritualists, Mennonites, Brethren, etc., etc.

—Rev. J. C. Goodrich, agent of the American Bible Society in Manila, says:

In a general way I am more than optimistic about the prospects for our work, and only fear that we will not be able to work fast enough. The heat even at this time of the year is very great from eleven until four, and during that time it is scarcely safe for one not accustomed to it to expose himself to the sun. The missionaries who are here are having unusual success in winning the natives, and are planning and will execute greater things here than the church at home dreams of.

—The new library of the Y. M. C. A. in Manila is now open to the public. This library was sent from the United States on the transport, Thomas, and consists of 455 volumes, including some of the world's best literature. It is thought that the establishment of this library will mark a new era in the literary history of that city. The number of volumes will of course be increased from time to time, and all the leading magazines and papers are to be kept on file in the reading room of the building erected for this purpose. The new building was opened Jan. 1,1900, with appropriate services and a reception.

—I still survive, and I am still trying to do something for the cause I love better than life. Through persecution and poverty, without regular employment and without "salary." Sometimes in doubt as to how Providence will furnish the necessaries of life, not sufficiently well clad to appear before a respectable audience, laboring with my hands at 69 for a support, preaching in out-of-the-way places where younger, better-fed and better-clad preachers will not go, denied the luxury of some much-needed books and deprived of the cheering, comforting companionship of a single good religious paper—such is the picture! You will not wonder that poor, weak human nature sometimes almost doubts whether, after all, there is any such thing as the "brotherly kindness" so often presented as a distinguishing feature of religion. And you will hardly need to be told that Satan has sorely buffetted me under these untoward circumstances.

The above, from an aged preacher, shows that the days of heroism are not passed, and that it is through "great tribulation" that the gospel is yet preached in some sections of the country. There is perhaps not so much the lack of "brotherly kindness," as the lack of some organized system by which brotherly kindness may express itself in a more effective way. We cannot "bear each other's burdens" across vast stretches of country without a better co-operation than we have yet secured.

"The Advocate" is the name of the organ of the First Christian Church, Chicago. It is edited by F. G. Tyrrell, the pastor, and is, of course, a wide-awake little journal. That it will advocate primitive Christianity, social, industrial and civil reforms and the interests of the First Church we have not the shadow of a doubt.

Singer A. O. Hunsaker will retire from the field, March 1st, for a few months. He has been engaged in evangelistic singing for five years, during which time he has seen added to the various churches 1,446 souls. The last two years he has worked with J. V. Coombs. His labors have extended into ten states and one territory.

F. Howard Sweetman writing from Harvard, Nebraska, says: "On our way to our next meeting at Chester, Neb., we stop off a day or two and talk to Pastor Gregg. We leave Monday (to-morrow) to begin work again. Dr. J. G. Encell, of Iowa, will do the preaching and the brethren there may expect a treat every night, as Bro. E. is strictly a Bible man. Please address me Chester, Neb., for the present."

The First Christian Church, Birmingham, Ala., of which O. P. Spiegel is minister, raised over $3,500 last year. Nearly $500 of this amount went to the various missionary interests of the church. There were 52 additions to the church. He also preached 176 sermons during his vacation, baptized 60 people and organized a church in Tuskaloosa, Ala. The Birmingham church now has about 300 members and is making good progress.

R. E. L. Prunty, of Unionville, Mo., says that the church in Brookfield, where a successful revival has just been held, "would welcome a wide-awake worker among them. A man not only able to support with credit his position in the pulpit, but whose soul is full of the love of God and humanity." Bro. Prunty has been called to the work in Tomsonville another year for two Sunday afternoons per month in addition to his work in Unionville.

F. G. Tyrrell, pastor First Christian Church, Chicago, Ill., will lecture in Missouri towns the week beginning March 19. He already has one date for Jefferson City arranged, and while in the state can be had for other points. J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill., writes that "the Christian Church in Macomb has engaged Brother G. W. Buckner to preach and to do the pastoral work of the church. Brother Buckner recently visited the church and the people were delighted with him and extended him a call, which he has accepted. He began his work this last Lord's day." Bro. Reynolds adds: "We are heartily united on him and are determined to stand by him in the good work. We hope for great things through his labors. Pray for us that our hopes may be fully realized."

J. H. Hardin has resigned the presidency of Eureka College, to take effect at the close of the present school year, in June. Bro. Hardin will have filled out, at the expiration of the present engagement, five years of very useful service for that institution. We are not informed as to his plans for the future. The board of trustees has elected as his successor Prof. R. E. Hieronymus, who has the matter of acceptance under consideration. This choice of a successor to President Hardin seems to us in every way a wise one, and the friends of the institution will rejoice to learn that he has accepted the position, as he probably will.

Hon. John A. Lee, of this city, having been requested in a highly complimentary letter published in the St Louis Times and signed by a large number of leading Democrats of Missouri, to seek the nomination of lieutenant-governor of the state in the election this year, has signified his purpose so to do. Mr. Lee is an able man, is well known and popular in the state, and is an upright, Christian citizen. He is a member of the Central Christian Church of this city. Irrespective of politics we should be glad to see him nominated for the position, because we believe he would use his office, if elected, for what he believed to be the best interest of the people.

J. B. Boen, who ministers for the First Church in Oklahoma City, O. T., has been unanimously called to remain another year. During his eleven months ministry there have been 150 additions to the church and a large church debt paid. The Ladies' Aid Society has also bought and paid for a fine organ for the church. After being recalled Bro. Boen then asked his official board for a leave of absence, as he wished to make an extended tour of the world. This was readily granted, and Bro. Marshall, of Texas, was chosen to fill the vacancy. Bro. Boen expects to start the 12th inst., and will visit the principal places of interest in Europe, Asia and Africa. He expects especially to visit Egypt, an extended trip through Palestine, Constantinople, Athens, Florence, Venice, Naples, Rome, Switzerland, Germany, Paris, etc.

Edward B. Bagby.

The pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington, D. C., was born in King and Queen county, Va., Sept. 29, 1865. His parents were Alexander F. Bagby and Fannie S. Walker, who belong to two of the oldest and largest families in Tidewater, Va. His father was a gallant Confederate officer and is a gentleman of high character, and his mother a beautiful and gracious woman, to whose influence more than to anything else he owes his position in the Christian ministry. When a child the family moved from the country to Richmond, where he attended Sunday-school at the Seventh Street Christian Church, then served by J. Z. Tyler. He confessed Christ under the preaching of J. M. Trible and was baptized by Robert Y. Henley August, 1877. He attended the famous Aberdeen Academy in his native county, and afterwards Kentucky University, where he received the degree of A. B., and he graduated at the College of the Bible in 1887. Later he went to Yale and graduated at the Divinity School in 1890. His first pastorate was in Ronceverte, W. Va., and Clifton Forge, Va., where he did excellent service. He preached also at Mathews and Newport News, Va., for some months, and served one year as evangelist in Virginia and Maryland.

Mr. Bagby's chief work has been in Washington City, where he settled as pastor of the Ninth Street Church in April, 1891. The Vermont Ave. Church, three years before, had organized a mission in that section of the city, east of the Capitol, which was presided over first by P. B. Hall and then W. D. Owen, who at that time was a member of Congress. In 1891 a chapel was built, and E. B. Bagby, who had been selected long before for this work, was invited to hold a meeting. A large number were obedient to the faith and these, together with sixty-two of the Vermont Avenue people, organized themselves into a church and called our brother to the pastorate. In all 987 persons have been added under his labors, a total enrollment of 1,049. The present membership is 740, and the church has raised $40,000, erected a handsome house of worship where the former chapel stood, with all down-to-date conveniences, has a Sunday-school of 450 and three flourishing Endeavor Societies, and has contributed about $3,000 for missions and charities.

Mr. Bagby was elected chaplain of the House of Representatives in 1893, and served most acceptably in that office during the Fifty-third Congress, and has been renominated three times by his side of the House. Perhaps the most important event in his life was his marriage in June, 1893, to Miss Virginia Grimes, of Baltimore, who has proven a wise and efficient helpmeet in all his labors. Their union has been blessed with three children—two girls and one boy.

Our Ninth Street pastor is tall and well built, wears glasses, is a very genial soul, has been known to tell a good story and even arouse a laugh, is a fine organizer, has a special gift for reaching young people, preaches plain, practical and easily digested sermons, is a man of infinite patience and good nature, grows, is true to the old Jerusalem gospel, yet a general favorite with all his religious neighbors, above all is consecrated and faithful, sound and safe. For him and his charge there is a bright future.

Its fame and cures and sales have spread abroad all over the world, and it is universally recognized as the best blood medicine money can buy.

A. P. Stout.

A. P. Stout was born near Eagletown, Indiana, in 1844. He was brought up in the faith of the Friends, and remained in that fellowship until he was twenty-two years of age, when he was baptized by Rev. Charles Austin and identified himself with the Disciples of Christ. Shortly afterward he entered the ministry. His labors as a preacher and pastor have been abundantly blessed.

In 1877 he began a special study of the Gospel of Matthew. Before he had gone very far it occurred to him to note every footstep of Jesus. With pencil and paper in hand, the four Gospels were carefully studied, and each journey of the Master was noted and numbered. The next step was to arrange these journeys in chronological order. The result of these studies was the valuable work, "Map of the Travels of Jesus," which has had a large sale throughout the United States. (See page 2.)

Another work by Mr. Stout is a book, "The Chronology of Christ's Life." It contains the entire Gospels in chronological order, and side by side. This method of study, of Mr. Stout's devising, has been adopted and followed closely by the International Lesson Committee in planning the lessons for 1900 and the first half of 1901. Mr. Stout possesses testimonials to the value of his work from this committee.

For some years past Mr. Stout has given his whole time and thought to work and study on his maps and books, but he announces that with the completion of the book upon which he is now engaged—"Chronology of the Christ"—he will return to pastoral work. He is now at his home at Eagletown, Indiana.

Colorado Letter.

Thanks for your letter. Its words of encouragement are appreciated. To be assured that one has done or is doing good, helps him to do still better. As we have opportunity to do so let us, therefore, speak words of cheer to our comrades, acquaintances and friends. Men are dying for sympathy. A single word of appreciation or of encouragement would have saved many a one from a course, the end of which is death. Believe me when I say that the world now, the world with which we are acquainted, is in greater need of genuine sympathy than of sound theology. Nor is this remark to be understood as in any sense or to any degree a depreciation of the value of wholesome teaching. Healthy and health-producing doctrine men need. Doctrine and doing are both needed. Soundness in the faith is important, but so also is soundness in charity. Both are enjoined in the New Testament. To neglect either is unwise. But of the two love is the more important. This without doubt is the teaching of Paul.

Your question is an inquiry of unusual importance, and difficult to answer satisfactorily. "How can I have more power with my fellowmen to bring them to Christ?" is the question to which I refer.

Permit me to congratulate you on the fact that you desire to bring men to Christ. This is of God. It indicates the presence of the Holy Spirit. The value of man, as man, is apparent in this desire. The fact that man without the Christ is in a lost condition is appreciated. The hurtfulness of sin is unseen. The person who has a desire to bring men to Christ believes that "there is no other name under heaven that is given among men wherein we must be saved."

But what is meant by bringing persons to Christ? This question at this point is pertinent. Let us dwell on it for a moment. You say: "How can I have more power with my fellowmen to bring them to Christ?" What is it to bring man to Christ? This was a very matter-of-fact proceeding when Jesus was in bodily form on earth.

John the Baptist said to two of his disciples: "Behold the Lamb of God!" The two followed Jesus as he walked along the way. They conversed with him. As they talked with him they came to understand him better. With this fuller understanding there grew up a stronger attachment for him. The two were John, the writer of the fourth Gospel, and Andrew. Andrew brought his brother Simon to the Christ. Not metaphysically, not psychologically, not figuratively, nor yet alone spiritually, but literally and in person. Andrew brought Simon, who was afterwards called Peter, to the man Jesus. Andrew said to Simon: "We have found the Messiah." It is evident that previously, being devout Jews, they talked together about the coming One. Andrew, therefore, in brief said: "I think that I have found him." The next day Jesus said to Philip, of Bethsaida, the home of Andrew and Peter: "Follow me." He meant that Philip should literally walk with him along the way, and this apparently without hesitation he did. Philip, meeting Nathanael, said: "We have found him of whom Moses in the law and prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Joseph." At first Nathanael hesitated, doubting, but later, after coming into personal contact with Jesus, and after hearing him speak, said to him: "Thou art the Son of God: thou art King of Israel."

As a result of this physical coming to the man Jesus, and of their personal acquaintance with him, the five men here named came to Jesus in a higher and a holier sense. They came into fellowship with him spiritually. They believed in him, they loved him, they served him. In this sense of coming to Christ I understand you to inquire: "How can I have more power with my fellowmen to bring them to Christ?" The inquiry means: "How can I to a greater degree induce men to believe in Christ, to love Christ, to obey Christ, to daily serve Christ?"

This is a superlatively important inquiry. It means more than, "How can I have more power with my fellowmen to bring them into the church?" It is possible to bring men into the fellowship of an organized congregation without in any sense bringing them to Christ. Note well this statement. It is most important, and as true as it is important. There are in our churches men and women, not a few, who have never been brought to the Christ. Their confession of Christ, judging by their subsequent conduct, was a mere form, as was also their immersion in water. By an observance of these forms they became members of a society —that and nothing more. A question more difficult to answer than yours is this: HOW CAN THE MEN AND WOMEN WHO ARE NOW IN OUR CHURCHES, AND WHO HAVE NOT COME TO CHRIST, BE BROUGHT TO HIM? i. e., to believe on, to love and to serve him.

The Master, in the Sermon on the Mount, made a remark which in this connection is appropriate. It is this: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." This Jesus said after saying to those who believed in and loved him: "Ye are the light of the world." Jesus himself was the true light. The light reflected by his disciples came from him. The Christ said: "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." It is worthy of note that Jesus did not say: "MAKE your light shine, the light that you have from me," but, "LET your light shine." The important matter is to keep close to him who is the light of the world, in this way being filled with his light, then simply LET it shine.

The answer, therefore, for the present; to your question is, Follow closely the Christ. Spend much time in communion with him. Make his Word your constant companion. Be faithful in the keeping of his ordinances. As opportunities present themselves, do good to all men. "That they may see your good works," said Messiah. He himself "went about doing good." The most eloquent preaching is Christly living—as it is also the most effective.

Do not be discouraged because you cannot do some apparently great thing. Whether you are doing from day to day great things or small can not now be known. God knows and man does not. Let the fact that God knows be sufficient. No one thought when Andrew brought Simon Peter to Christ that he did a great thing—but he did. To be instrumental in bringing one such person to Jesus makes the life of the person so doing abundantly successful.

Finally, be content in your station. Live in such close and constant fellowship with the Christ as to reflect his life. He will see to it as Lord of the harvest that fruit will result. God bless you!

Death of R. S. Hester.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be shocked and saddened at the news of the death of Bro. R. S. Hester, of Eureka, Ill., which occurred yesterday afternoon. Bro. Hester, accompanied by his wife, arrived in San Antonio Saturday. He attended services at the Central Church Sunday and appeared to be in excellent spirits. Yesterday afternoon he started down town upon an errand for a sick lady who roomed at his boarding-place, and when but a block from the house he suddenly fell dead. So suddenly was he overtaken by the grim destroyer that ere those who saw him fall could reach his side life was extinct. We cannot conceive of the shock to Sister Hester. Almost a total stranger, her own health precarious, a thousand miles from home, unused to traveling alone and confronted by so terrible a grief, her condition was truly pitiable. We did what we could for her, and every arrangement was made for her safety and comfort upon her long, sad journey home with the dead body of her beloved husband.

So truly we "know not what a day may bring forth," "for in the midst of life we are in death." Bro. Hester is well known as a friend of Eureka College, and was an uncle of Prof. Gilchrist and father-in-law of Bro. Hester, of Illinois. He was almost 75 years of age, and still was a vigorous and active man, and his death was all the more shocking in its suddenness. G. B. R.

Backache.

So many women suffer from it. It mars alike their hours of work and pleasure. Backache is generally a symptom of derangement of the delicate womanly organs. It is useless therefore to apply plasters and similar local treatments. A cure can only be effected when the cause of the ache is removed. The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure the debilitating drains, the inflammation, ulceration and displacement which cause backache, sideache, headache and many other aches and pains. "Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol and is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and other narcotics. It agrees with the most delicate persons.

"I took your medicine six months and I feel now like a new person," writes Miss Annie Stephens, of Bellville, Wood Co., W. Va. "Have no backache, no headache, no pain anywhere. I took seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and seven bottles of his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I think there is no medicine like Dr. Pierce's. I can't speak highly enough of your medicine for it has done me so much good. I don't feel tired as I used to, nor sick. I feel well and think there is no medicine equal to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

Texas Letter.

At the installation of the pastor of the First Unitarian Church of this city recently, Dr. Alexander Kohut, the Jewish Rabbi, made a remarkable speech. He said: "The glorious teachings of Jesus of Nazareth we have failed to carry out. I can remember the time when the name of Jesus was never mentioned in a synagogue. Now we accept the teaching, and acknowledge him as the world's most inspired prophet."

What does this strange language mean? Does it mean that the dawn of the glorious day is here when the Jew will accept Jesus as his long looked-for Messiah? To accept his teaching and acknowledge him as the world's most inspired prophet certainly would bear that interpretation. It seems to lift him above Moses, and to place the gospel above the law—to point men to Calvary rather than to Sinai. But Dr. Kohut is young; and although he is brilliant and cultured, it is possible that his utterances do not correctly represent his race. They may be the enthusiastic gushings of one devoid of the experience and sober second thought necessary to speak authoritatively on this great subject. Or it may be that he is destined to be the leader of his people, and that this is the first bugle call to them to follow.

But there is still another explanation, which I fear is the true one. It may be that since Unitarianism, like Judaism, rejects the divinity in the Christ, that these two religious bodies are simply rejoicing over the discovery of a common ground where they can meet and greet each other in social fellowship, and where they can unite in the effort to dethrone our Messiah. We will see.

Dallas is forging forward in material prosperity. A census, just completed, gives her 68,572 people, with 160 factories, employing 3,000 operatives. A general air of prosperity prevails, and the outlook is full of promise. The franchise for an electric road to Ft. Worth, our enterprising neighbor 30 miles away, has been granted, which is evidence of how we feel on expansion.

Geo. W. Muckley, our enterprising Church Extension man, was with us a few Sundays since, and made a fine impression on our people; and we, despite our heavy home burdens, gave him substantial evidence of appreciation in the form of a pledge of $600 to his work. Texas generally is doing well by him.

Russell H. Conwell, the famous Baptist preacher of Philadelphia, has given us his lecture, "Acres of Diamonds." I had never heard him before, but had heard much of him, and was prepared to expect much, and I was not disappointed. The lecture was entertaining, instructive, amusing, inspiring and intensely practical.

Add-Ran University is hopeful and aggressive. Granville Jones is to take the field in its interest, his salary being provided by private individuals. It is hoped to have a Girls' Home ready by the fall session. Arrangements are under way to free the Thorp Spring property from debt and make it a school tributary to the University. The attendence this year is better than last, and the students are of a high order. All in all the outlook is encouraging.

Sam Jones, the inimitable, irresistable, one-only Sam Jones, has been with us again and given us a lecture and sermon. They were characteristic of the man, and the people flocked to hear him. In fact, he is a favorite in Dallas, and was applauded to the echo when he announced that he might hold a series of meetings here in the spring.

Portland Letter.

All hail, 1900—a glorious presage of the more glorious 20th century. What wonderful messages for the nations farther West, those that sat so long in the region of the shadows. Blessed is he that has a part in the mighty struggle—light against darkness—of the coming eras.

Contrast America 1800 with America 1900. First a small strip of territory, 5,000,000 souls, no steam, no telegraph, no telephone. Now, territory tenfold, from sea to sea, islands dotting both oceans, 85,000,000 population, commerce extraordinary, communication with all the habitable world!

As Paul would say, "Take account of these things." "Behold these visions."

Westward vision, 1800. Not a port open to commerce or a Christian missionary, 1900. Nations containing no fewer than 500,000,000 poplation welcome the mighty ships from across the waters. What is in store for the 20th century American? We hint at destiny. Inspiring word! Changes will be more rapid, mistakes more palpable and culpable, but right more noticeable and surer of reward.

The most inspiring outlook is from the eastern shores of the Pacific, stretching in almost unbroken line from the torrid to within the frigid zone. Steam and telegraph have brought us nearer to Hong Kong and Manila than New York in 1800 was to Paris and Liverpool. Rail and telephone make us the ante-room of America's counting house.

New discoveries: Within the last fifty years California has yielded up her many millions. Russia gave us her washpot, Alaska. We make it a vast mining field and fishing ground. Cash balance each year equaling several times the first cost.

And what of the land "where rolls the Oregon," the land of which the great Webster said that the government would never get adequate returns for exploring its sandy waters? Behold three states, Idaho, Washington, Oregon. Agriculture expanding, commerce a mighty infant, mining in embryo, yet wonderfully increasing, fisheries innumerable, lumber the envy and the desire of the world.

When Seward predicted that within 100 years from the purchase of Alaska the great oceanic commerce would be in Pacific waters the people thought him visionary, but now we think him a prophet. Not fifty years since Commodore Perry dropped anchor in a Japanese port in the name of the "Stars and Stripes" and an "Open Bible," and now we are trading with Japan, Corea, China, Siam and Oceanica, and hold Guam, the Hawaiian and the Philippine Islands. Then we had nothing but an immigrant trail to the great West. Now almost every important railway system seeks a terminus on the Pacific.

What of the civilization? Here the best Anglo-Saxon come face to face with the darkest Mongolian heathenism. Not alone Perry's cannon, nor Dewey's fleet, but the great Master's gospel must conquer in this struggle. For this an open Bible, courageous captains of the King and a united Christendom will bring a glorious victory. And this year, 1900, is the preface to the 20th century in commerce, in world-wide statesmanship, in Christian civilization. In no part of the habitable world will the century witness more important history-making battle grounds than upon the shores of the Pacific Ocean. And from no part of this almost limitless coast-line will the nations expect the light of life more surely than from the shores of the United States. And as beaconlights the great coast cities, Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, San Francisco, must be prepared to send forth their richest freightage of gospel truth to the nations as their merchantmen come and go in the floodtide of an increasing commerce.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Try It Yourself.

If Mr. Sheldon succeeds in running a daily secular journal as Christ would have him run it, we hope the experiment will be tried by the religious press generally. It would make a decided change in some of them.—Christian-Evangelist, Feb. 1st.

How would it do for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to set the example? I cannot believe that Jesus would publish that article which appeared in the C.-E. on "Higher Criticism in Beanville." But then, perhaps, I am not to be the judge in this case. You are to publish what you think Jesus would publish. We cannot all have the same idea of things. But it might make a decided change in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST if the editor would take the medicine he prescribes for others.

W. H. APPLEGATE.

[We did not prescribe the medicine for others, Bro. A., any more than we did for ourselves. No doubt it would make "a decided change in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST" if some one who has a larger knowledge of Christ's will, and a larger measure of his Spirit, should seek to conduct it as Christ would have it conducted. But there is the trouble. Most of us "see through a glass darkly," here, and we can only do what seems to us to be in accordance with Christ's will. No doubt editors of religious journals make many mistakes in this respect, as their readers often point out, but it is only charity to suppose that most of them do the best they know how, and they often act with a knowledge of circumstances and conditions which their critics do not have. Bear with our mistakes, brethren, and pray that we may have more wisdom and more grace. Try, too, to believe it possible that an editor may have some good reason for publishing an article objectionable to you, that you do not know of.—EDITOR.]

New York Letter.

The Anti-saloon League of America made a special concerted effort against the awful ravages of that licensed iniquity in this city on Sunday, January 28th. Most of the churches in Harlem opened their doors to the advocates of the League, who showed the good work accomplished by it in driving many saloons out of existence in various parts of the country. The Rev. John L. Clark, of Chicago, said the League has driven 8,000 saloons out of Ohio within the past five years, reducing the number from 13,000 to 5,000. It is reported in the papers of New York that Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst is working on a plan of legislation that favors licenses to sell liquors on Sunday. If the report is correct many of Dr. Parkhurst's strongest supporters in his heroic fight against municipal corruption will forsake him in this attempt. It is to be hoped, however, that Parkhurst has not fallen into the foul depths where the Rev. W. S. Rainsford stands on this question. Rainsford, as is well known, favors the opening of saloons on the Lord's day, and never loses an opportunity of airing his opinions on this question. Gov. Roosevelt has been quoted lately, also, as favoring some plan by which the German people may on Sunday legally obtain beer to drink. One of the great needs of our times is the spreading and strengthening of positive, unyielding sentiments against the American saloon in all its forms and phases. I find by actual experience that citizens of whom it is least expected give their consent for the opening of saloons, and also let their property for the business. Those who conduct such business commit a crime against the community, and those who give their consent and thereby make their legal existence possible, are guilty because they partake of their crimes—particeps criminis.

Dr. R. S. McArthur, in the midst of a series on "The Divine Remedy for Human Misery" preached a sermon last evening on "Sympathy with the Bruised." He said in the course of his remarks, Our Lord came "to set at liberty them that are bruised" by sin. In the woman who was a sinner he saw the woman, but in her the Pharisee saw only the sinner. The church to-day must possess the sympathetic heart of a divine-human Master if she is to bring her helpful ministers to bear on the burdened lives and broken hearts in all our great cities. Terrible tragedies are enacting in all our streets. The bruised men and women in our city life are more worthy of pity and help than were ever the heroines or heroes described by novelists or dramatists. They are not far to seek, and there are wounds that never fully heal. The church needs a great, loving heart and a strong, gentle hand, that she may lift up the fallen, heal the bruised and mend the broken. In speaking of the causes that break human hearts Dr. McArthur said:

The liquor traffic is the most potent factor among men in bruising and breaking hearts. It is vastly worse than war. War slays its thousands; liquor its tens of thousands. War has its alienating causes and consequences; drink is evil only, and that continually. The saloon is the recruiting station of sin and Satan; it is the advance agent of hades. The church throws down the gauntlet to the saloon. The saloon must go, or the church must admit partial defeat. The saloon sends an army of doomed men through the law on their way to degradation and perdition, and the saloon fills the earth with broken hearts. Their cry goes up to heaven, and it will move the heart and the arm of the mighty God. The church must arouse herself against this gigantic and satanic evil. Compared with it the horrors of war and epidemic are as nothing.

Quite a bitter controversy is going on in New York between the Evangelicals and Unitarians, occasioned by Dr. A. C. Dixon's refusal to invite the latter to take part in the great revival now in progress in Brooklyn. The Rev. Len G. Broughton, of Georgia, was invited to Brooklyn to preach in "a series of union revival meetings" in which, it was understood, all Christian people should be asked to take part. But when something was said about inviting certain Unitarians, Dr. Dixon objected. Dr. Dixon refuses to invite them on the ground that they can not be Christians while denying the essential and unique divinity of Jesus Christ. In speaking of the many things said about the "war on Unitarianism," Dr. Dixon said in a great meeting in Association Hall:

It is a war on all forms of infidelity and sin. Before God infidelity is the most damning sin of all. Jesus said, "He that believeth not the Son, the wrath of God abideth within him." The rejection of Jesus Christ as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world" is the one sin for which men go to hell, because it includes and fosters all other sins. When a man truly accepts Jesus Christ as his Savior he gives up sin. Now, Unitarianism is only one form of infidelity, but it is the form that just now poses under the guise of culture and religion, and through pulpit and press during recent months has been insulting believers in the deity of Christ by asserting that there is little need of multiplying Unitarian Churches, because orthodox churches are full of such unbelievers.

The worst denial of Christ that I can imagine is a denial of his truthfulness when he claims the attributes of deity. Unitarianism is a worse form of infidelity than agnosticism, because agnosticism simply says, "I do not know," while Unitarianism claims to have knowledge which flatly denies the deity of Christ and the personality of the Holy Spirit.

I speak only for myself, but I say it deliberately, if Unitarianism is true I would rather have the unwilling martyrs, Abraham Lincoln and James A. Garfield, for my Savior than Jesus Christ, for neither Lincoln nor Garfield claimed to be divine, and were, therefore, better than Christ, if he deceived the people by claiming, as he did, attributes of deity. Christ was either God manifest in the flesh or he was the worst of men. There is no middle ground.

The Rev. Mr. Broughton is saying many severe things about worldly-minded church members, and is thereby stirring up the people in no small degree.

The Rev. Madison C. Peters, one of the most popular preachers in New York City, who for eleven years was pastor of the Bloomingdale Reformed Church, read this letter to his flock on Lord's day morning, Feb. 4th:

To My Dear People:—

I have sent to the Consistory my resignation as pastor of the Bloomingdale Church, and have requested them to unite with me in asking the New York Classis to dissolve our pleasant relationship as pastor and people. My sole reason for resigning this position of power and influence is that, after many years of honest and prayerful investigation, I have come to the deliberate conclusion that the Bible, the Protestant's only rule of faith, teaches baptism for believers only. I can therefore no longer, in good conscience, practice infant baptism or baptism by sprinkling. I am a minister of the Reformed Church, and while I am thus connected I shall not give my reasons for the change of conviction I love the Reformed Church. It is the church of my fathers. I admire its breadth and depth. Those who have attended my ministry through all these years will bear me witness that I have always been a loyal son, and I had fondly hoped that I could serve my denomination in this church with my riper years as I gave it the ardor of my youth.

But I must be true to myself, practice only what I believe and preach what I can practice. To you, my dear people, whose kindly counsel, unwavering loyalty and generous support in every good work have made my labors both pleasant and successful, I give my heartiest thanks. My congregation is composed of not less than eleven different denominations of Protestants, while hundreds of Jews and Catholics constantly attend my ministry. I thank God to-day that he has permitted me to bring his message to such various minds and hearts as have constantly gathered within these walls. All the present members of this church except eleven persons came into it during my ministry of nearly eleven years. I have therefore and always shall have a peculiar love for and undying interest in the Bloomingdale Church. For your love I give you my love, and for your prayers my prayers. Your pastor and friend,

Jan. 27, 1900. MADISON C. PETERS.

Dr. Peters has made splendid success of his work in New York, having built up the church from a membership of sixty to something like six hundred. He leaves his church simply for conscience sake on the question of baptism. All honor to Madison C. Peters for taking this stand! The Lord will bless him for it. May his example lead other men to examine their position and practice in relation to Christian baptism.

Are You Coming to St. Louis?

A former brief note, written especially to assist such as are contemplating a move to this city and who are members of the Christian Church, has brought to us a number of communications in reply, and we will now undertake to add somewhat to the little information we then gave concerning our churches.

A glance at a map will show to the reader that the city, being situated on the western bank of the Mississippi River, is easily divided into its northern and southern, eastern and western districts, and in giving the location of our churches we use these designations.

Beginning with the northern we have first our Fourth Christian Church, situated at 1501 Penrose Avenue, of which E. T. McFarland, at 1422 Penrose Avenue, is pastor. This is one of the older sections of the city and is a mixed manufacturing and residence district. Street car line connection with all parts of the city is good and many who do business in the center of the city reside here. We have a good church house, a fine congregation of 200 members, a Bible-school of about 300 and a splendid opportunity for work and church privileges. Rents are moderate, a good five-room house with modern conveniences costing about $18 per month. A letter to the pastor will meet prompt response and any assistance needed will be freely given.

Passing south in almost a direct line and still in the northern district, we come to the Second Church, with W. D. Pittman, pastor, 4542 Berlin Ave. The church stands at the corner of Eleventh and Tyler Streets. It is a large and convenient building, surrounded by a dense resident and local business population. It has a church enrollment of nearly 300, a large Bible-school and every department of church work in a healthy and prosperous condition. Rents here about as at the Fourth Church.

Passing to the southern section, we come first to the Fifth Church, with W. F. Hamann, pastor, 3337 South Seventh St. Here again we have a comfortable house close by the pastor's home. A live, working congregation of about 100 members, a large Bible-school and active Endeavor Societies. The district is largely devoted to manufactures, and rent about the same as in the Second and Fourth districts.

From the Fifth we pass still further south, until we reach the church, at 6801 Virginia Ave., known as the Carondelet Christian Church. It is our youngest mission church, but making rapid growth. It has recently secured a comfortable church home and will in due time be numbered with the substantial churches of the city. Its membership is almost 100 strong at present and is receiving constant accessions. This is almost purely a resident district. Its streets are well paved and shaded, drainage excellent, unusually healthy, rent as low as anywhere in the city and street car connections first-rate.

Bro. Sherman B. Moore is pastor of the Compton Heights Church, located at California and St. Vincent Aves. This church is also in the south half of the city, though much nearer the center than the others named. It has a comfortable house, 300 hundred members, large Bible-school and Endeavor Societies, and has without doubt one of the best fields in the city. It is surrounded by a dense population of well-to-do people, living in fine residences and affords inducements of a superior order to those seeking homes in the city. Rent is somewhat higher here than in the previous sections mentioned. A good five-room flat costing about $20 or $22 per month.

F. O. Fannon is pastor of the First Church and resides at 3130 Franklin Ave. The church is near by, at 3126 Locust St. It has a membership of nearly 800, a fine church edifice and is one of the most attractive places of worship in the city. All about it are fine residence blocks, well filled with people of good business and social standing, and most conveniently located for business convenience. It is the most nearly what is called a "down-town" church we have in the city and is easily reached by a few minutes' car ride by any of our people who may be in the city over Lord's day at the hotels. Rents range to correspond with situation. Comfortable homes for moderate-sized families range from $25 to $35 per month.

Passing west about a dozen blocks we come to the Central Christian Church, situated at 3619 Finney Ave. Bro. Baxter Waters, pastor, resides at 3645 Olive St. The Central is one of the strongest and most influential churches of St. Louis, and its membership ranks among our best in all that constitutes a Christian Church. This, too, is an attractive place to visitors in the city, as well as those seeking residence here. The surroundings of the church are especially attractive. A matter of special importance is the city high school, near by. Rent about the same as near the First.

In the western part of the city and within its limits there are three of our churches located. The resident growth of the city of late years has been in this direction, and church extension has kept pace with this movement. Street car facilities have contributed more than any other thing, perhaps, to make suburban life possible. Mt. Cabanne is the oldest and strongest, at present, of these churches. It has easily reached, nearly if not quite first rank among our city churches. Its pastor is D. R. Dungan, so widely known throughout the brotherhood. The church is at the corner of King's Highway and Morgan Streets, and the pastor's residence is at 5018 Maple Ave. There is probably a larger number of the wealthy families of the city living in Mt. Cabanne than in any other locality of St. Louis; consequently, it abounds in fine residences and churches. The Mt. Cabanne Church is a fine building, ample for all present or immediate needs, and there are ample resources in the membership to build to meet every need of the future. To those who prefer select social surroundings, the situation of this church presents special attractions.

Next in line, and north of Mt. Cabanne, comes the Beulah Church. It stands on the corner of Marcus Ave., and Hammett Pl., in a purely residence district. The pastor, W. A. Moore, receives his mail at the church. This is one of the most vigorous of our young churches. Its membership is about 275, its Bible-school enrollment about the same and the social and spirituelle of the congregation most enjoyable. The neighborhood is pleasant and rents are very reasonable, with excellent car line transit to all parts of the city.

The West End Church, of which O. A. Bartholomew is pastor, is located as its name implies. The attractiveness of its surroundings is equal to any in the city. The district is purely residential. It is situated on the corner of Plymouth and Hamilton Aves. The pastor resides at the church. To many this section is especially desirable as one to reside in. Rents here are very reasonable and the church would receive most cordially to its membership any Christian persons locating in its vicinity.

Going farther west and south, just over the city limit line, we reach the church known as the Ellendale Christian Church. There are at present no regular services, held here. It is a mission point, but will soon become one of our centers of church effort. Beyond Ellendale is the Tuxedo Church. It has for its pastor Bro. D. N. Gillett. It is a few blocks outside the present city limits, but by no means on the outskirts of the resident district of St. Louis people. No fairer location for homes can be found than in the vicinity of Tuxedo Church. Rents are moderate and street car convenience excellent.

It will be seen from the foregoing that our churches are distributed widely over the city, so that with this imformation here given people coming to the city to do business or reside can suit their convenience in locating near some one of them. Thousands have already proven the sad folly of dropping into a great city like this without any consideration beforehand of the conditions that will surround them. Instead of knowing where the friendly and helpful centers of our people are, in which social business and religious influences would all cotribute to their betterment, they have come into the city by thousands and suffered even the loss of their souls, and endured many privations besides, from whtch a wiser plan would have saved them. A letter addressed to any of these pastors, or a call at their homes or churches will not fail to meet a cordial response. Or write to 7310 Michigan Ave., to the residence of the undersigned, city evangelist, and we will be always ready to give you assistance.

Man and Wife.

SEE CHANGES AS THEY CHANGE.

To sweeten sour human nature, one of the best methods is to leave off coffee if it gives you dyspepsia or makes you nervous.

"I asked husband this morning to write out a testimonial for the Postum Cereal Co., and from it I quote: 'I am pleased to be able to state that my wife has been cured of sick headaches and "general cussedness" by leaving off coffee and using your Postum Food Coffee. My home is now a happy one.'

"I am forced to admit his joke contains more than a modicum of truth, for I find now I have complete control of my nerves, while formerly I was often irritable, and husband himself has been entirely cured of insomnia by leaving off coffee and taking up Postum. He sleeps now like a baby, from the time he goes to bed until morning, and perhaps his improvement is partly a reason for his seeing such an improvement in me. At any rate, our old sickness and troubles have disappeared.

"I had tried everything for my sick headaches, but as long as I stuck to the coffee, the headaches stuck to me. It took us a little while to learn that we must follow the directions in making Postum, in order to obtain a really palatable, delicious beverage. People must get over the idea that they can make it in any kind of a slipshod way and have it good. The great element in making good Postum is to allow it plenty of time to boil. That is certainly simple enough, and when the cook becomes accustomed to making Postum, one can depend upon a regular quality every morning.

"I know people who seem to be able to drink coffee with no bad effects; and on the other hand, I know that probably one-half of all my friends are more or less unpleasantly affected with coffee, when they persist in using it, but Postum has obtained a strong hold since its qualities have become known, and a great many of our friends are steady users of Postum in place of the ordinary coffee, and you may be sure every family that has used Postum for even one month will be ready to testify to the improvement in health.

"If you should publish this letter, please suppress my name, as I have a horror of undue notoriety. If any one will take the trouble to write to you for my name and address, I will cheerfully answer any questions that may be asked, and furnish satisfactory evidence to substantiate my statements. Respectfully," Mrs. ————, Hyde Park, London, Can.

Hezekiah Hobson and Christian Science.

Beanville, mo., feb. 6, 1900.

I hav jest got home from a visit to my dawter Mary, who lives over to Smith Center. Mary iz the only dawter Ive got, and sinse she marrid and moved away, Ive bin in the habbit ov goin over, evry 2 or three munths and spendin a few days with her.

When I got off the trane at Smith Center, I wuz expecktin Mary's husbund, Peter, wood be thare to meet me, but he wuzzent thare. I lerned afterwerds that they haddent got my letter sayin I wuz cummin. So I had to walk out to Mary's house, sum 2 miles. It wuz rainin and the rodes wuz muddy, and when I got thare I wuz pritty wet and cold. Az a rezult, the next mornin I wuz jest about laid up with the roomaticks, to wich I am subjeck. Mary wantid to send for the dockter, but I wooddent let her. So she fixt me up in a big chare, clost to the fire, rapped up in a cumfort.

Durin the afternoon Mary had a caller, a woman wich she interdoosed as Missis Henrietta Minerva Tomkins. She wuz a large, fat femail, about fifty yeres old, I shood jedge. When she got her things off, she cum over and shook hands with me:

"Howdy do?" she sez.

"Jest porely, mam," I sez.

"What the matter?" she sez.

"Roomaticks in my jints," I sez.

"You meen," sez she, seveerly, "that you think you are afflicktid with roomatick panes in yore artickulashuns," she sez.

"Which?" I sez.

"You meerly imagin," she sez, "that you hav roomatizzum. Thare iz no sich thing az roomatizzum," she sez.

"O, thare aint?" I sez.

"No," she sez, "thare aint."

"Ime glad to heer it," I sez. "Mebbe," I sez, "you can tell me what it iz that iz causin theze panes," I sez.

"Pore, deloodid man," she sez. "Thare iz no sich thing az pane," she sez. "You meerly think you suffer pane," she sez.

"Ouch!" I sez, for jest then a pertickler violent delooshun shot throo my rite sholder. "If it aint pane," I sez, "what iz it in my sholder that I imagin iz pane?" I sez.

"Nuthin," she sez. "You aint got enny sholder," she sez. "You meerly think you hav. It iz a delooshun ov the mind," she sez.

"What!" I sez.

"Sholder iz matter," she sez, "and thare aint no sich thing az matter," she sez. "Awl iz mind; mind iz awl," she sez. "You think thare iz sich a thing az pane, and you think you hav a sholder," she sez, "and tharefore you imagin you hav a pane in yore sholder," she sez, "when thare iz reely no pane, no sholder, and no pane in the sholder," she sez. "This," she sez, "is Chrischun Syunce," she sez.

"I wood giv it a sumwhat diffrent naim, if it wuz left to me," I sez. "But let me ask you a queschun," I sez.

"Sertinly," she sez, "It iz our holy mishun to enliten the ignerunt and deloodid," she sez.

"Yesterday," I sez, "jest before I left Beanville, a horse run away, smasht the waggun, throwed out the driver agenst a fense and neerly kild him," I sez. "What I want to know——"

"Excuse me," she sez, "but I hav awlreddy proved that thare iz no sich thing az matter," she sez, "and tharefore," she sez, "thare wuz no horse, no waggun, no driver and no fense," she sez.

For a minnit or 2 I jest sot thare and lookt at her. Then, awl ov a sudden, I thot I understood. "The pore thing iz crazey," I sez to myself. "Mary awt to hav told me when I ferst met her. I will hav to yoomer her, so she wont get violent."

"How true it awl iz," I sez aloud. "How bewtiful—'awl iz mind; mind iz awl,'" I sez.

Thus enkerridged, she fixt her peersin gaze on me, and upliftin her forfinger, she begun to talk. I wish I cood remember what she sed, but I cant. After the first ten words, I lost her. I wuz tryin to maik heds or tales ov thoze ten werds and I herd no more. Prezzently she got out of breth, and sed she must be goin. Mary showed her to the dore, and then cum back whare I wuz.

"Pore thing," I sez. "How thankful we shood be that we are in our rite minds," I sez. "Her vizit dun me good," I sez. "Before she cum, I wuz sittin heer thinkin I wuz havin a hard time with the roomaticks, and that I wuz bein afflicktid pritty hevvy," I sez, "but now I am feelin glad and thankful that nuthin werse than roomaticks iz the matter with me," I sez. "I hav not lost my mind," I sez.

"Why father!" sez Mary, "who are you talkin about?"

"Henrietta Minerva Tomkins," I sez. "How sorry I am for the pore thing," I sez. "Is she awlways harmless or duz she sumtimes get violent?" I sez.

Mary bust out a-laffin. "Did you think she wuz crazey?" she sez.

"If she aint, she can give a mighty good immytashun ov it," I sez. "Wunce I wuz at Fultun, and vizitid the Insain Assylum thare," I sez, "and talked with a lot ov the pore unforchunits," I sez, "and I diddent heer enny loonier talk than Henrietta Minerva wuz jest spillin around heer," I sez. "I aint got no sholder—I jest think I hav! Do you meen to tell me that a femail woman who talks that way, in ded ernest, iz in her rite mind?" I sez.

"You dont understand, father," sez Mary. "Missis Tomkins iz a Chrischun Syuntist. I dont know mutch about it," she sez, "but sum ov the folks in town iz quite taken with Chrischun Syunce," she sez. "It iz a new relijun," she sez. "Missis Tomkins haz bin heer sevrel weeks. She giv a leckcher when she ferst cum, and sinse then haz bin callin from house to house, trying to convert peeple," she sez. "She cum heer from Bostun," she said.

Before I left Smith Center, I lerned that Missis Tomkins wuz on a mishunerry toor, and wood probbably vizit Beanville before long. If she duz, I shal attend her leckcher. I am curus to know if she will hav the nerve to say to a hole lot of peeple the noncents she talked to me when she had me awl alone. If she cums, I shall giv an account ov her vizit, and its rezults.

HEZEKIAH HOBSON.

"My Good Poems."*

The mere fact that all along through the poems to which we refer the phenomena of the physical world suggests underlying ethical and religious sentiments shows that science, under right interpretation, may meet the demands of poetry that becomes at the same time didactic.

Another commendation is that all readers with sufficient insight to understand the underlying influences that induce the manifold phases of life and human character, in the complicated moral life of society, can grasp with greater distinctness in these illustrative poems those very ideas only dimly suggested by our observation and environment.

They are, besides, strictly moral in tone, arouse the sympathetic element in our nature in many cases, and teach us how far our love of human kind and sympathy for the down-trodden and the weak and the unsuccessful in the great battle of life, in a world given over to Mammon and egoism in all of its dismal forms, fails to meet the demands of a faithful adherence to ethical and religious doctrines.

One might particularize the poems contained in the volume, but the logical trend of the whole of a work stands above the critical analysis of specific faults or perfections.

Of course, the work from the necessity of the case was compelled to have some first-class humorous poems, as everybody knows who is acquainted with the author.

The laws of nature are inexorable, and just as ever and anon the fires of Vesuvius burst forth into flame, so the ebullitions of the genius for humor will break all bonds, in the sanctuary or out.

Just as a tutored imagination is a necessary endowment of the highest reason, so an exalted sense of humor is the necessary endowment of that order of common sense that brings the weakness and foibles of men to the footlights as puppets in a mock drama, to dance before the public both for its amusement and enlightenment. In fine, the volume is full of appeals to all classes of common sense and uncommon-sense people, and deserve a merited success. C. J. KEMPER.

The Benevolent Association of the Christian Church.

This is the front view of the Christian Orphans' Home of the Christian Church, which is located at St. Louis. It was built in 1894. The hospital and nursery wing, which does not show in this picture, was built in 1896. The building as it now stands cost over $25,000. This is the property of the Benevolent Association of the Christian

ORPHANS' HOME, ST. LOUIS.

Church, which is, and was from the time it was organized in 1886, a national association. It had no capital to begin on except faith and love and the determination on the part of its members to arouse the entire church of the United States to a sense of its duty to the helpless and homeless, especially those of our own church fellowship.

The first of the permanent, visible work of the Association was the opening of this Orphans' Home, under the provision of its charter. This, too, from the beginning was national in its purposes, the very first children admitted being three from Texas, and nearly twenty other states have contributed to its inmates. The children are placed in Christian families as fast as such are found for them, over 200 having been so provided for, and more than 600 have been cared for in the Home. Thinking it best not to keep the infant children in the same building, a Mothers' and Babies' Home was opened in 1899, and there motherless babies are being cared for, and there poor, needy mothers can leave their little ones while they go out to work, or can stay a few days themselves while hunting work.

In December, 1899, growing desperate over the many applications for a home from homeless, aged members of our own church, an Old People's Home was opened in a small house next door to the Orphans' Home. It has been neatly furnished by the kindness of friends, both in and out of the city, and received its first inmate the 15th of January. This also is a national institution, its first admission being from Illinois.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, I want to say that this work, which James says is "pure religion," is dependent upon you for maintenance. It has never had any income except the free will offerings of its friends, of those who would serve the Master by lovingly caring for his helpless ones.

Since the Easter Sunday of 1893 collections have been taken in the Sunday-schools or some branch of the church in congregations all over the states on each successive Easter day, the number increasing as the knowledge of the good work extends.

The growth and magnitude of the work demands more at your hands this year than ever before, if you would have us go on. Many went away from the Jubilee Convention feeling they would no longer neglect their Christian duty to the helpless child and aged Disciple of their own land, and we ask them now to help us raise $5,000 this Easter day, April 15, 1900. An appropriate exercise will be printed as usual in the Orphan's Cry for free use by those who will take a collection for our Association. Easter-egg envelopes will be furnished also, and we ask the little friends of this work to help the children in our Homes and the dear old grandmas we are caring for, by selling the little eggs pictured on the envelopes. Children can do a great work when they are permitted and encouraged to try. Each child can easily raise one dollar or more on each envelope by selling the little pictured eggs on the envelopes at from one to five cents each. Let them try and help their brethren. We ask it in His name.

School of Correspondence.

The question of how to attain an education is a profound one for many a young man and woman Not only so with those who do not reside near an educational institution, but many who reside at the very door of one, and yet by force of circumstances are not permitted to enroll as students. The method of instruction by correspondence, put into practical operation by Mr. T. J. Foster, has proven to be the key to the problem for a vast number of people, old and young. The International Correspondence schools at Scranton, Pa., whose advertisement appears in this paper, up to this time has had 140,000 students, 75,000 of whom are now pursuing its various courses of study, taught at long range by these schools. Primarily, the object in introducing this method was to enable people who are engaged in the industrial trades to supply deficiencies in their education, due to lack of opportunity or application in their younger days. The hope of the projectors has been more than met, for not only have those engaged in industrial pursuits been benefited, but "deficiencies in education" have been supplied for people in many other pursuits in life. A general or technical education is thus brought within reach of boys and girls, men and women. Branches are located in 28 American cities. The one in St. Louis has enrolled 8,000 siudents in a year and a half. Our forefathers and even our fathers were for the most part excusable for not "graduating," but young people of to-day are not, in view of the opportunities which these schools offer.

We have just opened our new church building, and it is pronounced one of the best in town. The people have raised, during the past year, for all work, $1,764; all debts are paid except a mortgage of about $700 on the building. This is mostly a debt transferred from the old building. We held a week's meeting, with a result of five additions. Several lapsed members have returned to their Christian duties, and a deep and earnest feeling prevails in all departments of the work. W. R. SEYTONE, Pastor.

Christian University.

Everything about Christian University seems to be moving on in fine shape. There has been quite an increase in the number of students since Christmas. The students are a fine class and are doing excellent work. If the friends of the institution would use their influence as they might do to increase the number of students, we might have 300 students the next year. Why not make the effort? The faculty is one of the best in the country.

The influences are thoroughly Christian. The atmosphere about the university is pervaded with the Christian spirit. Christian character is the end in view. The professors are devoted Christians and strive to impress that thought on the students. Bro. Errett, the pastor of the church, is the student's friend. He takes a personal interest in each. Is ready at all times to give counsel, encouragement and help. This is the school for the Disciples of Missouri to send their sons and daughters.

The writer is delivering a series of lectures before the university on Sociology. Four have already been delivered as follows: 1. Introductory. 2. The Social Unit. 3. Society as an Organism. 4. Social Pathology. These lectures are well attended, not only by the students, but the citizens. Several other lectures are to follow.

President Lockhart is doing some literary work. A new book will be the result.

C. A. Lockhart is preaching at Clayton, Ill. He is a popular preacher.

A. D. Veatch, a member of the senior class, is the successful pastor at Mt. Sterling, Ill. Bro. Veatch is an excellent student as well as an acceptable preacher.

J. W. Hardy, the chancellor, is now canvassing the city in the interest of the university. He is meeting with encouragement. L. D. GOODWIN.

Bethany College Notes.

The second term of the fifty-ninth session of Bethany College opened January 29. There is a continuous call for catalogues and the prospect for a large number of new students is good.

President Kersey, on a recent Western trip, was the guest of ex-Gov. Drake, at Centerville, Ia., and received from him a very substantial contribution to the Endowment Fund. The President found everywhere a growing interest in the college, and the whole trip was a financial success.

One of our college songs calls Bethany "a quaint little town." That song may need a little revision ere long, for a Fair Association has been incorporated here, and an Electric Railway Company has secured a franchise to build a line from Wellsbury to Bethany. The entire scheme includes a line from Wheeling to Wellsburg by way of Bethany, and the proposal is to have the cars running during this year, perhaps before the sixtieth session opens.

President Kersey lectured in New Cumberland, W. Va., on the evening of Jan. 5. The Independent of that town noticed the lecture as follows: "All present were delighted with the President's lecture. It contained a great deal of fun, which pleased the young people, while there was much solid food for reflection. President Kersey is quite an orator and tells a story in a most entertaining style and holds the attention of his audience from start to finish."

Missionary.

The Whole World for Christ.

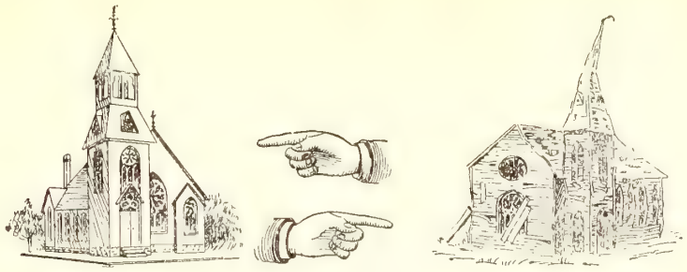
Christianity differs from every other faith in the universality of its purpose. The angel of the Lord said to the shepherds that he brought to them "glad tidings of great joy which should be to all the people." Our Lord said that many should come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and frem the south, and sit down in the kingdom of God. The field is the world. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations. On Patmos John heard great voices in heaven and they said, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." The prophets had foretold this in most glowing strains; they foresaw that the knowledge of the glory of the Lord should cover the earth even as the waters cover the sea. One of them said, "Thou shalt behold a joyful sight and thy heart shall throb and swell because the sea's riches shall be turned to thee, and the people's treasure shall come to thee; and thy gates shall be open continually, day and night shall they not be touched, to bring unto thee the strength of nations and their kings led captive."

Not only is Christianity designed for all, but it is suited to all. Wherever it has been preached it has scored its triumphs. People have heard and believed, and have been redeemed and ennobled by its power. The apostles received the last charge of the risen and ascended Christ. They went everywhere and preached, and great numbers became obedient to the faith. Those who in times past were drunkards, and revilers, and extortioners were washed; they were sanctified and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and in the Spirit of our Lord. The Jewish authorities were displeased with their systematic and ceaseless propaganda and bade them be silent. The apostles said, "Whether it is right in the sight of God to hearken to you rather than to God, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." They enter every open door. Everywhere souls were won and churches were planted.

Since their time the gospel has shown itself to be still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. In modern times, as in ancient times, it has seemed to many inadequate for the work to be accomplished. Thus one public man said to the first missionaries to Madagascar, "It is impossible to make Christians of these people; they are mere brute beasts, and have no more sense than irrational cattle." Madagascar is now the pearl of the mission fields. On that noble island there are 200,000 believers. Robert Morrison entered China in 1807. He gave the gospel to the Chinese in their own tongue. There are now 85,000 communicants in China. India and Burmah have given nearly a million children to the faith of Jesus Christ. In the sixteenth century Japan put 37,000 people to death because they refused to renounce Christianity. On edict boards all through the empire it was said, "So long as the sun shall warm the earth, let no Christian be so bold as to come to Japan, and let all know that if the king of Spain himself or the great God of all should violate this command, he shall pay the forfeit with his head." Japan is now more hospitable to the truth than any other Oriental nation. In 1834 John Williams reported 300,000 people receiving instructions among the islands of Polynesia. Sixty years ago two-thirds of all the children born in Fiji were killed at birth by a public executioner; the aged and the sick were dispatched with clubs; cannibalism was universal. Every form of sin flourished to a degree that simply beggars description. To-day in Fiji there are 90,000 nominal Christians, and thousands more ready to be taught. When Queen Victoria ascended the throne there was not a native Christian on the Friendly Islands; now there 30,000. These contribute $15,000 a year to religious objects. In Sierra Leone 50,000 civilized Africans worship and serve the same God we do. Two thousand miles of sea coast have been wrested from the slave trade; schools and churches have been substituted for the slave pen. Uganda is now a Christian state. Wherever the gospel is preached converts are reported and flourishing churches established.

The chief business of those who believe in Christ is to send the gospel to all kindreds, and tongues, and tribes, and nations. To the church the Lord has said, "I have set thee to be a light to the nations, and thou shouldst be my salvation unto the ends of the earth." The church in this age, like the church in the apostolic age, should be noted for its tireless zeal in carrying the gospel to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death. Some of our own number have given their lives to the service on the field. They are now in the dark lands preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ; they are healing the sick and teaching the ignorant. Others are under appointment and will go out as soon as the funds are in hand to send them. Others are still needed to reinforce ths missions already opened. The first Sunday in March is the day when the churches make their one annual offering for world-wide evangelization. This year the offerings should be on a very liberal scale. They should be worthy of a rich and mighty people with a great plea. The day of small things has lasted long enough. The time has come for gifts such as the church has never witnessed. A million believers are able to do almost anything. The churches, as churches, are asked for only $75,000. This amount should be forthcoming. It will greatly aid the work if more money is raised than the society has requested.

A. M.



MISSIONARY. NON-MISSIONARY.

The Missionary Church.

Missions are the chief business of the church. The authority for this cause rests upon the positive teaching of the Scriptures. The teaching permeates both the Old and the New Testament. Missions do not belong to the order of expediency. Nor do they belong to the order of necessary inference, but to the order of positive and imperative teaching. Missions are as binding upon the saint as baptism upon the sinner. Missions are not a mere phase of Christianity; they are Christianity itself.

The following, therefore, is true:

1. Whatever a church may possess should be used for the evangelization of the world.
2. A church that is not a missionary church is in a very grave sense non-Christian.
3. The spiritual vitality and vigor of the church may be measured by its missionary interest.
4. A church is pure and strong according as it possesses the missionary spirit. As running water cleanses itself, so will the church cleanse itself in running with willing feet to carry the gospel to the destitute.
5. It is now historically true that the missionary church lives and grows, while the non-missionary church decays and dies. The institution which has no power of self-propagation has no resources for self-support.
6. The missionary church is not only pure in life, but united and happy and prosperous in its local or home work.
7. If we think of nothing beyond our local congregation we belittle our Christian work. Nothing so takes us beyond ourselves as an interest in world-wide missions.
8. Foreign Missions teach us the value and importance of a united church at home. This cause will help to fuse together the religious bodies of the world. It is now doing so. It will continue to do so.
9. Interest in Foreign Missions helps to hold the church to the simple scriptural truth of the gospel. What is the use of going to the heathen with an utter godless science? There is nothing that has in it the power of God except the gospel.
10. We are a great people. We number more than a million. We teach that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. If we are not a great missionary people, we are the greatest religious impertinence the world has ever seen. It is our simple duty to raise $200,000 in the approaching March Offering. What is that for a million souls? If we should raise a million dollars we would do no more than our duty.

The March Offering more than anything else of the whole year will mark our real growth in the divine life.

IF you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; Macbeth's don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear pop, clash on the least provocation.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Dean Haggard has preached the series of sermons and given to the people, out of his experience in pastoral and evangelistic work, helpful instruction. An earnest spirit has pervaded the entire series and the loyalty of Bro. Haggard to the plea of the gospel and was most wholesome and delightful. The number of accessions was 42, 13 of whom were by confession. Following the great ingathering of last year a very large number could not be justly expected. All agree that we have had an excellent meeting. One feature was unique, and has proven most enjoyable as well as profitable spiritually, which was afternoon meetings at which Brethren Hickey, Ames, Ragan, Cornell, Painter, J. E. M. Hackleman and I will go to Crown Point and Plymouth and strive to permanently establish the gospel plan of salvation in those two thriving county-seats during April, May and June. The advertisement of the Hartman Manufacturing Company, of Elwood City, Pa., which appears elsewhere in this issue, is an unusually attractive ad. It gives a very correct cut of their famous Steel Rod Picket Fence in combination with ornamental Steel Gate. This is an excellent lawn fence and has the advantage of being unobtrusive, rather adding to than detracting from the natural beauty of the enclosure. It will be found of equal value in enclosing such public grounds as school yards, court squares, cemeteries, parks, etc. It is strong and durable and will twice outlast the ordinary wood picket fence and costs no more. Park and County Commissioners, School Trustees and other public officials as well as private citizens will find it to their interest to look into the quality and merits of this fence. Write these people for catalogue at Elwood City, Pa., or 309 Broadway, New York City.

is the headline of an advertisement appearing in our columns of the old-established seedsmen and florists, PETER HENDERSON & Co., 35 & 37 Cortlandt Street, New York. This announcement is to the effect that this firm no longer supply their seeds to dealers to sell again, so that to procure the famous Henderson seeds the same must be purchased from them direct.

Their advertisement also offers their annual superb Catalogue, entitled "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN," which is in reality a book of 190 pages, containing over seven hundred engravings and six superb colored plates. This Catalogue is sent to all who send ten cents in stamps to cover the cost of postage and mailing. In addition to the Catalogue, this firm, wishing to trace the result of their advertising in different papers, will send to all who state where they saw the advertisement a trial collection of six packets of choice vegetable and flower seeds, contained in a red envelope, which when empty and returned with an order from Catalogue will be accepted as twenty-five cents in part payment. We advise our readers to avail themselves of this unusually liberal offer.

"What Then?"

[Translated from the French by Rev. S. Gobiet.]

Not my name, but my words well spoken;
Not me, but my deeds for Christ's sake done,
Will outlast my life's wheel when broken,
And be stars at my setting sun.
What then?
After the joys of earth,
After its songs of mirth,
After its hours of light,
After its dreams so bright,
What then?
Only an empty name,
A wearied frame,
An aching heart,
Pierced with a dart.

After that empty name,
After that weary frame,
After that aching heart,
Pierced with a dart;
What then?
Only a last farewell
To a world loved too well,
A draped bed,
And then, "He's dead."

After that sad farewell
To a world loved too well,
The draped bed,
The news, "He's dead,"
What then?
The judgment day,
The great array,
The deeds measured,
The words treasured,
The open books,
The confused looks
Of guilty men,
And then, oh, then
The parting throng
'Twixt right and wrong,
For woe or bliss,
Heaven or abyss!

The Lost Emigrants.

BY R. H. JOHNSON.

CHAPTER XIV.

The golden days of autumn were upon us, and the colonists had reason to contemplate the situation and prospects with cheerfulness. The crops were abundant. The animals, notwithstanding the disappearance of many a sleek pig and kid, were doing well. The turkeys and chickens that had crossed the seas were the proud possessors of a numerous progeny.

Yet, there was one source of disquiet to those who looked after this particular industry—the mysterious disappearance of some of the most tempting fowls. Was it the wild beasts? Was it the malcontents at the Nest, as we sometimes called the place where the Birds made their home? This seemed improbable. The poultry houses were securely locked each night. Our ingenuity was insufficient to account for it. One night, however, light was thrown upon the mystery by the following:

Dr. Andral happened to be called at a late hour to visit a patient near the poultry, in the upper end of the village.

As he was passing he heard a great fluttering, then the sound of footsteps and a crash of sticks and stones; and then there uiet. Listening, he thought he heard a suppressed groan down the woody ravine which starts near the poultry houses and makes a steep descent to the bay.

As hastily as was consistent with due caution, he went down the rocky incline into the dense darkness of the woody gulch, and striking a match, came upon a dimly outlined writhing form. "Hello!" said the Doctor; "who or what are you?"

"Well, it was meself afore the loife was knocked out iv me; now I suspicion it's the corpse iv Pat O'Callaghan!"

"Well, Pat, why under the sun are you lying there?"

"An' it's not under the sun that I am, for it's dar-rk. An' it's lyin' that I am, because I'm not a stahndin'."

"What's the matter with you, Pat?"

"Mahter enough. I'm aff me pegs."

"How is that?"

"Bad scran to yez, can't you understand? They're broke to smithareens."

"How many legs are broken?"

"Well, Docthor, an' if it was two more and another it would be four that's broke. Now it's ivery peg that's cracked but wan."

The Doctor struck another match and found more than he was looking for—a bunch of turkey feathers in Pat's hand and a broken leg. "Now Pat," said he, "this is a serious business. You have a broken leg, and you've been stealing a turkey. Make a clean breast of it."

"Well, Docthor, the broken leg's thrue; the turkey stalin's not. I'll spake the truth. I wish I may live wan hundred year if I don't. I was out for me health, an' I got be the powltry house aefore I thocht, an' that big gobbler 'e looked at me as impydent as a copper with a new billy; an' 'e seemd to say, says 'e: 'You touch me, Pat, if you dare!' And was I the cowardly spalpeen to take his blather? So I grabbed the crathur', an' he a pullin' me aff down to the bay, an' a sqirmin' out iv me hands.'

"An' I says: 'not so fast me beauty,' an' I clutched his tail, an' the baste a flutterin', an' 'e made me a prisint iv his tail feathers, an' was aff quicker than thinkin', an' I afther 'im, till I dropped into this murtherin' drain an' perished intoirely."

"But, Pat, the poultry house was locked. How did you get in?"

"Well, Docthor, if wan of the b'ys was filin' a bit of iron to make a boathook, an' it happened to turn out a doorkay, who's to blame?"

"That will do, Pat. We must now attend to your broken leg at once."

The Doctor procured help and bore the crippled Pat to his own room and cared for him, and was a good Samaritan to him for many a day during the healing of the limb.

One day, after Pat began to hobble with a crutch, he seemed unusually moody, and the Doctor asked him what was the matter.

"Mather enough sor," said Pat. "Here you are a killin' iv me with koindness, and I one of that blackguard set at the cove, a robbin' an' a st'alin' from ivery mother's son iv ye!

"O, Docthor, if I iver live to my dyin' day, which I'm a thinkin' is onsartin', along with docthorin' a broken leg, I'll be a different sort of a mon from some iv me bethers!"

As the result of the careful nursing of Pat, he was soon able to hobble about.

He was overflowing with declarations of gratitude, and the Doctor confidently believed him to be a changed man.

However, on returning home one evening, he found that Pat had disappeared. When we next heard of him he was with the set at the Nest and was said to be louder in his abuse of the Doctor and the upper village people than ever. Pat, in our estimation, had added to his other sins that basest of all, ingratitude.

By the time of Pat's departure, the busy days of preparation for winter were upon us. The garden and field products were gathered in wagons, several of which we had rescued from the ship. These, loaded, we drew by hand to the storehouses.

There was little care given to winter food for the animals. The winters were light, and the pigs and goats would subsist on the food supplied by nature, as they had done before the arrival of the colonists. Where better feeding was required for the production of milk and eggs and meat, the food could be supplied from ample harvests.

Having a good supply of corn we were anxious for a taste of bread, to which we had for some months been strangers. Accordingly, a requisition was made on the ingenuity of our mechanic, Smithson.

He had already discovered good burr stone, and by the help of others soon had a corn mill attached to the previously built lumber mill.

The next year we would sow wheat and flax, having saved seed of both, but which we had declined to sow the first season because it was so far advanced at our landing.

We were curious to know what the Birds were going to do for winter's shelter. The primitive huts and tents which we were forced to throw together on escaping from the wreck were certainly a poor protection from the storms of winter, and they were not making the slightest effort to supply anything better. Surely, they must reap the penalty of their indolence.

Fergus, Burton and others had kindly and repeatedly warned them of the inevitable suffering that must come as the result of indolence, but in vain. Of late they had been unusually quiet and law-abiding. We were encouraged, but some augured evil. They said it was the calm before the storm. We were, however, not long left in suspense.

One day, though the guards of the storehouse had not relaxed due diligence, we discovered that a large quantity of canned foods and other valuables had been carried off, without the slightest trace of the robbers. In the morning a public counsel was called, and it was determined to resort to summary measures for the intimidation of evil doers.

A considerable majority carried the measure to imprison the ringleaders. At once a strong party hastened to the Flat; but the surprise of all the Birds had left the Nest. Tents, movable articles in general, and all the boats were gone.

Many were the conjectures. Could they have gotten away from the island?

That in open boats at the beginning of winter would be suicidal. Many other views were suggested as more reasonable, but when several weeks had elapsed and not a trace of the malcontents had been found, the view that they had destroyed their shelters at the Flat and gone out to sea prevailed.

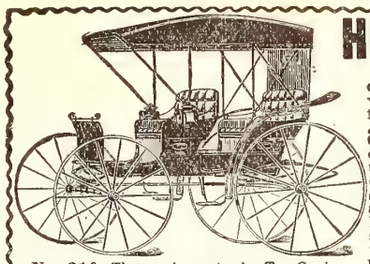
Chapter XV.

At our next meeting for conference, which was soon after the flight of the Birds, some one proposed that we devote the hour to thanksgiving to God for relief from the evil doers, who had so long been a menace to the peace and even the lives of the colonists. This was generally opposed on the grounds that it was very doubtful about the relief, especially if they were yet on the island. If, on the other hand, they had gone out to sea, they were in all likelihood drowned; and a thanksgiving over their dead bodies would be very inappropriate.

The discussion was ended by a proposition from Mr. Gray that we devote a season to prayer for their safety, and that they might learn the way of righteousness and peace. To this all gave a cordial assent.

The season of prayer over, Mr. Gray said, "As a sincere seeker for the truth, I desire further light on baptism. I have been taught to discard outward ordinances, and to hold that the baptism commanded by the Savior was that of the Holy Ghost. Yet, I confess that with many of my brethren I have had some misgivings on the subject.

"But my conscience has been more or less at ease on the matter, because of the view largely held in the religious world that baptism is a nonessential. I have, however, been reading my Bible, and my Savior says, 'Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you.' If that is true, there can be no nonessentials. Certainly not baptism, commanded by him in so solemn and impressive a manner. Even if it were a little thing, the best test of loyalty is fidelity in little things; and if I know my own heart, I want to be implicitly loyal to Christ.



HOW MUCH CAN I SAVE?

This is a question that every man should ask himself when it comes to a business proposition. For instance, we manufacture vehicles and harness and sell them to you direct from our factory at wholesale prices. On this plan the saving to you is about 35 per cent; that is, you would have to pay local dealer or agent about that much more than you pay us for the same quality of goods. Is not this item worth saving? We make 178 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness and are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. We make every article we sell and ship our goods anywhere for examination and guarantee safe arrival. You have the advantage of large selection, newest designs, latest styles, &c. Above all you have a guarantee of quality at a reasonable price. 144-page illustrated catalogue FREE.

"I know that my adopted daughter, Dora, has been giving much study to the matter, and with her youthful quickness of apprehension and diligence and prayerfulness, I hope that she can give us some light."

Thus invited, I said: "There are others here who have doubtless given the matter profounder study than I. I am always glad to sit at the feet of Father Gray and learn of him, for I am sure he has long sat at the feet of the great Teacher; but as I am asked to help, though it be ever so little, I deferentially say: 'Such as I have give I thee.'

"That the element used in John's baptism was water is conceded by all. But he spake of Jesus, saying: 'He shall baptize with the Holy Ghost.' This promise of John is repeated on several occasions; always with the antithesis: 'I baptize with water, but he shall baptize with the Holy Ghost.'

"Who was to baptize with the Holy Ghost? Jesus. Is it ever asserted of any other? Never. Did he ever delegate this power to a human being? Never. Nowhere did he ever command a human being to baptize another with the Holy Ghost. Do men ever claim to baptize others with the Holy Ghost? It would be blasphemy. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is, therefore, I assert, the prerogative of Jesus, and of him alone.

But Jesus commanded men to go into all the world and baptize. It is, therefore, impossible that this should be the baptism of the Holy Ghost. What, then, was the element? Surely, if any one is competent to settle this question it is the Apostle Peter. Turn to Acts 10:44: 'While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word.' This, in the next chapter, is said to be baptism of the Holy Ghost. Was this baptism enough? Mr. Gray and many others have long assumed that it was. But Jesus commanded his disciples to baptize throughout the world wherever they preached. There was a baptism which they must administer.

"Peter has as yet baptized no one of those present; will he be disobedient to his Lord? Let us read the two closing verses of this the 10th charter: 'Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.'

"This one example, showing the inspired apostle's understanding of Christ's command to baptize as given in the great commission, and his fidelity to it, ought to satisfy the most captious forever.

"I will not take your time in bringing up the array of proof on this subject that I might. It seems needless to cite another instance to a believer of the Bible. Yet, to silence even the most obstinate I refer to one more case:

"You remember that we are informed in Acts, eighth chapter, that the Spirit commanded Philip to go down the road leading to Gaza.

"Obedient to this command he went, and fell in with the eunuch, treasurer of Queen Candace. Riding with him in his chariot, he preached to him the gospel of Jesus. As they went on, they came to a certain water. The eunuch said, 'See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?' Philip answered: 'My dear sir, you don't understand this matter at all. Water baptism is not required:' did he? By no means! He said, 'If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest.' 'And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.'

"This is the seal that the Spirit of God, under whose immediate supervision Philip was, set on water baptism. 'Ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.'"

When I concluded, Prof. Fergus said, "I think every one must be convinced that Miss Winston has the Bible with her on this subject, and that it will not be necessary to discuss it further."

The Home.

We have long desired to write or speak on this subject, but the manifest impossibility of so expressing ourself as to correctly interpret the feeling of our heart or to satisfy existing conditions has heretofore restrained us; even now, though we essay the task, we distinctly feel that we shall utterly fail to magnify the home as its importance demands. In fact, we doubt if, in the present condition of society, it is possible to impress the average mind with the awful responsibility resting on the home and those who create and conserve it in its relation to the world.

The social fabric can have no other foundation than the home, for it is a constituent element, an individual part of that fabric, and as are its elements so will be the social organism, the completed structure. All the virtues or vices, all the weakness or strength of the one will appear in the other. The one is the creator of the other. And if a people be so unhappy as to have no home, then will society be composed of illegitimates, morally and socially, if not physically and legally.

By so much as the American people have departed from the typical home, the home builded and controlled by the Puritan or the Huguenot, we have descended in the scale, and the result appears in every movement of society. They were not perfect, no more than ours are imperfect, that is, entirely so; but in the average of regime they were so much superior to the present type that the race of sons and daughters they gave to the world were a better, hardier, nobler stock.

The evil, which is steadily growing, and the consequent danger and loss, is already apparent in urban localities, and will surely more and more extend its corrupting, ruinous influence to the country, making each dwelling more and more a place in which to eat and sleep, to be born and die, but not to live in. Too often, alas! far too often, the best and purest type of wife is but a housekeeper, a social drudge, a convenience, and children an unpleasant accident, to be avoided when possible as an appendage to the establishment, and when they persist in coming in, to be delivered over to the tender mercies of employe and teacher who may or may not develop them into passable men and women.

The club, the social function, the theater, the lodge, yes, the church, have so persistently and successfully assailed the home that it has lost immeasurably within the memory of this generation. The imperious demands of business are more and more exacting, and when to this is added the other and stronger influences which prejudice the claims of home, it is easy to see what must be the inevitable result. It must suffer, and greatly suffer.

We have no possible quarrel with society, nor with any of its departures, at least not in this discussion. The theater, the club, the lodge, the church, certainly each may have its place, but we hesitate not to say that in a peculiar sense the home has claims more sacred than any other, and occupies a relation higher and holier than even the church itself, using the term to indicate merely the individual congregation. And when circumstances so suggest we must neglect all, even the house of God, or else we shall signally fail to do our whole duty. We doubt not that many truly good men and women have seen clearly in the garnered wisdom of old age that while perfectly conscientious, they have yet sinned against God and their own flesh and blood in their obedience to the beckonings of society, or the suggestions of church or state. Happy is the man who, while far from repudiating society, in any innocent or proper manifestation, who, while devoted to his lodge, and a cheerful son and servant of the church, yet finds something in the home nearer, dearer, sweeter and purer than anywhere else. Happy the woman who, while far removed from weakness or mere sentiment, yet knows her lord to be a king and her children princes of a kingdom, to whom home is happiness and heaven. And thrice happy the child of many prayers, who, reared under influences such as these may go out into life to glorify God and honor his parents in a splendid manhood that must win the plaudits of both worlds.

If the time shall ever come when the movement of this age shall attain its logical sequence; when man shall make his abode in the club room, the hotel or the flat; when marriage has become the exception, and every wife, instead of crying, "Give me children or I die," like Hannah of old, shall rather long for the barren womb, and secure it, that she may devote her selfish life to mere ease or pleasure-seeking, then will we in sorrow write our Ichabod, for the glory of church and nation will have departed forever, and darkness, swift descending, will rest like a funeral pall upon a world which sin has blighted in the very core of its being and polluted in the altar-place of its devotion.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Don't Smoke Cigarettes, Boys.

MARY E. WARE.

There is nothing, nothing that a young boy can do that will injure him as much as smoking cigarettes. It injures the body, the intellect, the will and the character.

Cigarettes are made of the stubs of cast-away cigars and bits of tobacco not fit to be manufactured into anything else. Before this filthy mixture is rolled it is sprinkled with opium, for the narcotic effect. This poison injures the body by impairing the stomach, the liver, the blood vessels and the nerves. It takes right hold of the blood and destroys the life-giving qualities and leaves behind the deadly microbes which produce a cancer or consumption.

We can see the effect on the nerves first. Notice the habitual cigarette smoker try to hold a pen or a pencil. His hand will shake and quiver so that it is almost impossible for him to sign his name.

The effect of the cigarette on the intellect is even worse than on the body. The opium and tobacco working together make it sluggish, indifferent and uncertain. The intellect won't act as it should, it won't remember, it won't judge, it won't reason. The victim of cigarette smoking can not be trusted in the simplest business affairs. He will wonder why he forgot such an important thing, or why he had not sense enough to see that affairs would turn out in a certain way. Aye, cigarettes have been doing their unfailing work on that boy's mind.

They seem to paralyze his will. Not only do they render him too weak to do his duty, but he does not even want to try to do it. He becomes as purposelsss as a leaf upon a stream, drifting slowly but surely to destruction.

What a sad effect cigarette smoking has on a boy's character. The downfall is gradual, but is as certain as death. First, he will begin to answer his mother impatiently when she asks him to do anything, and be angry when she reproves him. Next, he will begin to tell stories about not doing his duty. Then he will begin to do dishonest things to get the money to buy cigarettes. Last of all he will become so indifferent that he will neither care for mother, home, nor honor. Such a boy is more to be pitied than one feeble minded.

A national league against cigarette smoking has been formed and in many places it is prohibited by law. All of this work is in the right direction, but the only thing that will put an end to cigarette smoking is public opinion. Make it an unpopular thing to smoke cigarettes and the boys will stop doing it. No boy can withstand a constant, open, adverse criticism of manly boys, noble girls, patient teachers and unselfish parents. Don't smoke cigarettes, boys.

The Red Box Clew—XVII.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The carriage containing Mr. Clarmont, Clara and Frank was driven rapidly from the Clarmont residence. Mr. Clarmont drove and Frank sat beside him to show the way. Clara was crying because, like many another unpleasant person, she loved her brother and sister, though usually one would have to guess hard to find it out. Frank was too excited to think of anything except the slowness of their progress; for though the horses were dashing along at a furious rate it seemed slow to the child. But Mr. Clarmont, usually so cold, reserved and emotionless, was more moved than the other two. "It is a punishment sent upon me!" he exclaimed in an agonized voice, as he whipped the horses. "My child will be taken from me! just as I took Kate's from her. God forgive me! I couldn't see that it was wrong then; I would not see. Now, I am punished. Ronald will die."

"The old woman said it was just his leg," said Frank, thrilled with pity by the ringing voice.

"Pa," said the astonished Clara, "what do you mean? What are you saying? Who was Kate, and how did you take her child from her."

"Kate is my sister!" cried the frenzied father. Why should I keep the secret longer? She is my sister and she is—" He was about to add that she was Mrs. Dew, the housekeeper; but even at this moment he could not forget the pride that had made his life so dreary. He urged on the horses. "Your sister!" Clara exclaimed. "Why, Pa, I never knew you had a sister."

"I have, God forgive me, as good a sister as ever lived; but she is poor, she works hard for a living, she doesn't belong to your mother's class of society—and I have been ashamed of her, I, who was not too good to rob her of her only comfort—yet even I was ashamed of her."

"But, Pa, how did you rob her? What do you mean?" Clara demanded, amazed.

"It was this that made me what I have been," he burst forth vehemently. "This secret has made me shrink from the world—from my own family. I have felt unworthy. Too proud to acknowledge my fault, to claim my sister who has no fault but her poverty—yet I had a little conscience, too, that tells me I was a villain. Thank God, yonder is the Covered Bridge!" He drew in the reins with strong hands, and the carriage was brought to a stop near the bank of the Blue Fork. The driver leaped out, still holding the reins. Frank looked about with a white face. The horses were breathing audibly. The sweat shone upon them in the morning light. Mr. Clarmont turned to Frank impatiently: "Where did you leave him?"

"There," said Frank, pointing. "But—but they are gone!"

"Show me the spot!" he cried, seizing her arm and almost dragging her over the wheel. "Clara, hold the reins!"

"They are gone!" Frank faltered. "See, it was here on the roadside. Here is where he pressed down the weeds when he fell. Here is blood—Ronald's blood!"

"But how can he be gone?" Mr. Clarmont stammered, his mind bewildered. "He couldn't have crept home." He lifted his voice and shouted, "Ronald! Ronald!" There was no reply.

"See, here is his hat," said Clara, who had left the horses. The hat lay at the entrance to the Covered Bridge, some distance from the place where Ronald had fallen. And here is something pinned to it—a piece of paper." She began to tremble violently. "Oh, father, what can this mean?"

"I feel like I am losing my mind!" her father said in a dull voice. "Read it aloud, Clara."

This is what Clara read aloud: "Taint no use looking for the gal i got er an i meen to keap er saif but yool be pleezed to kno that her what U calls Frank Dugglice iz nun uther than Emily Doo." "Well!" exclaimed Clara. "What in the wide world does all this mean?"

"I believe I know, I believe I know!" cried Frank, greatly excited. "You see I was to come here alone this morning and that dreadful Nance had this note all ready to leave, after she had stolen me away; well, she got Ronald instead, and she just left the note because she didn't have time to write another one."

"That's it!" cried Mr. Clarmont. "She has carried my boy away. She must be caught immediately. Clara, run to Sheriff Ballman's and tell him—you know the place; tell him to send out a posse. Frank, hurry home and tell the news, and have others take up the search. Describe as well as you can how this monster looked." So Frank described Nance vividly, and then hurried back. Mr. Clarmont sprang in the carriage and drove recklessly through the Covered Bridge and straight ahead. It was not long before he began to meet people, and he inquired of them if they had seen anybody answering Frank's description of Nance. Nobody had seen her.

If Frank had not been so alarmed over the mysterious disappearance of Ronald, she would have had the courage to face Mrs. Clarmont with this new information. That lady was obliged to believe at last. She blamed Frank for all the trouble, and heaped reproaches upon her. At the same time she was active in setting on foot a search party for her wounded boy. Vega was now awake and made the hall resound by beating upon her door, for she was outraged that any one had dared to lock her up. Mrs. Clarmont, who was preparing to leave the house on horseback, hoping to discover some clew to the mystery, called to her the housekeeper. "You take that wicked girl" (meaning Frank, of course) "and lock her up in the attic, and keep her locked up there till train time. See that the wagon comes for her trunk. Get her a ticket back to St. Louis. Don't let her miss her train! Give her her wages for the time she's been here. Try to get her away without my seeing her mischievous face again, or hearing her voice—it sets every one of my nerves to fighting. Don't let Vega see her, or speak to her. And never mention her name to me again as long as you live! And if the wicked child won't go to the attic peaceably, call policemen; call the marshal; call the whole town!" With these words the lady left the house.
